Mr. President, the Democratic Party has always claimed to be the party of economy in the administration of public affairs. It has insisted that to take one penny from the people under the guise of taxation that was not imperatively required for the public welfare, for the purpose of the Government when it was economically administered, was not only a legal but a moral wrong and a violation of the fundamental law of the land. It has charged the Republican Party with gross extravagances and with the use of public funds for purposes other than governmental. I think, in the main, it was entitled to carry the banner representing the party of economy and of honesty in the administration of public affairs. It can not afford to lower that banner or to have it seized by some other party. By its devotion to economy and good government it has earned the right to uphold that banner.

A Democratic President said that "public office is a public trust." In looking at the estimates coming from public officials, in learning of the demands that are made for appropriations from the Government, in examining the schemes and plans and programs submitted calling for Federal support, and in becoming acquainted with the record of some of the executive departments of the Government, I am led to believe that some public officials have forgotten the significance and the importance of the words just quoted; forgotten they are holding "a public trust" and should be limited by constitutional provisions.

I again ask, Where are we to obtain immense sums required to meet the appropriations for this fiscal year and for the next and for the years immediately following? The Senator having this bill in charge stated yesterday, when I propounded a similar question, "Oh, we will leave to the Committee on Ways and Means the task of providing the funds we appropriate."

It is an easy task to appropriate money, but I submit that we should not vote for an appropriation bill unless we have some clear conception of the source from which the money is to come to meet the appropriation. And even then the appropriation should not be made unless it is absolutely necessary; that it is for a public purpose; that it is within the letter and the spirit of the fundamental law of the Republic; and unless the money required can be obtained without destroying business or undermining the confidence of the people in the Government. The funds of the Treasury should be regarded as a sacred trust. They should be more zealously guarded by every public official than would his own treasures be protected. And in making appropriations the psychology of acting en masse where the responsibility rests en masse should be ignored and destroyed, and the awakened conscience of each public official should direct and guide his vote and conduct to the same extent as if he were acting alone and the entire responsibility for the protection of the fund were with him.

It has been charged that there is too much reciprocity in legislation, particularly legislation relating to appropriations, and in support of this claim so often made by writers and speakers, rivers and harbor bills and those providing for public buildings are referred to.

Mr. President, no one knows exactly the appropriations which we will be called upon to make between now and the 4th of March when this Congress adjourns, but they are so enormous as to stagger those who attempt to comprehend them. The human mind can not grasp what these billions mean; and the demands are daily increasing, and the amounts agreed upon to be appropriated constantly augmented.

The bill under consideration was increased by the Senate committee more than $44,000,000 after it left the House. It carries $400,000,000 by way of appropriations. Many nations of the world, some of them regarded as great nations with large populations, vast business interests, do not have an annual revenue of that amount.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator says that this bill has been increased $44,000,000. He surely does not overlook the proposed good roads increase of $200,000,000.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator for inviting my attention to that. I intended to advert to that in a moment, but this is a very appropriate place to add that to the already swelling demand that this bill makes upon the Public Treasury. The bill calls for $600,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator says that there are many European countries whose entire appropriations do not amount to the sum mentioned in this bill. That is true; and there are many European countries that are not like America in any other respect. I am glad that America is different and greater and better than those countries.

Mr. KING. Oh, Mr. President, we get nowhere in such statements as that. I know the disposition of many Americans to be rather boastful and to claim a great superiority over all other peoples of the world. It is a habit with some of us, probably a sort of Fourth of July exotic manifestation, that clings to us from the time we leave high school until we go to the grave. We become a little vain because we are so great a Nation and have so glorious a history that we are tempted to become pharisaical, and thank God because we are bigger and better and grander than any other people in the world.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it is not only a Fourth of July matter, but it is a Chateau-

Thierry matter, an Argonne matter, a successful termination of the present war matter.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the record of the American soldiers and marines at the places mentioned by the Senator, as well as wherever they have fought in this great struggle, is one which thrills all true Americans and will be an enduring page in the history of our country. But, Mr. President, though we are justified in speaking with pride of the achievements of our great Nation and our gallant sons on land and sea, we can not afford to be ungenerous to the brave and heroic peoples with whom we have been associated. France, with a population of but about 44,000,000 of people, lost more than 1,000,000 men upon the battle fields. Great Britain's losses from death alone exceeded 1,000,000 men. Senators will recall the frightful casualties which Italy sustained; Belgium's losses in proportion to the men engaged in arms were enormous; and Russia, the land of tragedy and sorrows, lost millions in killed and wounded. A short time prior to the termination of the war Great Britain was losing from forty to fifty thousand men each month.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yet they could not win the war without us.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I submit in all courtesy and gentleness that my friend is indulging in another Americanism.

Mr. McKELLAR. Maybe so; I am delighted to have that kind.

Mr. KING. I do not desire to indulge in any comparisons as to the value of the services rendered in this great war by the United States and her allies. Many persons will agree with the Senator that if the United States had not entered the war the central powers would have triumphed. That position is stoutly denied by many others who have given close attention to the military problems and to the strategy of the war. Some say that we could not have won the war if it had not been for England's ships. Others state that the war would have been lost to the central powers if it had not been for the heroic and invincible courage of the Belgians when the Prussian hordes invaded her consecrated soil in August, 1914. Still others contend that the intrepid and the glorious conduct of the French during all the dark hours from the invasion of her territory until Gen. Foch signed the armistice was the most important factor in accomplishing the defeat of the central powers. There are those who say that the sacrifices, deep and terrible sacrifices—sacrifices not yet fully known to the world—made by the poor Russian peasant was one of the controlling factors in determining the conflict. There are many who speak of bleeding and sorrowing Italy. We have not yet learned all that she did to aid in winning the war. The Italians suffered from privations that we can not comprehend, and in the face of obstacles that seem humanly impossible to surmount they built up a great army and valorously contended against tremendous odds upon many bloody battle fields. Nor can Serbia be forgotten when we attempt to assess the various elements and factors entering into the triumphant conclusion of the war. Her people have passed through a Gethsemane.

No page of history will show greater heroism and more uncomplaining sacrifices than that devoted to Serbia's contribution to this world conflict; and Great Britain and her dominions gave so much to this contest that future ages can not detract from their glory. All Americans are proud to bear tribute to the valor, courage, and devotion of the nations with which our Nation was associated in this great struggle for freedom and civilization. A distinguished Senator said upon the floor this morning that we won the war and that England and France were now engaged in a game of "grab" regarding the colonies formerly possessed by Germany. That is not exactly his language, but it represents the idea which he expressed.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the little island of England the premier of Great Britain has indicated more than once that Great Britain does not seek one rood of territory as the result of this great contest. He intimated, however, that at least some of her dominions—Canada and Australia and New Zealand—might make claim with respect to territory that had been taken from Germany. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. I assume the Senator wishes to state the figures accurately and does not wish to depreciate the contention he is making. As a matter of fact, Great Britain was having about twice the number of casualties which the Senator referred to in the statement he just made.

Mr. KING. The Senator is correct. I had in mind when I spoke an earlier period in the war. As I now remember Great Britain's casualties for a considerable period prior to the signing of the armistice were so heavy that if continued for a year at the same rate they would have amounted to perhaps a million and a half.

Mr. SMOOT. They were over 36,000 a week at the time the war closed.

Mr. KING. I have been diverted from the bill which I was discussing, but in view of what was said by the Senator from Tennessee and the other Senator to whom I just referred I desire to refer for a moment to the attitude of France and England as I understand their position concerning the German colonies. England, as I understand the facts, has disclaimed any desire to take over any of the German colonies. Indeed, she requested that the United States accept the trusteeship for some of Germany's lost colonies. However, Australia and Great Britain's South African dominions desired that some of these colonies should pass to them. I am sure that France has indicated no desire to "grab" territory. She doubtless feels entitled to some territory in South Africa formerly held by Germany. I might say in passing that I do not think the United States could be accused of grabbing territory because at the conclusion of its contest with Spain the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico were acquired by it.

It must not be forgotten that France has suffered far more than many comprehend as a result of the war. She is now so weakened in man power that she will have difficulty in building up her industries and carrying on the ordinary pursuits which engaged her people. France is a small country, and possesses limited resources. She is burdened with a debt of more than $30,000,000,000. Her lands have been devastated, cities and towns have been destroyed; rich manufacturing centers have been plundered and most of her people have been left homeless. While at peace, and desiring peace, she was struck by a powerful enemy, and for four years held back the invading forces, not knowing with each passing day what the night or the coming morn would witness. We were 3,000 miles away from that carnage and devastation. When Germany made war upon us our Nation was finally compelled to enter the conflict. We sent our gallant soldiers to do their duty with the English and the French, the Belgians and the Italians, and the brave nations allied with us in humanity's cause; and the American soldier and sailor upheld the traditions of the past and brought unfading glory to themselves and honor to our Nation. Of course, Mr. President, no one will gainsay the greatness of this Republic. While I have just said in a kindly critical way that sometimes we are given a little to vanity in speaking of our Nation, still I rejoice in the fact that this Government is the greatest and the freest that the world has ever seen. From a little fringe upon the Atlantic coast this Republic has developed until it is the colossus of the world. She has become great because of the sturdy manhood, and virtue and courage of the men and the women of our land.

The foundations of a free Republic were deeply laid in the soil of this New World, and upon that foundation has been erected an enduring Government, under which the American people have enjoyed liberty and become great in material wealth and rich in spiritual achievements, great ideals, and noble aspirations. And so to-day we rejoice with the nations with whom we have participated in the struggle against the gross materialism and the military autocracy of the central empires in the victory which crowned the joint efforts of all. We are proud to have been associated with the peoples of all these nations. We pay our tribute of praise and homage for their valor and courage and the steadfast devotion which animated them during all the dark hours through which they passed. We would not detract one iota from the honor and glory to which each and all of our allies are entitled, and in all the ages yet to come this Republic will be acclaimed for its contribution to the success of the cause of liberty and justice. A peaceful, democratic Nation within a few months became transformed into a powerful fighting Nation. Its people were stirred to the depths by a patriotic fervor that led them to gladly and cheerfully make every sacrifice which was involved. Within a few months more than 2,000,000 men crossed the sea, and hundreds of thousands of American soldiers, as brave as the world has ever seen, stood in battle array against the formidable military forces of the enemy. Along the entire battle front, from the British Channel to Switzerland, Americans fought and died. Their blood mingles with the blood of England, and France, and Belgium, and Italy, and other allied nations, and by these sacrifices and upon the graves of these undying heroes will be erected a temple of amity and friendship, peace and fraternity, within which the peoples from all lands may reverently enter and from which they all emerge purified from selfishness and consecrated anew to the cause of liberty and justice throughout the world.

Mr. President, I was discussing, when diverted by the questions of Senators, the question of appropriations, and inquiring where the vast sum was coming from to meet the heavy exactions that are being made upon the Government. I called attention to the precarious situation of business, the heavy taxes imposed by the Federal Government, the States, and the municipalities. There is a limit to the power of the Government to meet obligations. The Government has only two sources from which to obtain money to meet its expenditures. It may tax or it may borrow. It may not be inappropriate at this time to call attention to the attitude of so many people in our country today. From the petitions forwarded to Congress and the demands made, it is apparent that the belief exists upon the part of some that appropriations by the Federal Government in behalf of and to aid States or limited or sectional areas will not be a burden upon the people of such State or district. They seem to forget that ultimately every dollar taken from the Treasury of the United States must come from the people, not from the people of one State alone but from all classes in all sections of the country. If money is appropriated for roads, it must be taken by taxation from the people of all the States and placed in the Treasury of the United States. It is no advantage to the people in the long run to receive appropriations for roads or bridges or purely local and domestic affairs, because they will be called upon to pay for the same. It is an unwise policy to appropriate money for purely domestic and local matters, matters that the States under our form of government should control. Of course, the policy is vicious and in contravention of our form of government. Moreover, it involves the creation of additional Federal machinery; more bureaus and agencies are created, more Federal employees result, and additional expenses for administration are incurred.

It seems so foolish to take money from the people and transfer it to the Federal Treasury and then by means of appropriation bills filter it back through a thousand bureaus, agencies, instrumentalities, and employees into the States from which it came. The waste resulting from such a policy is enormous and the additional costs are difficult to estimate. Certainly from 10 to 50 per cent of the amount collected is wasted and lost. If the people themselves collected the money and expended it where their own agents and servants could be watched and controlled, the results would be very much better. The evils of the Federal policy are observable in the handling of many matters by the United States which should be handled by the States. It is a long way from Washington to the various parts of the Union. The multiplication of governmental agencies and the enormous increase in the number of employees result from the policy which so many of the people foolishly clamor for, namely, governmental control, agencies, business concerns, activities, and matters purely local and domestic in character, and in many instances solely individual in nature and extent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator referred to the fact that I had taken him severely to task for his position on this matter last year. I hope the Senator does not feel that I have taken him severely to task about anything. In a general way I agree with what the Senator says about appropriations. I think we ought to be exceedingly careful. The Senator knows my view and my vote on such matters of extravagance.

Mr. KING. The Senator is going to vote for this appropriation, is he not?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and assuming that the Senator is entirely correct and was correct last year, if the Senator's amendment to strike out this item last year had prevailed, according to the actual figures the Senator would have saved $15,000 for the Government, because we lost $15,000 by this experimental service.

If we lose in the same proportion for this year, we will lose $45,000, assuming that it is still an experimental service. The fact shows that it is almost out of the realm of experimentation, because it has practically paid for itself. The gentleman who has it in charge believes that when a route is established from Boston to New York and from New York to Chicago it will actually pay for itself. Surely on the facts that have been stated we can reasonably assume that it will pay for itself. So assuming that everything the Senator says on economy is correct, we are wasting time fooling with a loss that can amount to but a few thousand dollars. Let us get at the appropriations that go into millions, matters of contracts involving billions of dollars, where we can save the Government, and do not let us be bothering about small matters when there are large matters that ought to have our attention.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was taught when a boy that the little things made the big things, and if you watch the little leaks there need be no concern about the big leaks.

The Senator says approximately $15,000 only was lost in conducting the air service mail experiment for 1918.

Mr. McKELLAR. Less.

Mr. KING. The Senator says less than $15,000. I do not accept his figures. I think the statement of the Senator——

Mr. McKELLAR. I take the statement of the department.

Mr. KING. I think the statement of the Senator is a verbal inexactitude resting upon erroneous conclusions, if not erroneous statements, made by a branch of a department which is anxious to build up more machinery and extend its power and influence in the land.

I notice in the report which was submitted that only 33⅓ per cent were allowed for depreciation in property. It is claimed by many familiar with aeroplanes that they have served their day when they have been in the air approximately 140 hours. They are delicate instrumentalities. They have to be handled with the greatest care, and they last, like the shadows of the morning, but for a fleeting moment. Where in this report is there a proper debit charge that should be made for the loss of aeroplanes?

From my information concerning the use of planes in France I am led to state that the machines used by the Post Office Department in carrying mails are not of much value now; indeed, if they have been operated for more than 140 hours—that is, have been in the air for that period—they have ceased to be of much value.

Saturday, February 1, 1919.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have learned since I have been here two lessons more or less important—one is that a committee rather resents opposition to an appropriation bill reported by it, and the impatience is exhibited if there should be criticism of any of the items carried in the bill. Is it possible that the theory must prevail that it is the duty of Senators to take the bill, good or bad, without criticism, without analysis, and without understanding of its terms?

Another thing that I am learning is that there is not very much of an aisle of separation between the Democrats and the Republicans when an appropriation bill is before the Senate for consideration. Such a bill seems to be a golden bridge that united both sides of the Chamber and over which Senators from both sides freely pass in their beautiful fraternization.

Mr. President, I was calling attention yesterday at the hour of adjournment to the expenditures that were being made, colossal and stupendous in amount, and I propounded a query as to the source from which the revenue was to be obtained in order to meet the growing expenditures. My colleague (Mr. SMOOT) stated this morning that the expenditures for the fiscal year 1920 would be at least $10,000,000,000. In my opinion they will reach and perhaps will exceed that amount. I have before me some estimates for required appropriations for the year 1920. They are very incomplete, and yet they total more than $8,000,000,000. They do not include the $750,000,000 required by the Railroad Administration for the operation of the railroads for that year; nor do they include the two hundred and eighty odd million dollars required by the Navy Department over the original estimates submitted by it. There is still another large item, demanded for the purpose of caring for the wheat crop of the current year. No one knows, Mr. President, what that amount will be. I understand the Agricultural Department asks for $1,000,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LENROOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to his colleague?

Mr. KING. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. SMOOT. Those estimates do not include any judgments that may be entered against the Government for unfulfilled contracts with the Government, nor do they include the amount of goods which it will ultimately develop the Government must purchase because of the fact that contracts covering them could not be canceled.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have that included in my item as contingent liabilities, the most of which will probably have to be met. As to what those contingent liabilities are, no one can determine. I think it may be safely said that the contingent liabilities of the Government growing out of contracts and claims for damages—many of them legal, and most of them perhaps equitable—will aggregate from two to three billions of dollars.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I call the attention of the honorable Senator to another item that should be included in his estimate of the possible expenditures of the Government? It is this: If the Bolshevists and the dissatisfied people of Europe should get hungry again after eating the $100,000,000 worth of food which this Government of the United States has recently donated to them as a reward for letting us have peace, in order to get a little more food they may raise a revolution, demand another hundred millions or a billion dollars; and if it should be asked for as a peace measure, the probabilities are that it will be voted by the Congress. That matter should not be overlooked in making an estimate of the liabilities of the Government.

Mr. KING. Of course that, as well as many other items that may be conceived of by Senators, is not included in the estimates which I am giving. I am inclined to think that the obligations that will have to be met by the Government during the fiscal year 1920 will be considerably in excess of $10,000,000,000. In times of peace, with such stupendous liabilities as that, it seems to me that Senators should hesitate now with respect to appropriations which are made, and should guard the Treasury with greater care and caution than ever before.

It has been estimated that when we were in prosperous conditions the aggregate earnings of all the people were between thirty-five and forty-five billions of dollars, and that the amount saved and available for investment was only five billions of dollars. Based upon these figures it is obvious that the fiscal year 1920 will not realize five billions of dollars (unless there should be an unexpected business revival) which will be available for investment. From that amount the additional taxes caused by the war would be deducted; therefore, if we assume the same financial and industrial conditions as existed before the war, which yielded five billions of dollars per annum for investment and for savings, there will be considerably less than that amount because of increased taxation. But even if there were five billion dollars available for investment, that amount would be insufficient for the next few years to meet the obligations of the Government. A considerable portion of this sum unquestionably will be invested by the owners and holders of the same in business and in private undertakings. A portion only, therefore, will be available for the purchase of Government securities. The amounts so available will be insufficient, plus the amount derived by taxation, to discharge the obligations of the Government for the next year or two. It means, therefore, national insolvency, unless the most heroic steps are taken to cut down the expenses of the Government.

In view of these conditions, I do not quite comprehend the attitude of so many upon whom responsibility rests; they look complacently upon the situation and give support to appropriations of the most varied kind, and in amounts so great as to be appalling. I do not intend to be critical or to be an alarmist, but I do confess to a feeling of disquietude when I behold the almost reckless manner in which the moneys of the Government are being appropriated and expended. During what might be called the rush period of war there is greater excuse for extravagance, but when the war is over, and there is full opportunity to investigate every appropriation and ascertain the channel into which it goes, improvident appropriations can not be excused.

A friend of mine rebuked me for criticizing legislation, because he stated I was criticizing my own party. Mr. President, by some in my State I have been regarded as partisan. I have denounced the Republican Party because of legislation which I regarded as hurtful to the Republic. I have criticized that party because of its extravagance and have declared that its policies made for a strong central government, which in the end would be destructive of the spirit of democracy, which this Republic was organized to perpetuate and to preserve; but I would as quickly, and I hope with as much severity, condemn extravagance in my own party. There are few occasions in the National Legislature where questions that are strictly partisan arise. I have tried to follow what I conceived to be the proper and just course and treat questions affecting the welfare of my country not as a partisan but as a lover and defender of the Republic and the institutions of our country. I believe that in the consideration of questions and problems affecting the welfare of our Nation all should approach their discussion imbued with the highest spirit of patriotism and permeated by a sincere desire to serve the public weal.

Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a moment longer, and shall briefly refer to the item in the bill which was under discussion yesterday and which is receiving attention now. The amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] improves the bill and should be adopted, although I am frank to confess that in my opinion it would be wiser to make no appropriation for aerial mail service at this time. The contention is made that the Post Office Department can continue experiments with a view to determining the feasibility of employing airplanes for mail service. In my opinion that department is not equipped in such manner as to enable it to conduct experiments in a satisfactory way. It has nothing to do with the subject of aeronautics. It does not have the necessary buildings, shops, and establishments for the purpose of repairing and handling aircraft. Moreover, it does not have in its employ mechanicians and those who have had experience in the use of airplanes. If Congress acted prudently and wisely in the matter, a commission would be appointed consisting of persons who have had experience in the manufacture and use of aircraft. The war has developed men of experience—those who have made extensive use of aircraft, and their judgment with respect to the subject would be of great value. It seems to me to be an unwise, not to say foolish, thing to have the Post Office Department undertake experiments along these lines, particularly in view of the fact that there are two departments of the Government, namely, the War and Navy Departments, that have for a number of years given a great deal of attention to this important subject and whose information perhaps is greater than that of any other branch of the public service.

The War Department, particularly, has many in its service who are well equipped to handle machines, not only to perform the mechanical work in connection with their construction and repair, but who by reason of experience, are competent to perform the duties of aviators. If the determination is to spend this or any other amount for aerial mail service for the coming year it would be the proper and sensible thing to have the Post Office Department collaborate with that branch of the War Department that has control of the subject of aeronautics. In hastily reading the testimony of the Second Assistant Postmaster General, I noticed that he asked for the appropriation of two and a half millions of dollars for the coming year, and, as I recall, this would provide for 3,000 mechanicians. His plan contemplated but a very limited aerial mail service. If this service was Nation-wide, or of any general extent, upon the basis estimated by the official referred to, many millions of dollars would be required and many thousands of employees needed. Let me add in passing that from the information which we have received concerning the use of machines in France a large number of persons are required to keep each machine in repair. I do not remember the number per machine. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW], who has given considerable attention to the subject, doubtless can fully advise us in regard to that matter. However, the point I am insisting upon is that the Post Office Department does not have sufficient information to enable it to undertake experiments along the line of aerial mail service, and moreover, it is not the proper department to which should be committed the important duty of experimentation. The War and Navy Departments have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in developing aircraft and we should await the results of their investigations and work, before determining whether to adopt airplanes as instrumentalities for the transmission of mail.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator recommend that we take this matter out of the hands of the Post Office Department, with the experiment we have already had, where there was a loss of only $15,000, and put it in the hands of the War Department, with that department's record in airplane service? The Senator is familiar with the record of the War Department on that subject—the fact that it has expended $640,000,000 and that an investigation had to be made about it. Does the Senator want to turn this matter over to the War Department?

Mr. KING. In the first place, Mr. President, I disagree with my distinguished friend from Tennessee as to the department's expenses during the experimental period thus far passed over. I find that they have spent for machines alone more than $118,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. And they have those machines in operation to-day. They own them.

Mr. KING. In the report submitted by Mr. Praeger he states that the expenses were $75,000 and that the receipts were $60,000.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NEW. If the Senator will permit me just a moment, I will say, in response to what the Senator from Tennessee has just said, that while it is true that an immense amount of money was wasted by the War Department, at the end of it all the War Department has at least something—not enough; even to-day it is not well equipped; but it at least has something. The Post Office Department has absolutely nothing; and while the War Department may be in some degree fitted to supply machines and to go ahead with these experiments, I do not think the Post Office Department has the first single qualification for it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. In reply to the Senator from Indiana I will say that the record was that out of the $640,000,000 the War Department had practically no machines to show for it, and that it took another appropriation of probably as much money or more before we got any machines that amounted to anything; whereas the Post Office Department started out with six machines, and they are running those six machines to-day.

Mr. NEW. Yes; but, if the Senator will pardon me just a moment more, I think I am fairly familiar with the record of the War Department's experiments and expenditures.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator satisfied with it?

Mr. NEW. Not by any manner of means; and I would be no better satisfied at the end of this proposed Post Office experiment than I am with what the War Department has done, either. I am fairly familiar with what was done by the War Department, for I was a member of the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs that went through with that investigation, and one of those who signed the report to the Senate; and I know that an immense amount of money was absolutely wasted. I think the money that is going to be given to the Post Office Department under this proposed appropriation will simply be added to what was sunk by the War Department, and I think money appropriated in this haphazard way for that purpose will all be wasted.

I believe that we should have one centralized department of the Government for the management and conduct of our whole airplane program. Great Britain has it; other foreign nations have it; and they have come to it as the result of experience, much longer experience than ours. This piecemeal investment of half a million dollars here and half a million dollars there is going to result in nothing but the waste of that much money.

For that reason I am opposed to this provision, and I therefore offered yesterday the amendment which is before the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah further yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. With the consent of the Senator, I desire to ask the Senator from Indiana a question. Would the Senator be willing to do away with all of the airplane service, all appropriations of all kinds for the maintenance of such airplane service as we have, until he gets his department of aeronautics?

Mr. NEW. Will the Senator state that question again?

Mr. McKELLAR. Would the Senator be willing just to stop all airplane service and experimentation until he gets his department of aeronautics? The Senator does not really expect to have that enacted into law at this session, does he?

Mr. NEW. Well, yes, Mr. President; I do.

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not understand that to be so. That answers my question.

Mr. NEW. Yes; I do. I am decidedly hopeful that it may be enacted into law at this session. I do not think we have any well-established airplane service in the Post Office Department, if that is what the Senator refers to; and this appropriation certainly has no application whatever to anything that is being done in aeronautics by the War Department or the Navy Department. This applies to what is being done in the Post Office Department; and in proposing this amendment I am certainly not cutting down the amount to be expended by other departments. I am not doing anything that interferes in the slightest degree with what is being done by some of the other departments. I am glad to state, however, that I would be very glad to cut down their appropriations, too, if asked for in the same way, because I do not believe that they are going to get anywhere with them.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator has answered my question. I did not know that the Senator expected to get his department of aeronautics bill through at this session. However, if the Senator does not get it through at this session, manifestly this appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. NEW. I suggested in the remarks I made on this subject that at another time and at a more fitting place I would offer a means for the adoption of that plan. So I shall.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee is in error in stating that the Post Office Department have utilized but six planes. As I read the testimony—and I have perused it very recently—it originally acquired 10 and subsequently obtained 4 from the War Department.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, in answer to that and another statement that was made by the Senator on yesterday, I have a memorandum here which I should be delighted to read as this time:

Depreciation on aeroplanes in the mail service is arbitrarily reckoned at 33⅓ per cent. This is based on the experience with planes in the possession of exhibition fliers that after three years are still in serviceable condition and on the long life under conditions of field storage and transportation and care of certain Army planes used during Pershing's campaign in Mexico.

There is no justification for the statement that the life of an aeroplane will average only 140 hours in commercial work. In the aerial mail service six planes have been in operation between 100 and 190 hours in the air. One of these six planes is being now taken down in all its parts for a thorough overhauling. Others of this lot are still operating as effectively as the day they came out of the shops. This relates especially to the type known as Curtis JN4H. The mileage made by these machines will run from 8,000 to better than 13,000 miles. As far as anyone can see, with the care that these planes receive daily, it is just as fair to assume that they will be in service at the end of four years as at the end of three.

The Post Office Department has information from the assistant flight officer of the Department of Military Aeronautics that the life of an aeroplane is 500 hours, having 50 per cent or under repairs and from 250 to 500 hours for machines having over 50 per cent repairs.

A detailed statement for record will be furnished if necessary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not profess to be an expert on airplanes, but from the many inquiries that I have made my information is that the life of a plane used upon the front during the progress of the war has been approximately 140 hours, and in order to render service for that length of time it was constantly overhauled and repaired. Indeed, whenever a flight was made, no matter of what duration, a number of competent and skillful mechanicians overhauled the plane before it was permitted to go into the air again. That was deemed necessary, in order to preserve the life of those who were engaged in a work regarded as hazardous and dangerous.

The Senator has read a statement. I have no doubt that it was prepared by the Second Assistant Postmaster General, or somebody who is desirous of securing this appropriation. Proponents of a measure usually find arguments, whether founded upon facts or in fiction, in support of their efforts to take money from the Treasury of the United States. I do not believe that the history of the war warrants the statement which has just been read by my distinguished friend. And when Mr. Praeger attempted to convey the idea that there had been only a $15,000 loss in the experiments conducted, the statement was misleading. There has been expended approximately $120,000 for machines; and I submit that the majority of those machines are now valueless, or comparatively so; and there has been expended in addition, for mere operation, $75,000.

I do not know what part of the $60,000 which it is alleged was received from receipts came from mail matter that would have been carried by train between the points mentioned, and what part came by reason of this appropriation for aerial service. Hastily glancing over the testimony, I reached the conclusion that they carried a part of their mail as ballast, and they took mail that would have been carried and was intended to be carried by train by the sender and put that into the airplanes, in order to make some sort of a showing that the public were availing themselves of the airplanes for mail service. Not knowing what part of the $60,000 alleged to have been received from mail carried by airplanes came from the unusual postal charge and what portion came from mail matter that should have been carried by trains, we are utterly at sea in determining the amount that actually would have been received and is properly chargeable as a credit to this service.

Mr. President, the experiment conducted by the Post Office Department has shown, at least under its operations up to the present time, the futility of aerial mail service until we get some better guide and some more experienced and more competent men for the operation of the planes. The plan suggested by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] is a sensible and rational one. That is one mistake which we make in the Government—the mistake of duplication; one department or bureau reaches out and covers the field in which another department or bureau is operating. There are parallel lines and a duplication of effort in many of the branches of the Government. If we want a proper aerial service, there should be a coordination of the agencies that are engaged in the utilization of airplanes. I suggested the War Department a moment ago as having had great experience, and suggested that the experts in that department and those who have been engaged for years in studying this problem could evolve a plan and suggest it to Congress that would make the use of airplanes practicable for mail service and, perhaps, other governmental functions.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana ought to be adopted; but we ought to go further and strike out the entire appropriation now. During the next year those who have been studying this question will have opportunities to compare notes and determine the virtues and successes of the airplane, its weaknesses and its imperfec-tions. Then, when the next appropriation bill is before us, we will be enabled to determine the wisest course to pursue.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I recognize, of course, the force of the argument made against expending money for any new purpose at this time, but I have become impressed with the fact that the airplane is to be made a great instrument of modern use, and, like all new improvements, it will have to come through experiments. The proposition now is to use the airplane for carrying the mails, not that it is hoped that during the life of this appropriation the result financially will warrant the expenditure, but this is a proposition which looks to the future for its fulfillment, and we would be very unwise, indeed, if we failed to take advantage of the situation as it presents itself to us now.

The fact is that Congress last year made an appropriation to conduct an experiment. That experiment has not been entirely satisfactory, and yet I am inclined to believe it has been worth the investment. It has taught us something that could be learned only through experience. The department has great faith in this project and wants a larger amount of money than the committee saw fit to give. We felt the experiment had not been given a fair trial under conditions which would demonstrate whether it could be used as a practical thing in commerce and in governmental operations hereafter. The experiment has been conducted between the city of Washington and the city of New York. It was started in the midst of the war, when nearly all of the activities of the Government were directed toward war, and now it is proposed to establish an experimental line between sections of the country which will demonstrate the possibilities of this facility in the business interests of the country.

The propositions before the country were to establish three lines that were particularly marked out, one from Albany through the various intervening cities to Detroit, another from New York to Omaha through Chicago, and another from Boston down to Norfolk or possibly to Atlanta. Your committee thought it best to provide for one experimental line at this time. Under no circumstances can it be a total financial loss, and the probabilities are that the insufficient test which was given it during the last year will make those in charge of it better able to operate it successfully in the future than they would be had it not been for the experience of the last year.

Furthermore, it is proposed to use the machines already owned by the Government and also to take advantage of the various experts who have been trained in this war emergency in aeronautics. There is no thought that any other course will be followed. These machines are now in the possession of the Government, and many of them can not be put to any present use nor is there a prospective use for them. It is thought that some of these machines can be altered so as to meet the needs of the mail service with not too great expense, and thus fit them for that service.

I repeat that the aeronauts already in the employ of the Government connected with the War Department will undoubtedly be assigned to operate these machines.

Another thing, Mr. President, that has been clearly demonstrated is that a machine well fitted for fighting purposes in the war is not the best machine possible to use in this mail-carrying service, which is typical of the general civil use to which airplanes may be put in the future. These machines can be altered, it has been stated, at an expense of possibly $5,000 to $10,000 per machine, so as to meet the conditions which have been demonstrated as necessary in the flying mail service. I am no more in favor of going into wild experiments at this time than is any other Senator, but where benefits have been clearly shown, where it is evident to every thoughtful man that these airplanes must be developed for use in civil life, and where the only present means for that development is this mail service, it would be unwise for Congress to neglect the opportunity. We have a practical organization for that purpose now. Some of the landing grounds are already obtained, aeronauts and mechanicians are at the Government's command, and it is thought that $850,000 will establish one complete line and make a demonstration which will satisfy the Government, or the Congress, at the next session, possibly, or within the year, as to the feasibility of continuing the experiment. Whether the airplane shall be used for carrying the mail or whether this experiment shall demonstrate the undeveloped yet altogether probable uses of the airplane in the future I do not care. I simply say we can not drop airplane development now. The airplane service or the development of the airplane for business purposes is one of the greatly possible things which we must recognize, and I repeat that the only present experiment that is possible or that presents itself is in connection with the Postal Service, where already it is in use.

Therefore, Mr. President, I was satisfied to vote for this limited appropriation—unwilling to vote for the larger one to establish three or four long lines, because of the uncertainty of it—and I think it is the least thing that Congress can do in reference to this great facility. The United States must not trail in this development; it must take the lead, and now is the time.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to indorse all that the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has so well said. It is a plain common-sense proposition. Last year when this item of appropriation was under consideration it will be recalled that the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] took then the same position about the appropriation that he takes now. Since that time, it seems to me, the experiment we have already had is sufficient to show the error of the position of the Senator from Utah. It is no longer an experimentation. A line then was established from Washington to New York, not so much because the business between Washington and New York was great enough to make it a paying proposition—that could not have been, because Washington is not a commercial city—but the iden was to give greater publicity to it, so that legislators could see what was being done with it.

The Post Office Department took that appropriation. I think the service has only been in operation about six months; and they come back with figures showing that in that time the expenses of the plan or operating arrangements of the line have been $75,000 and that the receipts from stamps on the mail carried amount to $60,000. So there has been an actual loss of about $15,000. I say that means not an experiment; or if an experiment, a successful experiment; and that there is no longer any doubt but that rapid airplane service will be the thing of the future. It will in a measure take the place of the telegraph and telephone doing the same thing. I believe if a line was established between New York and Chicago it would pay and pay well. When a line is extended to Boston, or a great commercial city of that kind, it is going to pay, and I make the prediction right now that in one year when we discuss this again and when my good friend from Utah makes a speech against it again he will find that it has been a good business proposition.

Who in this country wants to stop the use of airplanes in mail service? Is there a Senator here who will want to stop it? Practically no one in this country would want to stop it. It is a progressive thing; we know it is coming in the future; we know it is going to be utilized more and more all the time. We are proud of the line that goes from here to New York. We are proud of its success. It has done splendidly. It shows that it is no longer an experiment, and we ought not to stop it, but we ought to increase it sufficiently to make it pay. It is purely a business proposition. All we have to do is to add to the line other commercial cities, and the result will be that it will be a paying proposition and bring the Government in just as much as the Government has to pay out.

There is another thing connected with this matter. The Government has a large number of airplanes on hand. If they are not used for some purpose they will decay and be lost entirely. They are already built. They can not all be used in the Navy or in the Army. What are you going to do with them? Are you just going to let them lie up and decay without doing any good to anyone?

The amendment provides that the appropriation here shall be used in buying those machines and using them on these mail routes. Is not that the sensible thing to do? Is it not the business thing to do? Why should there be a doubt in the mind of anyone about it? The money will be turned over to the department that now owns them. In other words, the Government will be dealing with itself in buying these planes.

Another statement is made to the effect that we have invested a good deal of money in these machines already. So we have; and I was delighted to see the report of Mr. Praeger, which I read a few moments ago, in which he says that practically all the machines that we started out with are still on hand and that only one of them will have to be renovated. I think it is just about to be renovated now.

I say the Post Office Department has made a splendid showing, and we ought to increase this service and defeat the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, which would curtail it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if I were to speak an hour I could add nothing to the statement of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. I simply want to remind the Senate that only 27 legislative days remain of this session, and up to the present time not a single appropriation bill has been passed, and a number of other very pressing measures are before the Senate. We have consumed practically two days in the discussion of this item. I wish to express the hope that the Senate will permit us to vote on the pending amendment that has been under discussion.

That is all I have to say.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I think that the appropriation should be left at $300,000, as was provided by the House. Under the conditions existing in this country now it behooves Congress to find out whether there be a necessity for a thing in the first instance, it seems to me, before provision is made for it or a continuation or expansion of it.

What is the necessity for sending letters or mail by aeroplane? We have the fast trains of the country that carry mail at a speed of 60 miles an hour. You can send a letter all over the country in a day or two days. If you are in a bigger hurry than that, you can telegraph and get an answer to your telegram in an hour from anywhere; and if you get in so great a hurry that you can not put up with that and there is a necessity for faster communication, you can call a man on the telephone clear across the United States and talk to him immediately.

Why should we waste $500,000 additional in experimentation? Three hundred thousand dollars, it seems to me, would be ample. Of course, half a million dollars is nothing as compared with the expenditures of the Government heretofore, but we have got to come sometime to a point where we shall have some regard for business principles in the Government's administration of affairs. We had just as well commence here and now. The mail service on trains is fast; the dissemination of intelligence by telegraph is faster; and you can talk straight over the telephone. All three of these methods are in use and are perfected and effective. It seems to me that certainly this appropriation ought not to go higher than $300,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CURTIS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Spencer
Calder	Kellogg	Nelson	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kenyon	New	Sutherland
Colt	King	Overman	Swanson
Curtis	Kirby	Page	Thomas
Gay	Knox	Pittman	Thompson
Hale	La Follette	Reed	Townsend
Hardwick	Lenroot	Shafroth	Trammell
Henderson	Lewis	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hitchcock	McKellar	Sherman	Wadsworth
Hollis	McNary	Smith, Ariz.	Weeks
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Ky.	Smith, S. C.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SAULSBURY answered to his name when called.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. CULBERSON, and Mr. ASHURST entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment.

On a division, the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 28, after line 10, the committee reports to strike out lines 11 to 17, in the following words:

For experimental motor-vehicle truck service in such localities of the United States as the Postmaster General may select, the establishment and extension of such service, the purchase, manufacture, exchange, and repair of equipment, supervision and maintenance, and expenses incidental to conveyance and marketing of produce and commodities, $1,000,000.

And to insert:

That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer and the delivery to producers of articles necessary in the production of such food products, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor-vehicle truck routes, to be selected by him. The Postmaster General is further authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of country motor express routes, which shall be primarily operated as a means of expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail between producing and consuming localities and shall not displace or supplant any existing methods of mail transportation or delivery. These two classes of experiments shall be conducted under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage and in packing and wrapping requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe, and to defray the cost thereof the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated:

Provided, That mail other than that of the fourth class shall not be dispatched on experimental motor-vehicle truck routes or on experimental country motor express routes unless the same can be expedited thereby in delivery at destination:

Provided further, That separate accounts shall be kept of the amount of all the mail of all classes carried on such routes. The Postmaster General shall report to Congress the result of such experiments at the beginning of the next regular session.

Mr. HALE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Sterling
Chamberlain	Kellogg	Nelson	Sutherland
Curtis	Kenyon	New	Swanson
Gay	King	Overman	Thomas
Hale	Knox	Page	Thompson
Hardwick	La Follette	Pollock	Underwood
Henderson	Lenroot	Sheppard	Vardaman
Hollis	Lewis	Sherman	Wadsworth
Johnson, Cal.	McKellar	Smith, S. C.	Walsh
Johnson, S. Dak.	McNary	Smoot	Weeks
Jones, N. Mex.	Martin, Ky.	Spencer

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. TRAMMELL answered to his name when called.

Mr. CALDER and Mr. PITTMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators so that we may have a quorum.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms will carry out the instructions of the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. KIRBY, and Mr. SMITH of Georgia entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I understand that the amendment which was under discussion a while ago has been adopted. I desire to propose an amendment to that amendment, to which I know the chairman of the committee has no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The amendment to which the Senator from Washington desires to offer an amendment was adopted.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I ask that the vote whereby the amendment was adopted be reconsidered, in order that I may offer an amendment to it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was agreed on the floor that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Washington should be inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered, without objection, and the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 18, line 14, after the word "points," it is proposed to insert "including service to and between points in Alaska."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask the Senate now to vote on the amendment which has been discussed all the afternoon. I think every Senator has had an opportunity to express himself, and has done so. I hope we may now vote.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, it is only to-day that I have had an opportunity to examine into the question raised by the pending amendment, and, of necessity, my examination has been all too brief and cursory.

I have here a document entitled "Motor Vehicle Truck Route Service," which includes a letter of the Postmaster General and various statements of Post Office Department officials. In a very hasty glance at some of its contents I find it is one of the most interesting pieces of governmental literature my eye has ever rested upon. It apparently contains statements and reports and comments on this motor-truck service so far as that service has been extended and so far as it has been conducted.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has referred to the committee of the Post Office Department experts—10, I believe, in number—who made an investigation of the service and reported thereon. It may be of interest to the Senate to know that these 10 experts do not seem to think very much of the service. They certainly do not give the impression in their report that it has large prospect for success. They rather give the impression that it is all very well to try it a little longer, but they have not much hope for it. On page 9 I find they say:

We are not in this report accepting this motor-truck service as a necessary adjunct of the postal establishment nor wholly opposing it as an experimental innovation not worthy of a trial; we are seeking to correct the deceptive appearance of enormous earnings, revenues, and profits, that the subject may be approached carefully and considered in its true light.

In prior sessions of Congress I have taken the opportunity to comment upon some of the methods of the Post Office Department in conducting investigations and in proving a case to which they had already been committed before the investigation was ordered. I have reference to the famous pneumatic-tube cases, in which investigations were carried out in some of our great cities to show that a motor truck traveling through crowded city streets could carry mail faster and with greater reliability than could a pneumatic tube underground. It appeared in evidence upon those occasions that in order to prove the case they ran motor trucks on Sundays in midsummer when there was no traffic on the streets.

I find that this report shows that the reports of the earnings of these motor trucks have been grossly exaggerated. In some publication, which must have some semiofficial standing, this statement is made in order to encourage the public to believe that this system has a wonderful future. This is a quotation from that publication known as the Postmasters' Advocate, which appeared in September, 1918:

Upon the basis of a monthly net income of $4,000 per route, 1,000 out of a possible 5,000 cars operating on the principal improved highways east of the Mississippi should earn $48,000,000 yearly; 10,000 such routes on the basis thus presented would produce $480,000,000 per annum, or more than the total annual postal revenues at this time.

Apparently that is the suggestion which is offered by means of suitable publicity for the digestion of the American people. But these inspectors found that those estimates were grossly exaggerated, and that the reports sent in from the different routes were absolutely false from top to bottom so far as earnings were concerned.

Let me see if I can find some of these examples. For instance, there is an example on page 10 of the report of these inspectors to which I call attention to illustrate how some bureaucrats—and bureaucrats are multiplying in number faster in proportion than the population of the United States itself—attempt to prove their case in order to get their arms into the Federal Treasury at least to the elbow. They say: it shows no first-class mail handled from Baltimore on trips of November 16, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, and 30; on five days of the month, when entries appear to have been made by the dispatching clerk at Baltimore, recorded weights vary from 14 pounds to 29 pounds. On other days, when record appears to have been made by the driver, it shows 45 pounds first-class matter on the 7th and 15th, 50 pounds on the 13th and 28th, 80 pounds on the 8th, 85 pounds on the 6th, 9th, 11th, 14th, 18th, 20th, 25th, and 29th, respectively.

Record of first-class mail carried outward from Baltimore on the truck operating between Baltimore and Gettysburg furnishes further evidence of the same character—

That is as to the padding of the returns—

On dates of inspection—

That is the inspection made by this committee or its agents—

December 13, record made by dispatcher was 20 pounds, which corresponds very well with the amount carried.

An actual count of the postage on first-class matter dispatched, with weights of same, by this route from Baltimore was made on the 9th, 10th, and 11th instant, with the following result:

	Actual weight.	Recorded by driver.
	Lbs. ozs.	Pounds.
Jan. 9	10 4	90
Jan. 10	15 11	85
Jan. 11	9 14	90
Total	35 13	265

The figures reported by the driver must have been placed upon the records, of course; and they show that in some instances some one multiplied nine times the weight actually carried. Mr. President, you could prove anything by such a method.

I understand that the highest post-office officials admit that these reports are totally unreliable and that they have attempted by some artificial method to arrive at the truth. I am informed that they have done so by first slashing off 30 per cent of the estimated returns, and then, making up their minds that that was not quite enough, slashing off another 20 or 30 per cent. In the end Congress has no information worthy of being considered reliable. We only know that by some lucky chance some inspector who had the true interests of the country and of the public at heart happened to discover this gross padding of these weights, and the matter comes to the attention of the Congress. This is the character of the experimenting that is being done in the Post Office Department and for which $300,000 more is now asked.

Perhaps it would interest the Senate to hear something about the "mushroom special," which is described on pages 12 and 13 of this report, and which apparently, if I read the report correctly, was rather advertised as a good example of the successful operation of the motor-truck service, particularly in transporting vegetables. The report says:

The very large production of mushrooms at West Chester and Kennett Square, Pa., and shipment of the same to New York City by motor truck, representing new postal business, has been much cited as probably the best example of created revenue. Service between West Chester and New York by ordinary truck is in operation, but to advance the mushroom business a large 5-ton truck is operated as an auxiliary between those points, duplicating travel of the other truck for the entire distance, running both ways at night, doing practically no local business, returning empty from New York to West Chester, and carrying an assistant driver both ways between Doylestown and New York.

An investigation of this "mushroom special" line—

Whose deficits, Mr. President, seem to grow about as fast as the mushrooms—

on December 13, note was made of the business done on 14 trips from November 24 to December 12, during which time 58,297 pounds of fourth-class mail was carried bearing postage amounting to $732.92, or what would amount to $52.35 per day or $1,361.10 a month—26 trips. The cost of operation of this heavy truck is about 0.2726 cents a traveled mile, $75.18 per round trip, $1,052.52 for the above stated 14 days, $1,954.68 for a month of 26 trips—

Showing a deficit of $600—

Deductions are obvious, and it is not apparent wherein the Postal Service or the ultimate consumer of mushrooms reaps any benefit, except that the latter may appreciate improvement in quality and possibly quantity.

Yet that particular service apparently received a good deal of commendation by those who desire to see this system, according to the suggestion of Mr. Blakslee—I understand that to be his name—who said "we do not need and can not use $300,000; give us $8,000,000," spread all over the country.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the Senator does not claim that the $300,000 would not cover the expenses of the "mushroom special," does he?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Well, $300,000 would take care of the "mushroom special," I calculate, roughly estimating it, for 900 days, and then it would have to be abandoned and further experimental operations conducted.

Mr. President, this report is of exceeding interest. I have not had time to look at more than four or five pages of it, and what I have found has been, of course, by accident mostly; but if Senators will look at the latter portion of this volume they will find an appendix, in which these inspectors give more detailed reports on some of these motor-truck lines, and the various postmasters, through whose towns the trucks go rejoicing on their way, report what the patrons think of the service. I have not read them all, but thus far I have not been able to find any postmaster who says "right out loud" that anybody is enthusiastic about them, and most of them say that the patrons of the post office do not pay much attention to them; that they do not care much about them; and that they have not resulted in any increased business.

There is a line that has been running from Portland, Me., apparently to Amesbury, Mass., or perhaps that is one section of the line which, I understand, runs from Portland, Me., to New York City. The postmaster at Saco, Me., says:

This motor service is not being used by the patrons of this office to any extent.

The postmaster at York Village, Me., says:

The patrons of this office say that they think the Government is wasting money to operate motor service over this route.

Not all are as harsh as that, but none are enthusiastic, and many are as harsh as that. I do not know how many evidences of that kind are contained in this volume, but probably a good many.

I sympathize with a great deal that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said about this proposal. If it were of economic value to the country, it would long since have been attempted by private enterprise. I have never believed that the Government should supply any facility of commerce at a loss. It is a fallacy to believe that you are helping the people of the country when you supply governmental service to them at a loss to the Government. Somebody must pay the deficit; the payment must come out of the Federal Treasury; the money is not going to come from the sky; it is going to come from the pockets of the people who obtain the service.

Mr. HARDWICK rose.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to ask me a question?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARDWICK. I wonder if the Senator from New York would undertake to apply that very sound theory generally to all the different branches of the Postal Service.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator evidently has reference to the rates on second-class mail?

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I mean all the branches of the service. The rural routes do not pay their way and second-class mail matter does not pay its way; in fact, there is only one branch of the entire Postal Service that does pay its way, and that is the first-class mail.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not suppose that it can be expected that every single detail of operation of a great business such as the Post Office Department shall make money; but certainly the Post Office Department, taken as a whole, should be a little better than self-sustaining, and if some of the rates for the handling of mail matter of the different classes are so low as to prevent the Post Office Department as a whole doing a little better than being self-sustaining I am in favor of raising those rates. It is a fallacy to believe you are serving the people of the United States in an operation of that kind when you run it at a deficit.

It ought to make a little profit, and then, with a self-sustaining service and a little profit to be applied for interest on the investment, we will say, or for depreciation of property, we know that we are doing something approaching a sound piece of business. The trouble is that hardly any Government business is ever run on sound business lines, and from the prospects of this motor-truck service, as displayed thus far, on routes which I assume were selected because they were the more favorably situated, it does not seem to me that there is any chance for the Government ever to conduct that service except at a tremendous loss.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I desire to say that the committee had this report before it and examined it very carefully. They were very much impressed with some of the suggestions. They even had before the committee the inspectors who made this report, and examined them very carefully. We then called Mr. Blakeslee, in order that he might have an opportunity to consider this report and make any reply to it that he cared to make.

The House appropriated $1,000,000 for this purpose, and after a very careful examination by the committee we considered that perhaps it would be wiser if we reduced that appropriation to $300,000, exactly what we gave last year, for this experiment—and it is yet an experiment. In making that appropriation of $300,000 we undertook—and I think we did—to prescribe in the bill exactly how it should be expended and how the account should be kept, and that an itemized statement of the whole transaction should be made.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that we ought to carry on this experiment to the extent of this appropriation. I never have believed in the accuracy of the statements made by the Fourth Assistant Postmaster General as to the great amount of revenue to be derived from it. I think it has been an exaggeration, though perhaps not an intentional one. I do not think it is possible to reach the result suggested by him; but I do think this appropriation ought to be expended under the provisions of the bill, in order that we may know by the time the next Congress meets exactly what is being done and what success is being met by it.

I should like to have the Secretary read the provisions of the amendment to show the restrictions we have put on it. I think that will throw some light upon the subject and will show the Senate how careful the committee was in guarding against any future conduct of this experiment that is not exactly right and proper.

I hope the Senate will listen to the reading of the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

That to promote the conservation of food products and to facilitate the collection and delivery thereof from producer to consumer and the delivery to producers of articles necessary in the production of such food products, the Postmaster General is hereby authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of motor vehicle truck routes, to be selected by him. The Postmaster General is further authorized to conduct experiments in the operation of country motor express routes, which shall be primarily operated as a means of expediting the transportation of fourth-class mail between producing and consuming localities and shall not displace or supplant any existing methods of mail transportation or delivery. These two classes of experiments shall be conducted under such rules and regulations, including modifications in rates of postage and in packing and wrapping requirements, as the Postmaster General may prescribe, and to defray the cost thereof the sum of $300,000 is hereby appropriated:

Provided, That mail other than that of the fourth class shall not be dispatched on experimental motor vehicle truck routes or on experimental country motor express routes unless the same can be expedited thereby in delivery at destination:

Provided further, That separate accounts shall be kept of the amount of all the mail of all classes carried on such routes. The Postmaster General shall report to Congress the result of such experiments at the beginning of the next regular session.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I am willing to concede that the committee has done its best to get a true report from the Post Office Department as to the expenditure of this money.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask for what purpose?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I wish to make a report from a committee and to ask that it may be printed so as to be ready for consideration on Monday morning.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I yield for that purpose.

SECOND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, from the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 15140) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes. This is what is known as the second deficiency appropriation bill. I give notice that on Monday I hope the condition of business will be such as to justify me in asking the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire from the chairman of the committee when this bill was considered by the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It was considered several times yesterday and to-day.

Mr. KENYON. By the full committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. By the full committee to-day.

Mr. KENYON. Was any notice sent to the members of the committee?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I sent up to the floor of the Senate. I tried to notify every member.

Mr. KENYON. I had notice, as a member of that committee, saying that my presence was needed down there for a quorum. That was the first notice that I had had of this bill at all.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator has any objection, I will let it be recommitted.

Mr. KENYON. Oh, I know what it will be. It is the same old process of bringing in these appropriation bills and having to rush them through at the last minute. I do not think it is fair. Yesterday there was a meeting of the committee to consider another bill while the Senate was in session.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is useless for the Senator to debate the matter. If he desires the bill recommitted, so that he can have time to consider it further, I will move to recommit it. I have not the slightest desire to rush it through, except that it returns to the Treasury about $15,000,000,000; and I confess to some anxiety to have that brought about.

Mr. KENYON. I am surprised, then, that there should be any rush about it. I should like to ask the Senator if there was a quorum of the committee present when the bill was considered this afternoon?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There was. I will say now that if the Senator desires the bill recommitted, so that he can be present, I will move its recommitment.

Mr. KENYON. No; I simply say that these great appropriation bills are entitled to some consideration by all the members of the committee at a time when the members can be present and not when the Senate is in session.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not see the forcefulness of the suggestion. I told the Senator I would move to recommit the bill, and he can have all the time he desires to discuss every feature of the bill if he desires to do it.

Mr. KENYON. I will take that time when the bill comes up here on the floor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. The Senator simply desired to make a complaint, then, and did not desire any redress?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if he believes that these great appropriation bills should be permitted to be considered by the Appropriations Committee at a time when other bills are here on the floor that demand the attention of Senators? That is the complaint I make. It is not fair.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If any injustice has been done anybody, it is easy enough to correct it. I have told the Senator that if he felt that any injustice had been done him I would move the recommittal of the bill. We can not do more than give him all the opportunity he desires to investigate and be heard. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senator from Iowa has brought this matter to the attention of the Senate, I think I ought to say to the chairman of the committee that I have not been off the floor of the Senate or out of the Capitol, or out of this Chamber practically, since half-past 9 or 10 o'clock this morning, and I had no notice of a committee meeting this afternoon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am sorry that it so happened. I will say the same thing to the Senator from Massachusetts. I am perfectly willing to move the recommitment of the bill.

Mr. WEEKS. I do think that members of the committee ought to be notified.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I tried to notify members. I sent my clerk up to the Senate Chamber and asked him to see every member of the committee. If he failed to see the Senator from Massachusetts, I regret it very much. The only redress I can make is to recommit the bill, which I will cheerfully do if he desires it.

Mr. KENYON. If it is a bill to save money, let us not recommit it.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let us not recommit this bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That was the only reason I had for hurrying it up. It turns back into the Treasury over $15,000,000,000.

Mr. HARDWICK. Billions?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Billions; yes.

Mr. KENYON. How much does the bill appropriate?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. About $290,000,000, to supply deficiencies.

Mr. KENYON. A trivial amount.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. A very trivial amount as compared with the $15,000,000,000 turned back into the Treasury. Since the Senators have given expression to their complaints and criticism and desire no redress, I will let my request stand.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask one more question of the Senator, if I may. How many Senators were actually present?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not know about that.

Mr. KENYON. Were there over four Senators present?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; there were more than four, but I did not keep a list of the Senators who were present. All I can do is to guarantee the Senator that he will have an opportunity to be present by sending the bill back to the committee if he desires. That is all I can do.

Mr. KENYON. It does not do much good to have an opportunity to be present when we have to be here on the floor. I should think the committee could meet at such times that Senators could attend without taking them from their duties here. That is my protest.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am exceedingly anxious to dispatch as rapidly as possible the business of the Senate, but I am not willing to deprive any Senator of a full opportunity of hearing, and being heard, and giving consideration; and if any Senator feels that he desires to meet those conditions the bill will be recommitted. That is all I can say to him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I will conclude my remarks in just a moment.

I find on page 4 of this same document, in a letter addressed by the Postmaster General to the chairman of the committee, this concluding paragraph. It may be that this is now out of date and that the Postmaster General, or some of his lieutenants, have changed their minds. If so, the Senator from Alabama, of course, can correct me or bring my knowledge up to date.

In referring to the committee of post-office experts whom the Postmaster General apparently had appointed to investigate this service, he says:

> They have just completed their labors and have submitted to me a report in writing. I have carefully read same and feel constrained to concur in the findings they have made and the conclusions they have reached. In view of this fact, I respectfully ask that the original estimate made for the continuance of this experiment of $300,000 be reduced to $70,000. I feel that it is desirable to continue the experiment on certain selected routes in the hope that a beneficial result may be secured which will enable me in my next report to indicate just what features of this service may be retained as a permanent part of the Postal Service.

I will conclude my remarks by addressing this question to the chairman of the committee or to any member of the committee: In view of that paragraph, how did it occur that the Post Office Committee decided to appropriate $300,000 instead of the $70,000 which the Postmaster General recommended?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, there is but one answer to that, and that is that the committee did not agree with the conclusions of the Postmaster General.

The committee, as I have stated, gave this matter very thorough and exhaustive investigation. We examined that report. We called in the inspectors who made it. We called in Mr. Blakeslee, against whom the report is directed. After hearing both sides of the question, we felt that perhaps it was wisest and best to continue this experiment under the conditions which are prescribed in the amendment. That is all there is to it.

If the Senate want to discontinue this experiment, now is the opportunity to do it. If they are willing to go on and expend this amount of money, $300,000, which was the amount expended last year, under the conditions which we impose in our amendment, then they can do that. I think the appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am simply seeking light. I have examined this matter as far as I can. I find that the Postmaster General has no enthusiasm for it; I find that these 10 experts who investigated the whole thing have no enthusiasm whatsoever for it; and I find that the underlings who conducted it have padded the returns. That is all I can find in regard to the whole matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt.

Mr. KING and Mr. WADSWORTH called for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I am sure the Senate did not understand the amendment. We offered an amendment appropriating $300,000 in lieu of $1,000,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is being considered now as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment can be offered again, if desired, in the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then, I understand, Mr. President, that this amendment goes to conference?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; the amendment is rejected as in Committee of the Whole. It can be reoffered in the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Was the appropriation rejected or the entire section?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The whole amendment, of course.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment passed over is on page 36, section 5.

RECESS.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I had no idea that we could complete the bill this afternoon, and I am now satisfied that we can not. I am going to ask the Senate to take a recess now until to-morrow, Sunday, at 11 o'clock, because there are eulogies to be delivered at that time. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Sunday, February 2, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 1, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, in whom there is no shadow of turning, make us constant in all our righteous undertakings and firm in all our duties, that we may render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's and unto Thee the things that are Thine; that we may dignify ourselves and reflect Thy glory in all that is worthy. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13143) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., or for the construction of a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of said bridge.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 5316. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wenatchee-Beebe Orchard Co. to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or within 4 miles northerly from the town of Chelan Falls, in the State of Washington.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H.R. 13004. An act extending the time for construction of a bridge and for the maintenance of a pontoon and pile bridge by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak., and providing additional requirements for the bridge to be constructed.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5316. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Wenatchee-Beebe Orchard Co. to construct a bridge across the Columbia River at or within 4 miles northerly from the town of Chelan Falls, in the State of Washington; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13004. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge and for the maintenance of a pontoon and pile bridge by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak., and providing additional requirements for the bridge to be constructed; and

H. R. 13143. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., or for the construction of a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of said bridge.

GUARANTEED PRICE OF WHEAT FOR 1919.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a privileged resolution of inquiry to the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. How does it become privileged?

Mr. STEENERSON. I move to discharge the committee and report the resolution.

The SPEAKER. What committee?

Mr. STEENERSON. The Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

House resolution 515.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to furnish to the House of Representatives any and all information in his possession or in the possession of the United States Food Administration relative to what action has been taken or begun or planned toward carrying out and putting into effect the guaranteed price of wheat for the crop of 1919, contained and promulgated in the proclamation of the President of the United States dated September 2, 1918.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that resolution is not privileged, and I make it on the ground that the resolution calls for information from the Secretary of Agriculture and from the Food Administration. The Secretary of Agriculture has absolutely no jurisdiction over the Food Administration. The Food Administration is under the direct command of the President of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be heard.

Mr. MANN. It does not refer to the Secretary.

Mr. LEVER. I thought it called on the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. LEVER. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. It is too late. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee moves to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

Mr. MANN. This is to get the information; that is all.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is very urgent.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not know what information they could have. It is a matter of legislation to carry it out, of course. If the Government is going to carry out its contract——

Mr. MANN. It is the information that calls for legislation.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understand the committee has had hearings on that proposition.

Mr. LEVER. The objection to it is this——

The SPEAKER. These things are not debatable.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will not insist on the motion to table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee withdraws his motion to table. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from further consideration of the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] may have five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will give the gentleman from Minnesota five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman from Minnesota has an hour.

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable.

Mr. MANN. No; he has not an hour. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] have five minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have five minutes and the gentleman from South Carolina have five minutes, and then that the previous question shall be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, judging from the letters that I have received and a petition and other communications from my district, the people are getting very nervous and anxious about what is going to become of the presidential guarantee of the price of wheat for the crop of 1919. It seems that nothing has been done so far. Here is the Agricultural appropriation bill, but there is nothing in that. And we have not been favored with any information as to whether any steps are to be taken or what is to be done. There were some newspaper reports, but we have no authentic information from the Food Administration or from the President of the United States, under whom the Food Administration is operating, as to whether or not they have taken any measures or steps or what measures or steps they have planned should be taken to carry out in good faith this guarantee.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. For a question.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman want to fix prices?

Mr. STEENERSON. I want the information called for in this resolution from the President and the Food Administration which he controls to enable Congress to take such legislative action as necessary to make that guarantee effectual. We have not been favored with any official information whatever. It may be in possession of the committee, but Congress ought to know, and it ought to be officially communicated to Congress. Here is a proposition that the newspapers say will involve very large sums, but whatever it involves we must face and carry the burden.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I would like to ask the gentleman how much is involved in this?

Mr. STEENERSON. Properly managed, I do not think this guarantee would involve any expense at all; but if it is bungled, if the administration neglects to take steps now, if the Food Administration neglects to provide for it, we will be in the clutches of the speculators and wheat gamblers, and we can not tell how much they will bleed the Government. But if we take proper steps by legislation in connection with the powers that the Food Administration now has, and which will be continued, I believe this guarantee will be carried out without any loss to the Treasury.

Here is an open covenant, openly arrived at, which apparently from neglect or design is to be made a scrap of paper. That there are powerful interests back of this effort at repudiation is indicated by the market letter of Henry Clews & Co., of 35 Wall Street, New York, dated January 25, 1919, an extract from which reads as follows:

Now, that the war is over Congress should repeal the law which guaranteed the farmers $2.26 per bushel for their wheat; at least on the spring wheat crop not yet sown.

No class of people have been so loud and persistent in their denunciations of repudiation of contracts and treaties, whether between individuals or nations, as the financial press, but here is a leading financial authority that openly and avowedly advocates the repudiation of the guaranty of the price of wheat to the farmers, especially the farmers of the Northwest in the spring wheat regions, who have plowed and prepared their ground and their seed for a crop of wheat pursuant to the express guarantee of the President and the urgings of the Department of Agriculture, the Food Administration, and other governmental agencies.

It seems to me unthinkable that such a proposition could have any following whatever in either branch of Congress or among any of the leading lights of either party, and yet we find that this matter of most vital importance is being neglected and delayed for some reason that is not apparent upon the surface. The majority party in Congress seems to have been left without active direction and leadership, and is now floundering away, not knowing what measure to press or what course to pursue. Look at the situation with regard to legislation for reconstruction, for instance. There are almost as many plans as there are Cabinet officers. The Secretary of the Interior demands unlimited discretion and authority over $100,000,000 to spend for this purpose as he may hereafter determine to be wise. The Department of Labor has fathered a law which would do credit to the Bolsheviki of Russia. There are to be communities and colonies. The Government is to reclaim and improve the land and supply buildings and machinery. There is to be an eight-hour day on the farm, and if the crops raised are not sufficient to pay the customary wages for labor, then the Government will pay the deficiency. It is to be Government-owned and Government-operated farms, and the welfare of the farmers is to be looked after in every detail—a more paternalistic plan than has ever been proposed to take care of the aborigines on their reservations. The Treasury Department, through the Farm Loan Board, has given out an entirely different plan, which bankers claim will greatly impair, if not entirely destroy, all chances of selling Government bonds, and so on, through the whole list. Evidently the dominant party needs unity of direction, but their leader is absent. In the meantime the country is facing most serious difficulties.

I warn you that unless expeditious action is taken on the wheat guarantee that it will have more far-reaching effect than is generally supposed. Not only will it undermine the financial and credit systems of the country, but will breed discontent and distrust in the Government itself. We have only a few weeks left of this Congress, and I most earnestly urge speedy action.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. STEENERSON. Here is an obligation that is as sacred as anything can be, and yet repudiation is threatened.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the gentleman think the President ought to guarantee the price of the spring wheat crop that is not yet planted?

Mr. STEENERSON. The President has already guaranteed it. Of course, it must be carried out. I believe Congress will carry it out, but we have got to take early action. We have got to have all the information that exists and study the matter carefully. We can not do it within 24 hours—properly, at least—and therefore I am appealing to you to pass this resolution in order that we, the Members of the House, may have the information that exists.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], if he had made some little inquiry and had been as diligent about this matter off the floor as he has been on the floor, he would have found that already the Secretary of Agriculture, some two or three weeks ago, had sent up to the Committee on Agriculture a pamphlet of 63 pages going into very great detail as to the wheat situation, and that by the direction of the Committee on Agriculture I had that printed as a committee print, and I did the Members of the House the courtesy of having my clerks mail each a copy of it, marking the envelope "Personal."

Mr. STEENERSON. I received that copy, I will say to the gentleman, and read it most carefully; but we want additional information, and the gentleman should have asked for it.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman wants an opportunity to abuse the President, because he is over in France trying to save a bad situation. Now, let me say further, so that there will be no misapprehension about this wheat guaranty proposition, that the Committee on Agriculture has been called to meet on Monday to hear the various interests about suggested plans and to hear Mr. Barnes, the head of the Grain Corporation, and we hope by the latter part of next week to be able to present to the Congress such legislation as is necessary to carry out in good faith the Government's guaranty to the wheat farmers of the United States.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. And instead of this resolution being of any interest to the House, instead of this resolution being of any service to the country, it simply means that the officials that we ought to have before the Committee on Agriculture giving information will be sitting in their offices digging out information which, after it is presented to Congress, nobody but the gentleman from Minnesota will ever read.

I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MAPES. In my correspondence I find that the fear on the part of producers and farmers is that the Government is going to go back on its guaranty.

Mr. LEVER. You can give them the absolute assurance that so far as the Committee on Agriculture is concerned, I think there is a unanimous feeling that the guaranty shall be kept. I do not believe that there will be a dissenting voice in the House of Representatives against that proposition.

Mr. MAPES. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that the Committee on Agriculture will be unanimous on that subject. I have answered my correspondents saying that it was inconceivable to me that the Government would go back on its obligation.

Mr. LEVER. It is inconceivable.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Can the gentleman say how much it will cost the Treasury?

Mr. LEVER. There is no one on earth that can answer that question.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Can you give a guess?

Mr. LEVER. No; I could not give a guess.

Mr. ALEXANDER. If the gentleman assures his constituents that the Committee on Agriculture will keep this guaranty, it is a question whether the Congress will do it. The President has made the guaranty, and there is only one body that can be guilty of bad faith, and that is the Congress itself.

Mr. LEVER. I hope, inasmuch as this resolution can not bring any benefit to the House, that we will not hamper the officials that the committee will have before it next week by passing it and calling upon them for the information. I hope this resolution will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from the further consideration of this resolution.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

THE FOURTEENTH AND SUBSEQUENT DECENNIAL CENSUSES.

Mr. HOUSTON, by direction of the Committee on the Census, submitted for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1023).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 24, 27, and 28.

That the House House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following:

"That a census of the population, agriculture, manufactures, forestry and forest products, and mines and quarries of the United States shall be taken by the Director of the Census in the year 1920 and every 10 years thereafter. The census herein provided for shall include each State, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. A census of Guam and Samoa shall be taken in the same year by the respective governors of said islands and a census of the Panama Canal Zone by the governor of the Canal Zone in accordance with plans prescribed or approved by the Director of the Census."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "$5,000; the chief clerk and three chief statisticians for the divisions of population, manufactures, and agriculture, respectively, $4,000 each; three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out, insert the following: "for the divisions of vital statistics and statistics of cities, and the chief statistician provided for in section 3 of this act, $3,600 each"; also on page 4, line 9, of the engrossed bill, strike out the word "and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "subject to the approval of the United States Civil Service Commission, these"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 23: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "applicants claim to have"; also, on page 6, line 16, of the engrossed bill, strike out the word "or," where it occurs the first time, and insert the word "of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 25: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"And provided further, That in the selection of the additional clerks and employees provided for by section 6 the Director of the Census is authorized to use, so far as practicable, the reemployment registers established by Executive order of November 29, 1918, so far as the same applies to permanent appointments by competition."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 26: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"SEC. 8. That the Fourteenth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to manufactures, to forestry and forest products, and to mines and quarries. The schedules relating to population shall include for each inhabitant the name, place of abode, relationship to head of family, color, sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, place of birth of parents, nationality or mother tongue of all persons born in foreign countries, nationality or mother tongue of parents of foreign birth, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employee, whether or not engaged in agriculture, school attendance, literacy, tenure of home and the encumbrance thereon, and the name and address of each blind or deaf and dumb person.

"The schedules relating to agriculture shall include name, color, sex, and country of birth of occupant of each farm, tenure, acreage of farm, acreage of woodland, value of farm and improvements, and the encumbrance thereon, value of farm implements, number of live stock on farms, ranges, and elsewhere, and the acreage of crops and the quantities of crops and other farm products for the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration. Inquiries shall be made as to the quantity of land reclaimed by irrigation and drainage and the crops produced; also as to the location and character of irrigation and drainage enterprises, and the capital invested in such enterprises.

"The schedules of inquiries relating to manufactures, to forestry and forest products, and to mines and quarries shall include the name and location of each establishment; character of organization, whether individual, corporate, or other form; character of business or kind of goods manufactured; amount of capital actually invested; number of proprietors, firm members, copartners and officers, and the amount of their salaries; number of employees and the amount of their wages; quantity and cost of materials used in manufactures; principal miscellaneous expenses; quantity and value of products; time in operation during the year; character and quantity of power used; and character and number of machines employed.

"The census of manufactures, of forestry and forest products, and of mines and quarries shall relate to the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration of population, and shall be confined to manufacturing establishments and mines and quarries which were in active operation during all or a portion of that year. The census of manufactures shall furthermore be confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood, household, and hand industries.

"Whenever he shall deem it expedient, the Director of the Census may charge the collection of these statistics upon special agents or upon detailed employees, to be employed without respect to locality.

"The number, form, and subdivision of inquiries provided for in section 8 shall be determined by the Director of the Census."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

On amendment No. 1: This amendment strikes out all of section 1 as passed by the House and proposes to insert a provision providing for a very much enlarged census covering the additional subjects of education, health, and insurance, to be taken every five years, which would result in more than doubling the cost of the census. Your conferees restored the House provision and added thereto after the word "manufactures," in the first line of this section, the words "forestry and forest products," so as to conform to section 8 of the bill as passed by the House, which directs an inquiry upon this subject.

On amendment No. 2: This amendment related to the quinquennial census directed by Senate amendment No. 1. The Senate recedes and restores the House provision without change.

On amendment No. 3: The House conferees accepted this amendment for the reason that it reduced the number of statistical experts from 15 to 10, thus decreasing the appropriation for this grade of experts $10,000 annually, or $30,000 for the three-year period.

On amendment No. 4: Your conferees recede from this amendment for the reason that the necessity for this legislation has passed in view of the fact that hostilities have ceased and the draft process is no longer in operation.

On amendments Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, and 9: These amendments all relate to the salaries of the executive and administrative officials of the Census Office. The bill passed by the Senate provided for four chief statisticians at $4,000 each and three other chief statisticians at $3,000 each. The compromise reduced the number of chief statisticians by one, and provides for three at $4,000 and three at $3,600. As amendment No. 3 reduced the number of statistical experts from 15 to 10, there is only a net increase of $1,300 in this section over the bill as passed by the House, and there is a decrease of $2,200 over the bill as passed by the Senate. Your conferees therefore accepted the compromise and receded.

On amendment No. 10: This amendment provides for a graduated scale of salaries beginning at $900 and terminating at $1,800, with a difference of $60 between classes from $900 to $1,440, and $120 between classes from $1,440 to $1,800, so as to provide more frequent promotions. It will also make possible a more equitable adjustment of salary to the varying degrees of merit and efficiency of employees.

The section as passed by the House failed to provide for the employment of clerks at $1,000 and $900 or for an engineer and two photostat operators, which was undoubtedly an oversight.

During the decennial census period, the bureau will undoubtedly occupy one or more buildings outside the Commerce Building, where the permanent force is now housed, so that it will be necessary to have an engineer to look after the heating, lighting, and other equipment of the bureau.

On account of the tremendous increase in the volume of work they will also require the services of two photostat operators. The bureau states that these operators will have their salaries over and over again in making photostat copies of tables, letters, etc., which would otherwise have to be typewritten or copied by hand. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 11: This amendment prohibits the Director of the Census from employing more than 150 clerks at the rate of $1,440 or more per annum, and is made so as to conform to amendment No. 10; hence your conferees recede.

On amendment No. 12: On this amendment the conferees on the part of the Senate will move that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same, which will adopt the provision submitted by Mr. Van Dyke and passed by the House, which is as follows:

"That hereafter in making appointments to clerical and other positions in the executive departments and in independent governmental establishments preference shall be given to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, and widows of such, if they are qualified to hold such positions."

On amendment No. 13: This amendment provides that the examinations for clerical positions prescribed by the Director of the Census shall be subject to the approval of the Civil Service Commission. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 14: This amendment simply provides that the clerical force employed in the Census Office shall be selected by the Director of the Census in the order of rating; hence the House recedes.

On amendment No. 15: This amendment strikes out "Census Office" and inserts "Government service," which change is in conformity with existing law. The House recedes.

On Amendment No. 16: This amendment simply strikes out the word "may" and inserts the word "shall." The House recedes.

On amendment No. 17: This amendment is simply a change of phraseology. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 18: This amendment corrects a grammatical error. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 19: This amendment is simply the insertion of a comma. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 20, 21, 22, and 23: These amendments propose to correct grammatical errors by changing the phraseology from singular to plural. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 24: This amendment proposed to strike out a provision of the House that not more than one person shall be appointed to a clerical position from the same family. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 25: This amendment provides that, so far as practicable, the director shall use the reemployment registers established by the Civil Service Commission as a result of the Executive order of November 29, 1918. The House recedes with an amendment that the words "of the Census" be added after the word "Director" in line 20 of the bill.

On amendment No. 26: This amendment proposed to strike out all of section 8 as passed by the House and to insert certain provisions that would have been required in case Senate amendment No. 1 had been adopted by your conferees. In conference the House text of section 8 was restored and the words "forestry and forest products" added in the second line of the third and fourth paragraphs of said section in order to conform with the language used in the first paragraph of the bill as passed by the House. In addition thereto the phraseology of the last paragraph relative to the number, form, and subdivision of inquiries, as passed by the House, was changed so as to make it clearer.

On amendment No. 27: Section 9 as passed by the House provided for the appointment of supervisors by the Secretary of Commerce upon the recommendation of the Director of the Census and the Senate amendment proposed that they shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This amendment also contained certain legislation relating to amendment No. 1, which was not agreed to. The Senate recedes.

On amendment No. 28: This amendment is not necessary, as Senate amendment No. 1 was not adopted by your conferees; hence the Senate receded from this amendment and restored the House text.

On amendments Nos. 29, 30, and 31: These three amendments simply correct typographical errors that were made in the printing of the bill. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 32: This amendment simply changes the phraseology, so the House recedes.

On amendment No. 33: The House bill directed that an enumerator should be an actual resident of the subdivision within which his duties are to be performed, but made an exception in the cases of persons residing in the same city. The amendment simply makes the same rule applicable to persons living in townships and other civil divisions. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 34: This amendment proposes to expedite the enumeration in cities which had a population of 2,500 or more inhabitants at the last census. This means that the work must be completed in two weeks instead of one month. A large number of cities which had more than 2,500 inhabitants and less than 5,000 inhabitants in 1910 now have over 5,000 inhabitants. The House recedes.

On amendments Nos. 35 and 36: These two amendments simply correct grammatical errors. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 37: This amendment conforms to a similar provision in the Thirteenth Census act. The House recedes.

On amendment No. 38: This amendment provides that the Director of the Census is authorized to furnish transcripts of tables and other records upon the payment of the actual cost of such work, with the understanding that in no case shall the information furnished be used to the detriment of the person to whom such information relates. The House recedes.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the demand I made last evening for the reading of the engrossed copy of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws his demand for the reading of the engrossed copy of the Agricultural appropriation bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the subject of Theodore Roosevelt.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject of Theodore Roosevelt. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of the bill H. R. 8426, a bill introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL], with reference to salaries of clerks of courts, the bill having been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary through error instead of to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is right about it. Without objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Also, Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with respect to these other bills, where the circumstances are the same.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the titles of all of them.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1734) to increase the salaries of the United States district attorney and United States marshal for the southern district of Georgia, and for other purposes.

A bill (H. R. 2419) for the relief of Lieut. Commander Jerome E. Morse, United States Navy, retired.

A bill (H. R. 4618) to increase the salaries of the United States district attorney and United States marshal for the southern district of New York, and for other purposes.

A bill (H. R. 7347) providing for an increase in salary of the United States marshal for the western district of Louisiana.

A bill (H. R. 7691) to increase the salary of the clerk of the district attorney for the eastern district of Arkansas.

A bill (H. R. 8426) fixing the salary of the clerks of the United States district courts; prescribing how and when they shall account for the fees collected; providing for the office expenses of such clerks, including salaries of deputy clerks and clerical assistants; and for the travel and subsistence expense of such clerks and their deputies when necessarily absent from their official residences.

A bill (H. R. 11186) providing for an increase of salary of the United States attorney for the western district of Louisiana.

A bill (H. R. 12446) providing for an increase in the salary of the United States marshal for the district of Connecticut.

A bill (S. 2116) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman's request?

The SPEAKER. The request is to take these bills away from the Committee on the Judiciary and send them to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, many of these matters have been already determined by subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary, and if not reported are ready to be reported, and therefore I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection for a moment, the rule, paragraph 36 of Rule XI, set forth in section 712 of the Manual, giving the jurisdiction of the committees on expenditures, says:

* * * The examination of the accounts and expenditures of the several departments of the Government and the manner of keeping the same * * * the reduction or increase of the pay of officers shall all be subjects within the jurisdiction of the nine standing committees on the public expenditures in the several departments.

And I have simply endeavored to bring the matter before the House in this way. I hope the gentleman will not insist on his objection.

Mr. GARD. I think the gentleman is entirely wrong in what he imagines to be the construction of that particular section, because I know that these bills and similar bills have been before the Committee on the Judiciary for many, many years, and in order that they may be seriously and properly considered I object.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will withhold his objection further——

Mr. GARD. I thought the gentleman had completed his statement.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am so confident as to the construction of the section and feel so certain that this minor committee ought to have an opportunity to do enough work to deserve its clerk——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman frm Ohio [Mr. GARD] has objected, and that is the end of it. It is not debatable.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am so confident of the construction of the rule that it will take more than consideration on the Unanimous-Consent Calendar to pass one of these measures.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have laid before the House the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, with Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I move to concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MANN. Let the amendments be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is going to order that. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: Line 3, strike out "M. T. Dwyer" and insert "George S. Wood."

Amendment numbered 2: Line 4, strike out "Henry Hase" and insert "Menander Dennett," and, in line 5, strike out "Wisconsin" and insert "Maine."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Speaker, these amendments restore the bill to the same condition that it was in when reported by the Military Committee to the House. The House struck out the name of the member from Maine, Mr. Dennett, and substituted the name of Mr. Hase, from Wisconsin. The Senate has reinstated the name of the member from Maine and has stricken out the name of the man from Wisconsin. The substitution of the name of Mr. Wood for that of Mr. Dwyer is to restore the name of the man who is at present a member of the Board of Managers. The reason that the name of Mr. Dwyer was offered at the time the resolution was in the House was that Col. Wood had gone into the service of the country, but since the signing of the armistice he has again gone back to his position upon the board, so that the only question at issue is the substitution of the member from Maine for the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I will say that the reason the Military Affairs Committee of the House have unanimously instructed me to move that the House concur in this amendment is that if the member from Maine is dropped out, New England will have no representative whatever upon this board. The Central West, from which Mr. Hase comes, has members from Indiana, Illinois, and Kansas as members of the Board of Managers. It is the opinion of the members of the committee that the State of Maine is entitled to this representative. Now, I want to move the previous question on this motion, but probably the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] would like to present his side, and I will yield to him such time as he desires, say five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution was presented originally before the recess, the House after listening to the arguments as to the respective claims of these two parts of the country, on the question whether the State of Maine or the State of Wisconsin should have a representative on the board, had a division vote, and by a considerable majority inserted the name of Mr. Henry J. Hase of my home city. Mr. Hase is a Civil War veteran, has one son who is a colonel in the Regular Army, and has another son who fills a position of responsibility in the public service. The basis for the claim that Wisconsin should have its place reestablished was that some years back this board of managers consisted of a larger number. It happened that the term of the Wisconsin representative on the board at that time expired just when they were reducing the membership. Now, the argument is made that New England should have some representative on this board. The two homes in New England are so small and inconsequential as compared to the Wisconsin branch at Milwaukee that the House decided that it was far better to have a representative on the board to look after the Wisconsin home and leave the representative in the East, Mr. Wadsworth, of New York, to look after the interest of the New England home. Since Wisconsin has not had a local representative on the board officials have been imposed upon the Wisconsin home who have been guilty of embezzlement. We have one of the largest homes in the country, which will be filled up by soldiers returning from abroad, and it was because of that condition that the House, after listening to the merits of the two propositions, decided that Wisconsin should have the representative rather than Maine.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How many inmates are there in the Wisconsin home?

Mr. STAFFORD. Over 2,000.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. On the strength of the argument just proposed, that because you did not have a representative on the board there was embezzlement at the home, would it follow that there should be a manager resident in each State in which there is a soldiers' home?

Mr. STAFFORD. That was the policy until some years back when it was decided to reduce the membership of the board. It has not resulted very advantageously in the management of these homes, so far as the Wisconsin branch located in Milwaukee is concerned.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then the gentleman thinks we do not need any watching in Maine, that we would not have any embezzlement, anyway. Very well.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, Maine has not suffered the way Wisconsin has suffered, because Maj. Wadsworth has been able to look after the Maine branch. Those delegated to look after the western homes have not been so solicitous of conditions out there. That is what I am contending for. There is no question about the ability of Mr. Hase, a Civil War veteran, whom the House before voted should have this place. I ask the House to reject the Senate amendments and send the bill to conference.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendments.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. When we adjourned last night the passage of the Agriculture bill was held up by a demand for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MCLAUGHLIN] withdraws his demand for the reading of the engrossed copy. The Clerk will read the bill the third time.

The bill was read a third time.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I send up a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Michigan opposed to the bill?

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I am not.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman in the House is opposed to the bill and desires to make a motion to recommit the Speaker will recognize him, otherwise he will recognize the gentleman from Michigan, a member of the committee. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to report the same forthwith with the following amendment: Page 91, line 4, at the end of line 4 add the following:

"Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay the salary or compensation of any official or employee of the Department of Agriculture in excess of the salary or compensation he is now receiving in the office or position in which he is now engaged or for the work he is now doing if he shall be entitled to an increase of salary or compensation or additional allowance of pay under or by virtue of any other act of Congress: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to persons employed outside the District of Columbia."

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is not a quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 146, answering present 2, not voting 124, as follows:

Mr. PRICE with Mr. BRITTEN.

Mr. RIORDAN with Mr. COPLEY.

Mr. STEELE with Mr. MORIN.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, on this roll I voted "no." I find that I am paired with my colleague Mr. TINKHAM, who, if present, would have voted "aye." I desire to withdraw my vote and answer "present."

The name of Mr. GALLIVAN was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Agriculture, I report back the Agricultural appropriation bill, with the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina reports back the Agricultural bill with an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

"Provided, That no part of the money appropriated by this act shall be used to pay the salary or compensation of any official or employee of the Department of Agriculture in excess of the salary or compensation he is now receiving in the office or position in which he is now engaged or for the work he is now doing if he shall be entitled to an increase of salary or compensation or additional allowance of pay under or by virtue of any other act of Congress: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to persons employed outside the District of Columbia."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LEVER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PENSIONS.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15219, the annual pension appropriation bill, and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour and a half, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15219, and pending that he asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to an hour and a half, half of that time to be controlled by himself and half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire from the majority side of the House whether, after the conclusion of the pension appropriation bill now before the House, it is the intention to call up any other important measure to-day?

The SPEAKER. It is the intention to call up the Military Academy bill as soon as we get through with this one. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15219, the pension appropriation bill, with Mr. HENSLEY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15219, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15219) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. By unanimous consent debate has been limited to an hour and a half, one half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes with the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Appropriations, and is based on the annual estimates of the Pension Bureau, aggregating $220,050,000. We recommend for the ensuing fiscal year the sum of $215,030,000, a reduction in both the estimates and the current law of $5,020,000.

The amount disbursed for the first six months of this fiscal year, ended December 31, 1918, is $109,000,000. At this rate of disbursement, if it continued for the next six months, there would be a surplus in the current appropriation of $2,000,000. However, the disbursements during the latter half of each fiscal year are somewhat heavier than during the first half, owing to the settlement of a greater number of claims as the year draws to a close and the passage by Congress of a great many private pension bills during the closing hours of the session. For these reasons it is the belief of the committee that the surplus in the current appropriation, if any, will be very small.

The sum carried in the bill now under consideration, $215,030,000, is believed by the committee and the Commissioner of Pensions to be adequate to pay all pensions under existing law. The number of deaths of those receiving pensions will probably be about the same as in recent years, and for that reason the sum of $5,000,000 has been lopped off the estimates. Pensioners die at about the same rate each month. For the last three or four years the number of deaths has been in the neighborhood of 30,000 yearly. For 1914, 1915, and 1916 it was over that amount, but last year it was a little less, because the body of soldiers from which are computed the deaths is constantly growing less, although the percentage is increasing, so that we can pretty fairly judge how much the loss to the roll will be by reason of deaths, and the number of widows is decreasing also.

The principal factor of uncertainty in determining accurately what sum will be needed to pay pensions during the coming years is the net loss of pensioners from the rolls. The number upon the rolls on June 30, 1918, was 646,895, which is a net decrease during the period from July 1, 1917, to June 30, 1918, of 26,216. The loss by deaths during this period was 50,860 persons, of whom 30,466 were Civil War soldiers, 18,412 were widows and other Civil War pensioners, and 1,982 were pensioners of other wars. Losses to the roll by remarriages, minors attaining the age of 16, and other causes aggregated 1,847, so that the gross loss during this period was 52,707. This loss was offset by the addition of 26,491 persons through original allowances and restorations and renewals, so that the net loss to the roll was 26,126.

Mr. Chairman, our report contains several statistical tables which are reproduced from the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions, and which it is believed will be of value to the membership of the House in connection with the consideration of the acompanying bill:

Amount paid to pensioners, 1790 to 1918, inclusive.

War of the Revolution	$70,000,000.00
War of 1812	46,031,563.82
Indian wars	15,144,212.92
War with Mexico	52,148,138.86
Civil War	5,087,647,618.63
War with Spain and Philippine insurrection	61,333,476.58
Regular Establishment	46,540,408.16
War of 1917	7,243.31
Unclassified	16,508,447.41
Total	5,395,361,109.69

The bill is but 12 pages long. I have made as complete a statement as the committee felt was necessary in opening, and unless some member of the committee desires to ask some question I would now ask that my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] use some part of his time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. GALLIVAN. And I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion or consideration of the Agricultural appropriation bill there was more or less said concerning the plant quarantine issued by the Federal Horticultural Board forbidding the importation of most plants after June 1 next. There was inserted in the RECORD a letter from Mr. Marlatt, chairman of the board, addressed to Mr. LEVER, chairman of the Committee on Agriculture; also a letter from Mr. Marlatt to myself; and I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD another letter from Mr. Marlatt addressed to me upon the subject, in order that people who are interested in the matter may have a chance to dig out of the RECORD the information contained in those letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
FEDERAL HORTICULTURAL BOARD,
Washington, D. C. January 31, 1919.

DEAR MR. MANN: Referring to our discussion this morning, and after reading the discussion in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of yesterday, it seems perhaps desirable to emphasize the fact that the suggestion of the possibility of amendment of quarantine 37, made in the last paragraph of the memorandum reprinted in the RECORD, was included in this memorandum in answer to the charge which had been made in letters received that the department would not consider any representations of modification or amendment of the quarantine. The object was simply to point out that any quarantine is subject to amendment either to increase or decrease its scope, and not to indicate that the department had any uncertainty as to the wisdom of its action or would change the quarantine on mere pressure without convincing showing of need.

The memorandum points out that the department has taken this action after a very long and thoroughgoing investigation, in which it called to its aid all the plant authorities of the United States and consulted at hearings and individually with the leading plant propagators of this country. After giving practical trial to the possible alternatives of inspection and disinfection the department has been forced to the conclusion that the only possible solution of this problem is in the exclusion of all stock not absolutely essential to the forestry, horticultural, and floricultural needs of the United States; in other words, this quarantine represents the mature judgment of the department and its advisers and is in no sense experimental or tentative. As stated in the memorandum, the main lines of this quarantine are undoubtedly justified, and no minor modification will be made except on showing that is absolutely convincing as to the need and as to the safety thereof.

Yours, very truly,
C. L. MARLATT,
Chairman of Board.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, some time ago I had read, by the consent of the House, a letter from the Secretary of War concerning payment of allotments to soldiers, with a reply which I made to the Secretary. I have a letter from Secretary Baker, replying to my letter, which I ask to have the Clerk read in my time, in order to do full justice to the Secretary.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 26, 1919.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. MANN: Under date of January 9 you replied to my letter of January 6.

You believe me to be in error with regard to two statements contained in my letter of January 6; first, to the effect that allotments payable by the War Department are being promptly paid, and, second, that allotments payable by the War Department are not ordinarily for the benefit of families.

A careful inquiry into the facts shows that allotments payable by the War Department are being paid promptly and are not in any way in arrears. The following table shows the date due and the date of completion of payments from the month of March, 1918, to and including December, 1918:

Month.	Due on.	Payments completed.
March, 1918	Mar. 31, 1918	Apr. 11, 1918
April, 1918	Apr. 30, 1918	May 8, 1918
May, 1918	May 31, 1918	June 7, 1918
June, 1918	June 30, 1918	July 3, 1918
July, 1918	July 31, 1918	Aug. 5, 1918
August, 1918	Aug. 31, 1918	Sept. 9, 1918
September, 1918	Sept. 30, 1918	Oct. 15, 1918
October, 1918	Oct. 31, 1918	Nov. 18, 1918
November, 1918	Nov. 30, 1918	Dec. 19, 1918
December, 1918	Dec. 31, 1918	Jan. 15, 1919

As the dates of payments given above are the dates of completion of payments, it is obvious that the bulk of the allotment checks were in the mails before the dates given.

As to the second of my statements, I call your attention to the fact that a family allowance can be claimed in all cases by a wife or child, and can be claimed by a mother or father, brother or sister, when dependency exists. In all such cases the allotment checks are sent out by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and not by the War Department. The Army allotment system is, therefore, not usually called upon to send allotment checks in any of the foregoing classes of dependency, since the soldier having such dependents ordinarily elects to pay it through the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and have the additional allotment provided by the Government also paid for the benefit of the dependent.

In your letter you call my attention to the fact that you are receiving many complaints from soldiers that they are not receiving their pay. Undoubtedly such letters as reach you in practically all cases deal with soldiers returning to this country sick or wounded and having due them one or more months' pay by reason of the fact that their separation from their service records has made complete payment on the other side difficult. The orders of the War Department are that the first disbursing officer in this country who is brought into contact with such sick and wounded persons is instructed to pay them in full, accepting the affidavit of the soldier as to the date when he was last paid. These instructions have been sent to every port of arrival and similar instructions have been sent to the commandants of the different hospitals. These instructions and action under them have doubtless relieved the major part of the difficulty, which was due to the fact that when the armistice was signed the opportunity was presented suddenly of returning sick and wounded men to the United States in available transportation, and it was deemed better to return them without waiting for the complete auditing of their pay accounts, thus creating a situation of men returning without money, but not in want of any of the necessaries of life or the comforts which their sick and wounded condition require. I myself discovered this situation on my return trip from Europe and took immediate steps to correct it. From that time the matter has had the prompt and urgent attention of the department.

As an illustration of the character of complaints reaching you you inclose a letter, which I herewith return, from Sergt. John J. McAvoy, as to whom you will be glad to know that he arrived in the United States on November 30, 1918, having been paid in full to include August 31, 1918. In November, while still in a hospital in Savenoy, France, he received a partial payment amounting to $7.50, and on January 13, 1919, an affidavit was taken from the soldier as to his previous payments, and he was paid in full to include December 31, 1918. This action was taken without knowledge on the part of the officer involved of Sergt. McAvoy's letter to you or yours to me.

You call my attention to two other complaints (1) that the War Department is maintaining an expensive system of officers under the Department of Labor to secure employment for discharged soldiers, but that the soldiers who have employment waiting for them find it difficult or impossible to secure discharges, and (2) the refusal of the War Department to obtain information concerning soldiers who are reported wounded and referring them to the Red Cross.

As a matter of fact, the War Department has demobilized to this date something over 850,000 men. From such information as I have been able to secure this is many more than have up to this time been demobilized by either Great Britain or France. We have not, in fact, demobilized men preferentially who had employment waiting for them, and this for the reason that to have done so would have been to detain in the service men equally anxious to be released in order that they might compete for such places of employment as were open. I did not feel and do not feel that it would have been just to release some and detain others who when they are released would find greater difficulty in securing employment by reason of the preferences exercised against them in favor of their associates. This policy of the War Department has been frankly stated and has my unqualified approval, and I believe it to be both just and necessary. It has, however, been modified by authority granted to commanding officers to release preferentially men whose family circumstances contain such elements of distress as to justify exceptions.

As to your last complaint, the War Department has from the beginning persistently and earnestly sought to secure all possible information for the benefit of friends and relatives as to sick and wounded soldiers. The Congress itself has provided a relationship of alliance and cooperation between the American Red Cross and the Army. The Red Cross, by reason of its peculiar activities, has maintained in Europe a very large body of helpful and considerate workers. Their relation to the Army has been such that they have had additional means of securing information and transmitting it to the relatives and friends of soldiers. The War Department has, therefore, urged all inquiring relatives and friends to supplement such information as the War Department could secure for them by utilizing the casualties information section of the Red Cross, and I am happy to be able to say that the American Red Cross has been of great service both to the Army and to the friends and relatives of soldiers in this humane work. There has been no lack of effort on the part of the War Department, however, to use its own facilities to the limit. There have been times when the congestion of urgent public business made only a limited use of the cables possible for personal and individual inquiries. In such cases courier letters have been resorted to. Recently more cable time has been available and a vast number of personal inquiries have been sent and answers received and dispatched to relatives and friends of wounded men.

Very truly, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have not the time to analyze Secretary Baker's letter, much of which contains information as to the policy of the War Department, whether you agree with it or not. But for the benefit of Secretary Baker I am going to call his attention to a few cases that still exist. I have received the following letter:

Corpl. Frank J. Walsh (my brother), Company I, One hundred and thirty-first Infantry, was gassed on October 14, 1918; since that time he has been convalescent in a hospital located at Vichy, France. We have received several letters from him advising us that he received no mail since he was taken out of the lines and that he has not been paid for some five months. I am inclosing herewith an envelope returned to me from France.

Here is an envelope marked on the outside, an envelope addressed to this Army boy, "Gassed 10/14. C. P. O. Tours Directory Section." It is returned to the writer.

Notwithstanding the Secretary's letter—and I admit this information is correct—notwithstanding the Secretary's letter, he has not been paid for five months. And, notwithstanding the Secretary's letter, here is a telegram from a valued constituent of mine, as follows:

JAMES R. MANN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

My son, Pvt. Chauncey E. Sanders, Company C, Fifth Field Battalion, Signal Corps, Third Division, Regular Army, gassed in action near Chateau Thierry, July 26, taken to Base Hospital 36, was located December 10 at casual evacuation camp, First Depot Division, Army Post Office 727. Has had only one letter since August 10; no pay since May. Government evidently lost record of him at Base Hospital 36, as 21 letters written him by ourselves and friends have been returned from that point marked "No record." Can you secure any action on part of Government to correct this outrageous bungling?

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have not the time or I would be glad to do so. And when I sent this to the War Department they referred me to the Red Cross. They do this, however, in addition to anything they have done heretofore. Heretofore it has only been a reference to the Red Cross, and the Red Cross say they can not get the information for weeks, and maybe for months to come, but in this last communication they say:

Your letter has been referred to the commander abroad for report to us the present whereabouts and condition—and you will be advised immediately upon receipt of his reply.

I suppose that my request for information has been transmitted by mail. The boy has not had any mail from home for many months. Twenty-one letters which were addressed to him have been returned. He has had no pay since last May. They hear from him, but the Government can not find out where he is.

Now, Secretary Baker is a fine gentleman, complacent in his style and manner; and when somebody under him tells him that everything is lovely and that the goose hangs high, he believes it, I assume. At least he tells us it is so.

I have any number of communications, both from soldiers themselves and from their relatives, stating they have not been paid and that they can not get their mail. I have no desire to criticize the War Department. I appreciate the great work which the Army has done. But I hope that the Secretary will lose his complacency for a few moments, wake up the men under him, and try to attend to these complaints.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I am sorry I have not more time, but I can not take it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON].

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, I shall take just a moment for a short statement in reference to a matter that is closely connected with what my colleague [Mr. MANN] has just been stating. The letter from Secretary Baker brought the matter very forcibly to my mind. There was a fine young man from my town by the name of Earl Pillow, who was severely wounded in action on the 12th of October—I think it was—and who was sent to the same hospital as the young man mentioned by my colleague [Mr. MANN]. Afterwards his parents received word from the War Department that he had died from wounds received in action on November 11. Yet they had letters from him written on November 20 and on November 24, or written by his nurse for him, in which he told them of his condition, although the War Department had notified his father that he had died from wounds on November 11.

At the request of his father I took the matter up several times with the Casualty Bureau of the War Department and could get no information at all further than that mentioned, and I took it up finally with the Red Cross, and asked them to send a special cable. They agreed to do so. They sent the cable and said that they would get a reply just as quick as it was possible under the present conditions of the cable service. It was more than a month after they sent the cable to find out whether this young man was dead or alive before they got a reply. They finally received a reply that he had died on November 26 from wounds received in action.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. In just a moment. Now, then, in the last letter the young man wrote to his parents, by the assistance of the nurse in the hospital at Vichy, France, he told them he had sent them all the money he had saved and had taken over with him. He took considerable money along with him when he went abroad. He had sent it to his parents by mail after he received his wounds and when he may have been uncertain of recovering, but they have never heard from it. That was way back in October.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. DYER. Is the case the gentleman is talking about a transaction which occurred since the armistice was signed or before?

Mr. DENISON. It was just recently.

Mr. DYER. Let me suggest to the gentleman that instead of going to the Red Cross he himself cable direct to Gen. Pershing, and he will get the information he desires.

Mr. DENISON. I asked the War Department about that, and they said I could not do so and get a reply under a month or six weeks.

Mr. DYER. I will say that in extreme cases I cable to Gen. Pershing personally and get a reply promptly.

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. HOWARD. I would like to state to the gentleman that I have had the War Department refer me to the Red Cross for further information half a dozen times in the last three weeks.

Mr. DENISON. The Red Cross have invariably treated me with the very highest consideration in my appeals to them. In the case of the young man I am discussing they acted promptly and did the very best they could. The trouble has been that the cable service has been so completely absorbed with the reports of the proceedings of our representatives at the peace conference that there was not left available sufficient service to report the casualties to our soldiers and the condition of our sick and wounded boys.

Mr. HOWARD. I want to say further that I hope the gentleman is not reciting that case as representing an unusual situation, is he?

Mr. DENISON. No. I was just citing it as a case that was in point with the remarks made by my colleague [Mr. MANN].

Mr. HOWARD. It is a common occurrence.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Georgia is right. Now, let me say further that this soldier, Earl Pillow, wrote his father he had not received his pay for five months, and he did not get it up to the time he died on November 26.

Now, his father has never received the money that his son sent him, and he says he does not expect to receive it. The young man did not receive his wages for five months before he died; at least that was the information that his father got, and the War Department gave his parents misinformation as to the time of his death.

Mr. HOWARD. I have a telegram this morning from a gentleman named Wallace, of Atlanta, Ga., who was informed yesterday by the War Department that his son was killed in action on August 31, 1918, and this is the first information that this man has been able to get about his son until yesterday.

Mr. DENISON. It seems to me there has been the grossest mismanagement on the part of somebody when we see that casualties received by our soldiers before the fighting stopped on November 11 are only now being reported, and when the parents of those reported wounded or missing have been absolutely unable to get any further information about them. I hope the whole subject may be investigated and that those responsible for these unfortunate conditions may be ascertained.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill making appropriations for those now on the pension lists. I believe the last two speeches have a very proper place in this discussion. The bill takes care of the soldiers of the Civil War, of those who come within the provisions of the general pension acts and who are survivors of the Spanish War and of the Indian wars, and of certain classes of widows and invalids and minor children. Just now this country is concerned over the returning soldier, and the returning soldier is concerned over what this country is going to do for the boys who have gone "over there" fighting for humanity.

This bill is the largest pension appropriation bill which has ever passed Congress, with a single exception, that being the bill of last year, and we are glad, I hope, to do what was done last year—pass the bill unanimously—the first time in the history of Congress. But we must not forget the men who are coming back, and both the gentlemen from Illinois remind me of something in connection with what I said on the floor of the House the other day, when I paid my respects to certain members of the high command in France. I have an Illinois case which I dare say my friends are not acquainted with, and just now I want to read a letter which came to me from a good woman in Boston, who read something of what I had to say in the newspapers. Under date of January 16 she writes:

BOSTON, MASS., January 16, 1919.

Representative JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GALLIVAN: Thank you for your spirited and enlightening speech of January 14 defending the Nationals and Gen. Edwards's manly and brave attitude toward them.

I had a nephew who went in as brigadier general with the Nationals from Illinois. He was deposed and a Regular given his honors just before he lost his life in the Argonne Forest leading his men to a machine-gun nest. When his body was found, he was pierced with seven bullets, any one of which would have been fatal. He was brave and beloved.

Thank you for your defense of such as these.

Very sincerely, ——— ———.

I will not mention the lady's name, but I have her letter, as I have 400 other letters, which have come to me from 29 States in the Union, in my office, and I will be glad to show those letters to any Member of this House who is interested in seeing the originals, provided my correspondents' names are not divulged, so that Congress may realize that what I referred to was not local to New England but was general to the country. I am going to read a few more of them. I have a letter here from a Regular Army officer. Of course, I am not going to use his name. But he writes me from the city of New York as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Being an ex-Regular Army officer, and also having very recently served again a short time as colonel, I see from the inside perhaps better than even you do from the outside, and I want you to know how I sympathize with you in your recent courageous remarks in Congress on the conducting of Army affairs.

But while you were at it, why did you not also bring out the ludicrousness of the Chief of the General Staff's accepting and practically bestowing upon himself, as it were, the badge of distinguished service? Can you beat it? He in a swivel chair in Washington, blunderingly mismanaging affairs and knowing nothing about a modern battle, cheapening this badge by decorating himself with it?

Here are two other letters:

BOSTON, January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have been very much interested in reading your speech in Congress yesterday regarding the treatment of the Twenty-sixth Division.

I have this minute received a letter from my daughter, who, since last June, has been a Young Woman's Christian Association secretary near the front and who is now within a few miles of the place where the Twenty-sixth Division is stationed. She writes, "December 17," that she has just received a call from two of the boys of the One hundred and third Field Artillery, and, quoting her words, she says:

"The boys were awfully sore over the way the Twenty-sixth was left out of mention in dispatch by Gen. Pershing. It seems the marines advanced into Belleau Woods but could not hold it—not their fault; they were outnumbered—and then the Twenty-sixth relieved them, captured the woods, and held it. They have never been given any credit for it. Another thing that made the boys sore was that Pershing said his only veteran divisions with which to start the drive were the First, Second, and Third, when the Twenty-sixth had been in the front lines continuously since February. I am sorry for some one when these boys get home and into civilian clothes, when they can talk. I do not know even now but what I have said more than I ought, because there are just two things that can not be in letters now—criticism and statement of casualties."

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

ANNAPOLIS, MD., January 25, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN, M. C.

DEAR SIR: I write to thank you for your brave and just defense of the National Guards. They were the only purely unselfish, patriotic, and unpaid military organization in the country before the war; yet the Regular Army officers of high rank and the militarists of this country, taking advantage of the exigencies of the time and the loyalty of the American people in great crises, destroyed the guards to further and promote their own personal interests.

Could the true story of the wickedness of the original scheme and the intrigues by which it was carried to its ultimate consequences—the unjust dismissal of many of the officers of the guard of high rank—it would cover numbers of the guilty with the indignation of our fellow citizens, and possibly retrieve some of injuries deliberately and well-nigh criminally done to many of the competent officers of the volunteer service.

Please send me your full speech and keep up your noble vindication of the guard until returning reason restores the militia of the United States to its right place under the Constitution of the country.

I am a Democrat and no Republican complainant.

Very respectfully, yours,

Now, about every one of these letters mentions the word "courage" or "courageous" in connection with what I had to say, but I can not believe for the shadow of a minute that it needs courage for a man to tell the truth, even in Congress.

I have some other letters, and here, Mr. Chairman, is one from 40 wounded Army officers now in a base hospital in America, and I want your attention while I read this letter hurriedly.

JANUARY 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We read with joy and thankfulness your speech in the House, in which you discussed the American Expeditionary Forces high command, and are writing this to give you a few hints, that, if you will follow them up, will reveal a state of affairs that no one has dreamed of.

It has been impossible for anyone to criticize. If you did it here, you were pro-German; if you said anything "over there," you were sent home in disgrace. The Czar of Russia in his palmiest days never enjoyed the autocratic power that the staff enjoyed here and abroad.

It can be proven on investigation that medical officers were peremptorily ordered (and dared not disobey) to find unfit officers that it was not desirable, from the staff viewpoint, to send overseas.

Brest was unspeakable as a place to keep soldiers. Prison officials here would have been sent to prison for a term of years that would have dared to keep prisoners in such a hole. Yet we dumped our soldiers there, out of sanitary camps where they were well housed and well fed. Thousands fell ill of diarrhea and dysentery, and hundreds from pneumonia, because of it.

At no time was this remedied, yet at all times we had labor battalions there and Engineers to do the work, but were too busy building France a port of entry that is excelled by none to properly house and care for our soldiers. Pages could be written and then half would not be told you. Some of us were sent home that way and found conditions no better than last May and June. Yet the Secretary of War says it was ideal when he saw it a few months ago. We only wish he had to spend the time there under the conditions we did.

When Gen. Wood visited our front he was treated more like a German spy than an officer of the United States. We have the word of several colonels that knew him well for this. He was hurried through his visit and ordered back home without allowing him to visit the Italian front or returning through England, as he was invited to do by Lloyd George. Gen. Wood was the idol of the Army, officers and men alike, was one of our most efficient officers, yet he was kept in a corner here at home. Who did it?

You are absolutely right as to the high commands. God bless you for it; it is all we can say. The S. O. S. was full of Regulars and the front lines were manned by reserve officers, as far as the fighting units went, and by the National Guard. This also applies to the Regular Medical Corps, Engineers, Infantry—in fact, to any branch of the service.

This became so plain, and the guard and reserves were doing so well, making such a good name for themselves, and the casualty list was showing up so much at home against them that what did they do? They did this: At the first of the war they (the Regulars) were very jealous of the insignia "U. S." and the title "U. S. officer" in distinguishing them from Reserve officers or National Guard officers. But when they saw that all the honor of the war was going to be with the Reserves and Guard they had an order passed making all of us U. S. Do you see it? We did, we assure you. And, as you said, when it was all over but the shouting our officers were replaced by G. H. Q. pets from the Regular service.

We would like to have a count of deaths and wounds. How many men were wounded above the rank of captain? The number is negligible. Above those ranks none of us were allowed to soar, no matter how efficient we were, except in a few instances. It is all very well for them to say that an officer commanding an advance should not be exposed to fire, etc. We will say to you and will prove that hundreds of men were wounded and killed needlessly because the officers ordering the advance or change of position were ignorant of the ground to be traversed or did not know the position of the enemy.

We can also prove to you that scores of men were sacrificed because the officers in command were ambitious for promotion and ordered needless advances, or those that would show up spectacularly in their favor, which were of no material advantage to the general advance and would not have been ordered if they had had to risk their own lives, as they should, with their men and lower officers.

We know of one National Guard colonel relieved of his command after a very successful advance and sent back to the S. O. S. because of jealousy.

We know that in the Medical Reserve Corps in France very few promotions were made among these devoted men, even after a general order was issued to promote them all. It was the general impression among these officers that this order was never intended to be obeyed, but issued to satisfy the pressure back home from these officers' friends. At least no attention was given to the names after they were sent in, except in a few isolated instances.

So these men now are returning to their homes after a year or more service in the Army, wounded more deeply in their pride than those actually wounded in war. This same rule applied to the line officers of the guard and reserve. In all instances a reserve officer is promoted at the will and pleasure of his superior officer. Consequently he is at his mercy, and must please this officer, no matter how efficient he may be, before he can be promoted. The Regulars have us there, too. Their promotion comes to them automatically, for years of service or because they are Regulars. Many good, efficient, hard-working reserve and guard officers were outranked by some young West Point dude, who has been trained for four years to look on the man in the ranks as his "oyster" for no other reason except that he was a Regular and the other man a reserve or National Guard. Those two things above all should be changed in our laws.

In the Regular Army an officer is not judged for his efficiency as an officer, but for his social qualities. We could name several promotions for that alone, and several efficiency ratings based on that item alone.

Our part in the great war was a success, not because of the skill of our high command, but in spite of it. The American doughboy is the best soldier in the world to-day, and in our humble opinion has the poorest general officers.

We have known this all along, but what could we do? We were muzzled as to what we could write home, and it was understood that to report even the grossest inefficiency of a superior officer meant "back home in disgrace for yours." So we have waited, hoping for just such a champion as yourself, that maybe would take the muzzle off and give us a chance to tell what has been done without the chance of a dishonorable discharge staring us in the face. If a full, free, without fear or favor investigation be made, the American people will get off of their knees here worshipping, and maybe make some changes in the Army regulations and laws that will prevent a repetition of this scandal, now so well hidden.

It is true that the "S. O. S." was full of highly paid Regular officers, while in the lines there was great need of them. Medical officers especially were needed, yet in some places great numbers were kept idle, or worse than idle, and could not be assigned to work, or were not, even when asking every day for assignment.

We could tell you many, many other things, but what would be the use? We have burdened you thus far in order to let you know that you have not broken the crust of this thing even, and that the returning Army, reserves and guard, and the enlisted men are with you to a man. We only pray that your arm be made strong, and that you will not be awed by rank.

In our so-called democratic Army there is less freedom of speech or of the individual than in either the British or the French. We did not get our mail, thousands of packages sent us from home of needed articles actually ordered by special permission were stolen from us. Yet we could not say anything. It did no good to complain to general headquarters. No attention was ever paid to anything of that nature. Thousands of us have lost all we had in France—our trunks, our uniforms, bed rolls, etc. And we see no way to be reimbursed for them. To begin with, there was no reason why these things should be lost. And so on, almost without end.

In spite of all the inefficiency and hidebound regular militarism, thank God we had a splendid bunch of men, mostly National Guard and Reserve officers, that cut red tape where they could, disobeyed orders, ignored precedents, etc., sufficiently to get the great job done for which the Regular Army is trying to get all the credit. It is nothing but human that we should object to that.

We are sorry more than we can express that we can not sign our names to this, but being still in the Army we know the penalty of writing to a Member of Congress. We beg that you do not disregard this letter for that reason, but take our suggestions, all of which are true, as a basis from which to work, and do what you can to see that justice be done the guard and the reserves.

To show we are without prejudice we will say that 15 of us are Democrats, 2 Socialists, and 8 Republicans. Eight of us are National Army officers, 4 National Guard, and the rest Reserves.

Again thanking you, and wishing you Godspeed, we are,

FORTY WOUNDED AMERICAN OFFICERS.

That is what Congress must consider, gentlemen. These men are coming back disgruntled. Oh, yes! When they come into New York or Boston or the other ports of debarkation they are glorying in the victory won. They have defeated German autocracy. But I have talked with dozens of them, and they have told me in many, many instances that when they were fighting the Huns in front of them they had to watch for a few Huns behind them; and that is gospel truth, gentlemen of the House.

Mr. POU. What does the gentleman mean by that statement? The statement that they were watching for Huns in the rear of them? I think that the gentleman might well explain that.

Mr. GALLIVAN. If the gentleman insists on an explanation, I think the House grasped what I meant. The very militarism which they have gone abroad to batter down they found in their own ranks behind them, if the gentleman from North Carolina wants an answer. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, that is an answer in a way, but is it an answer that satisfies the gentleman's own mind?

Mr. GALLIVAN. It does. I am perfectly clear as to what I have in my own mind and I am perfectly clear as to what the boys who have returned from abroad have said to me and what they meant, and right here I want to warn the members of my party who are constantly criticizing us when we endeavor to bring to the attention of the country the needs of these boys who are coming back—I say to them that they are making the mistake of their political lives in rushing to an imaginary defense of the men who have been guilty of cruel wrongs to our soldier boys. [Applause.] It is no party question, and the party that attempts to protect these guilty men will go down to ignominious defeat. I am doing my party a service when I challenge the action of men abroad, and I want to say that the men of New England for whom I spoke the other day and who are coming back only in dribs and drabs are a unit in the criticisms to which I have referred; and once more I beg the men on this side of the House, unless they can answer these attacks, to keep quiet for the present or else go and get an answer, and do not put the Democratic Party in a hole. [Applause.]

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield? I am not interested in putting anybody in a hole, neither am I interested in protecting anybody. If any outrages have been committed, I will join with the gentleman in seeing that the guilty parties are convicted and punished; but when a man writing to the gentleman states that there were a few Huns in the rear of the American Army, that statement conveys a very horrid idea to me. I wish to know what is meant by it. We know who were the Huns in front, and what they stood for. Does the gentleman's correspondent mean to say that in the American Army behind the front there were men, officials, or otherwise, who so far as our boys in France were concerned, stood with reference to them, just as the German enemies in front stood? I want to know specifically what a statement of that sort means. If there is anybody who seeks to be protected, I am not in favor of protecting him, and if there is anyone who ought to be punished, I will join with the gentleman in seeing that he is punished. But at least we ought to have some definite meaning attached to the charge advanced by the gentleman's correspondent.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman knows that when I quoted the boys who have said to me that they were fighting the Huns behind them, the soldier lads clearly referred to the Hun autocracy which they were there to destroy, but which they saw exemplified in our own ranks in the actions of some of their own officers.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. They meant to say that that Hun autocracy was exemplified by some officer or officers in the American Army?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Exactly.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well. I will join with you in trying to weed that out, if it exists. [Applause.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. There is no occasion even to question the statement. It is clear what the boys meant, and any man in this House who will take the time to investigate will be satisfied if he believes that these men, who up until November 11 were "our heroes," are telling the truth. I think they are telling the truth. I said the other day that I had talked with many men, and not one of them was satisfied, not one of them was proud of most of the officers of the high command in France, and I repeat it now. I have hundreds of letters from 29 States in this Union. I have a colonel from the gentleman's own State and a major and a captain from Virginia who wrote me asking me to take up their cases and see what can be done for them.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question, purely for information?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Sure.

Mr. FERRIS. We hear these criticisms. I get some of them in my mail. Some of them I am impressed with and some of them I am not, but as I am able to understand them and fathom them they all reach back to the rivalry and the contest for promotion between the several officers. Do the letters of the gentleman point to that?

Mr. GALLIVAN. The letters which have impressed me do not point to that in any way, shape, or form. I have thrown such letters as the gentleman refers to into the waste basket. I am reading real letters. The letters to which my good friend from Oklahoma alludes did not impress me; and where a man said that he was in line for this commission or that commission and did not get it I have not bothered with his letter. I am reading other letters which do not refer to individual promotions.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think that there was absolute venality among the officers, or does he think it is the crime of the system, of too much discipline, too much arrogance, too much authority, or what? I am asking now in perfect good humor and perfect good faith. I hear some of the same troubles that the gentleman does, perhaps not to such an extent, because I live farther from the coast. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the real trouble?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will try to answer the gentleman, because his question is an honest one. I would prefer to find somebody on the other side of the aisle asking these questions, but my good friends over there are afraid to touch it. There is no glory in what the Republicans of the House have done up to date on this question. I repeat they have not had the courage to tackle the situation.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, no.

Mr. BUTLER. You tell us how we can touch it, and we will show you whether we are afraid or not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. My friend from Pennsylvania has been here 22 years, and he is asking me to tell him how.

Mr. BUTLER. Because you know better how than I do.

Mr. FREAR. I want to say that we are with you in many cases.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have a colonel from the gentleman's State who asks me to take up his case.

Mr. BUTLER. From Pennsylvania?

Mr. GALLIVAN. From Wisconsin.

Mr. BUTLER. I will give you the names of several men from our State.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have the names of several men, generals and colonels, from the gentleman's State.

Mr. BUTLER. I can give the gentleman the names of several men from Pennsylvania who were demoted after they had made successful fights against the Hun.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes; I have got 26 general officers above the rank of captain who saw service abroad and were demoted, and in most instances the men who were given their places had not seen combat before.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What reasons were assigned, if any?

Mr. BUTLER. None.

Mr. GALLIVAN. The gentleman is wrong. Does the gentleman mean what reasons are assigned for relieving the man of his command?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. In demoting the man. I was following the gentleman's statement.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I will refer to a distinguished brigadier general from my city, who had fought longer than any brigadier general in the Infantry line. Listen to this: He was on the front line until November 6, and a division commander, who was appointed to succeed the gallant Gen. Edwards, removed him on the 6th of November. Remember, on the 6th of November. And although he had fought with his brigade from away last February until November the reason assigned was that he was not aggressive enough in attack. He had been attacking and had gained a further advance in the enemy's line than any other brigade commander in Infantry. And in his brigade is the one regiment of the entire American Expeditionary Force which was cited as a regiment and the colors decorated.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Then that man was the victim of a lie.

Mr. GALLIVAN. He was; but I want to say in fairness that he asked for a court of inquiry, and the news only came to us yesterday that after his court was held and the papers went clear up the line at last, when they got to the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces, Gen. Pershing ordered the man back to his brigade and said he never should have been removed. [Applause.]

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Did the gentleman undertake to get from the War Department the record of the demoted man?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have not of late. I was in Boston before the session met in December, and had some correspondence with the Secretary of War about a colonel from my own city who was relieved, and was informed that they had referred it to over the seas. I did learn from a Senator-elect from my State, who comes into the United States Senate on the 4th of March next, the first Democrat elected to the United States Senate since the Civil War from Massachusetts, that he had thrown himself into the action here in the War Department, and that the Secretary of War had assured him that the record of the colonel for whom I was asking fair play was absolutely one of efficiency, so far as they knew in the War Department; that there was not a black mark against it. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that the colonel who had fought from February until the 1st of November, with only seven days' rest in all that time, was relieved for "inertia." [Laughter.] "Inertia," that is all. This man, who also asked for a court of inquiry, was removed by a division commander who was in command of the division but 24 hours and had never laid eyes on him and never saw him in his life.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Where does this policy start, and who is responsible for it?

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is what I am going to find out if I get help.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Does not the gentleman think it had its start at West Point?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Not altogether; and while some people got the impression the other day that I was attacking West Point, I was not. There are many good things about West Point, although I heard a distinguished brigadier general in an address at the Harvard Club at Washington the other night advise a change in the curriculum at West Point. He went on to say that it must not, for the shadow of a moment, be believed that the officers or that military science had won this war. He told us what we all want to believe, that it was the spirit of the men—the spirit of the men—and he advised his fellow officers in the regular line to cultivate the men whom they have met in the commissioned personnel of the National Army in the last year or 15 months. Gen. Ansell, of the Judge Advocate General's office, one of the most brainy men in the whole Army, made that suggestion.

Now, I have a great many letters here——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman referred to some cases that came from my State, captains, colonels, and others, in respect to which he said they asked him to take up their cases. Does that relate to injustice or demotion and other wrongs they claim were done to them?

Mr. GALLIVAN. It did.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Those cases present questions of fact which are to be arrived at by a military inquiry.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am not reading their letters.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What does the gentleman propose to do with these cases?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Well, I talked about that the other day—I do not want the gentleman to use all my time, for I have something interesting to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. DECKER. Does the gentleman think the man to blame for this is Gen. Pershing?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do not.

Mr. DECKER. He is in command?

Mr. GALLIVAN. He is.

Mr. DECKER. Then the gentleman must think he is to blame.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I want to say parenthetically, and in answer to the gentleman from Missouri, that I was asked to what I attributed it, whether it was to West Point jealousy, and I say no; and also, when my friend from Missouri brings up the name of Gen. Pershing, I say no. I am assured on the highest authority that these unjust and unfair actions are credited to the so-called "Leavenworth clique," and there are men from West Point who are not in the "Leavenworth clique."

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. How does the "Leavenworth clique" exert its influence on the War Department? Tell us that—and who is the "Leavenworth clique"?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I suppose my friend, who has been in Congress longer than I, knows that we have certain Army schools at Leavenworth, a sort of post-graduate schools, and these men who come out of Leavenworth have become closely banded together. Whether Gen. Pershing is the head, front, and center of the "Leavenworth clique" I can not say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DECKER], but it is well known that the controlling influence in his staff were members of the "Leavenworth clique," and I can assure my friend that unless I am being led astray men, even in the regular line, if given proper protection, will, when Congress investigates this entire situation, take the stand and under oath testify to the power and the influence and the unfairness of the "Leavenworth clique."

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. The gentleman has spoken of a great many unmerited demotions. Are those demotions due to any one man over and above any other man, or many men?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have just answered the gentleman's question. I have discussed for four minutes the "Leavenworth clique." I am advised from excellent sources that they were due to the influence and power of the "Leavenworth clique." In fact, may I say to my friend from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN] that I was advised, when I sought information, to be most careful to separate the West Point system from the Leavenworth system, and once more I repeat that I did not in any words of mine intend to lay up against West Point the injustices that have been perpetrated on American young men who gave up everything to go across the ocean.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The influence and power of the "Leavenworh clique" with whom?

Mr. GALLIVAN. With the high command.

Mr. MASON. Does the gentleman mean the general stawf? [Laughter.]

Mr. GALLIVAN. With the General Staff in Washington, as well, my good friend; yes.

Mr. MASON. I want to ask the gentleman a question. The question has been asked here on both sides of the Chamber—What can we do? This is one branch of the Congress of the United States. I have had the honor and pleasure of introducing a resolution which would allow the Congress of the United States to send for papers and persons and to sit during the recess. Does the gentleman not think it would be a wise thing for both parties to pass that resolution, so that we can get the facts before the people and before Congress, and then we will know how much is truth and how much is error in all of these letters and charges?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I do; and I have already suggested that. I might say to my friend from Illinois, both parties better get a jump on; both parties.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. WHITE of Maine. In that connection I asked the gentleman a moment ago if any requests had been made of the War Department for the records of men which have been refused. I asked that because I had understood—I had been informed—that a Senator of the United States had asked of the War Department the records of certain demoted men, and that all records had been refused, and I wanted to know if the gentleman had any information in respect to it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have not had any information along that line; but I think I know the officer to whom my good friend refers. If it is Col. Hume, of the One hundred and third Infantry——

Mr. WHITE of Maine. That is one of the officers.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have his record here, the official record of Col. Hume, where the man was cited more than once; where, like Col. Logan, of Boston, he had fought almost until the last stroke of the gong, and he was relieved on the 4th of November. He was in the brigade of the general to whom I referred a moment ago, who was recently restored to his command by Gen. Pershing. Do you wonder that we from New England rise in this Chamber and call the attention of Congress to these conditions? Remember that our boys have been over there longer than anyone else, excepting the first small unit that went with Pershing himself, and remember that the Twenty-sixth Division, the Yankee Division, fought until 11 o'clock on November 11. Do you wonder that it would take the heart out of any man in Congress if he was compelled to keep quiet when he knows the truth of these stories? For one I propose to have my say here in Congress.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can give any information as to the probable time of the return of these troops from New England, who have served, as the gentleman says, longer than any others?

Mr. GALLIVAN. Only from the newspapers, to which I was referred by the distinguished Chief of Staff; and the newspapers in Boston say that the division is coming home. I hope that no words of mine spoken on this floor may change the order, but I am watching; I am not afraid.

Mr. TREADWAY. May I not ask if the newspapers in our sections have not carried the stories that the men themselves are writing home that they expect to reach debarkation points in the very near future, but that no confirmation of that fact can be secured from the War Department or the Chief of Staff here?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I was advised by the Secretary of War the day before yesterday that he knows nothing about the departure of the Twenty-sixth Division. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I thank the committee for its very great interest and attention in these matters. [Prolonged applause.]

I ask unanimous consent to extend, revise, and correct my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I now under the privilege extended to me desire to print some more of the letters to which I have referred in my remarks this afternoon, and I ask the Members to read them carefully. They all tell a story similar to each other, and in every instance they came to me with the signatures of the writers attached. I will not print the names of my correspondents, but will gladly show the originals to the Speaker of the House or to the leader of the minority [Mr. MANN], if they should desire to read them.

ILLINOIS, January 23, 1919.

HON. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As one of the many "jobbed" National Guard officers, permit me to express my thanks to you for your recent severe and manly condemnation of the system employed by the Regular Army clique to discredit and remove from service officers of the National Guard and Reserves.

A congressional investigation such as you have urged will reveal conditions almost unbelievable and compared to which the "embalmed-beef" scandal of 1898 would be insignificant.

Should you desire it, shall be glad to submit some facts for your perusal, and can furnish names and addresses of upward of 100 National Guard officers from many States to substantiate my statements.

I sincerely hope you will persist in demanding a congressional investigation pertaining to dismissal of National Guard officers, the conduct of the brigade and field officers' school at Fort Sam Houston, Tex., and the school for noncommissioned officers of the National Guard at Leon Springs, Tex.

The arrogant, brutal methods employed at these schools alone would shock the Nation.

I am writing my Congressman ———, asking him to support you in your efforts to get justice for many brave officers who have been cruelly wronged.

Sincerely, yours.

BOSTON, January 20, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Congressman from Massachusetts, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I want to thank you for your very able and forceful effort on the floor of the House to convey to official Washington and the country some of the things that the War Department is either doing or countenancing that are not right as we see it.

My work as ——— keeps me in fairly close touch with conditions abroad, and I have been amazed at the shortcomings of the War Department.

To illustrate, my own son went without his pay for something over 10 months, and I have just succeeded in getting the War Department to settle with him. Many of our boys have not received their pay for months and months; are being landed in this country without a penny in their pockets; have been discharged without any pay since the day they left Framingham; parents have been cut off from allowances and allotments; National Guard officers, we believe, have been discriminated against unfairly; and now, on top of it all, the War Department issues a ruling that no soldier, unless he is with his unit, is entitled to the special YD and other insignia, which is an atrocious ruling, the bad effects of which will be far-reaching.

So I repeat that I was glad to see your bold stand of constructive criticism. I want to be fair, but constructive criticism is fair, and those of us at home who have been active know some of the shortcomings of the War Department.

I can substantiate with facts any of my criticisms.

Very truly, yours.

NEW YORK CITY, January 17, 1919.

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your speech to the House quoted in the Times of the 15th was a step in the right direction. While you are on the subject of the Army, might I be permitted to state the following facts:

If an officer of the National Army or National Guard while in the Federal service is unfit for further duty through physical disability he is discharged and that ends it. This disability, of course, occurred in the line of duty. But—

If the officer disabled is of the Regular Army or the old establishment, he is not discharged, but retired at one advance in grade and allowed a percentage of his new grade's pay. Please note the difference; one is discharged and the other is retired.

Last September I placed these facts and some data before Chairman DENT of the House Military Committee, but up to the present time have heard nothing. I am one of the above discharged National Guard officers.

Yours, truly.

BOSTON, MASS., January 16, 1919.

The Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In one of the morning papers I read of your appeal to Congress for our boys of the Twenty-sixth Division. I believe I am voicing the sentiments of every soldier's mother when I say that it is obligatory on the part of our Government that this affair be thoroughly investigated immediately. The delay of the return of this division and the treatment of some of its officers is being discussed everywhere. If there is a question that fair play has not been given these men, it should be settled at once to the satisfaction of all concerned.

If our Army officials are keeping this division in France for mercenary reasons or through personal feelings of spite, authority to do so should be wrested from them. Such proceedings are a violation of Uncle Sam's principles and the very cause for which these brave boys volunteered their services.

The boys of the Twenty-sixth Division should have returned on the first homeward-bound transport from France. These boys volunteered in answer to Uncle Sam's first call to the colors. The majority of them gave up fine positions, with splendid futures ahead of them, to fight for our protection. Not only did they leave their homes for a strange land, but they purchased liberty bonds paid for out of their Army salaries, which they sometimes waited months for.

Ours is a Government by the people, of the people, and for the people. If there is any suspicion of unjust discrimination in sending our troops home, the people should protest and demand an explanation, not only that our boys may receive justice but that those at whom the accusations are directed should be vindicated.

It has been rumored that this division is to be held at a rest camp until their condition is physically improved, when they will be ordered to Germany as part of the army of occupation. Everyone knows what they have done in this war fighting from February until after the signing of the armistice, without one period of rest, untiringly. I could go on endlessly relating the sacrifices they made and their heroism, but we all know the story.

Haven't they done more than enough? Send them home! It is a trivial reward after what they have endured for us.

If they are ordered to Germany, what shall they say to us when they return, broken in health and spirits, to find every available position in the country filled, forgotten by everyone excepting their dear ones?

I hope that Congress as a body will give this matter immediate attention, that the proverbial "red tape" will be swept aside, and that they will not tolerate undue delay in answer to their investigation.

I feel safe in saying you have the esteem of all New England for your efforts thus far. Let us hope, sir, you will see this thing through until success is attained. If the personal signature of mothers and relatives of the boys of this division will facilitate matters, I am willing to do my utmost to place such a list in your hands. I submit this in lieu of having heard the plan suggested.

Sincerely,

——— ———.

CHICAGO, ILL., January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: The writer has just received his Washington Evening Star of the 15th instant, and has noted with real interest the account of your criticism of Army pets as set out in that paper.

Inasmuch as the Government had to call upon the people, the State guard, and reserve officers in order to win the war, and inasmuch as the civilian had in many cases to make up for the shortcomings of the Regular Army, and the said Regular Army being a closed corporation, I would suggest that the War Department be the subject of an investigation by Congress, with real investigators, sitting and acting as a court of inquiry, presided over by a civil judge, that the proper examination and cross-examination might take place.

It is a known fact that an Army or War Department investigation is a one-sided affair, the whole intent of the inquiry being to protect the Army view of the situation, and any member of the Army forces who dares to criticize the acts or methods of the combine is at once asked to resign, no matter whether his claims are just or not.

Further, in order to break up the combination of the Regular Army officers and the lead-pipe cinch held by them, and in view of the fact that the National Guard and reserve officers had to come to the front, I suggest that the Army control be divided, one-third going to the National Guard and one-third to the civilian reserve officers, and that proposition be continued and maintained.

An Army officered by such a combination will be a live factor for justice; no packed court-martial can then be pulled off, and I see no better way for the people of this great Nation to show its appreciation to our men who went to the front than to give them some voice in the real management of affairs, and I predict that there will be a business administration therefrom and ever after.

Very truly, yours,

——— ———.

———, GA., January 24, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.:

You are to be congratulated on your speech before the House on January 14. It takes a man of a peculiar class of courage to make the statements you did, although every statement was as true as gospel. Gen. Edwards was not the only officer that was "got" by inferior nincompoops over there. There were hundreds of them, generals and colonels, who were removed without apparent cause, after long and efficient service, solely to give excuse for the appointment of Cavalry officers or those from the Leavenworth clique. Check up any of those relieved and you will not miss a case of rank injustice very far.

Another way of "getting" officers was to order them to a hospital, and the doctors would take care of them after that.

Again, scores of officers who served from three to six months in the front sectors—lines, if you like—with all the hardships and dangers that that service implied, were sent to the rear temporarily worn out—did not have the opportunity to sleep in warm beds or eat three good meals a day—and then railroaded to the States, with the resultant denial of promotion justly won. Men who have seen their juniors jumped over them purely through personal favoritism—selection—and a large number of those thus discriminated against by virtue of this favoritism bear the scars of wounds received in battle. Yet that counts for naught unless you had a "stand-in" with the powers that be—Duncan K. Majors and his like—in other words, were of the "elect"; and if you did your work in an efficient, hustling, painstaking manner and did not make the welkin ring with outbursts of self-laudation of your greatness and importance, you were lost.

The powers that be have the officers of the Army by the throat, and if those who suffer gross injustice at the hands of the favored—those who are bedecked with medals for their gallantry, but who ruled in Chaumont and the States—utter a whimper in protest they are immediately squelched via the court-martial route. There is no possible chance for an officer who has been unjustly treated to secure justice.

You can see every day scores of brigadier generals, colonels, etc., who have never heard a hostile shot. Justice?

A large number of officers—a very large number—hope you will push your request for an investigation, and also put a stop to any future similar acts of favoritism by squelching the clique recommendation for promotion by selection in the proposed Army reorganization bill. It has been very definitely shown by the promotions by selection in the past few months that the personal factor is the greatest element to successful advancement in the Army, and the man who is out doing straight soldiering gets no consideration.

The Army and Navy Journal is filled with a lot of editorial slush with reference to your remarks and the source of your information, but its eyes would be opened could Army officers and men tell the truth without fear of having their means of livelihood summarily stopped.

Discipline is necessary, but gag rule is a curse to any nation.

Sincerely,

BOSTON, January 16, 1919.

Representative JAMES A. GALLIVAN.

DEAR SIR: Let me introduce myself as the wife of one of those slighted and shamefully treated officers of the Massachusetts National Guard, who you so gallantly defended in your truly wonderful speech of the 14th in Washington.

You have no idea what a wonderful comfort it was to me to read it, and realize you have made it possible for the public to know the real truth in regard to these things. My husband, an officer in the —— Massachusetts—I will call no names—has given 20 years of the best part of his life and time to the work of the National Guard. After many years of hard work he has built up a paying business. When "his country called" he gladly gave up all family ties, business, everything, to go to war; with what result? After fighting, suffering, and great sacrifice, to be turned down from his rightly earned reward and have to see a young West Pointer, a rich man's son, who has never done anything to merit reward, put into his place! It is a disgrace to this administration the way real men have been abused, and it surely will have to pay for it later. As you say, "Wait till the boys get home; they will tell a few things."

Your wonderful speech "blazed the way" to the truth, indeed. It was just splendid and you certainly have the blessings of the wives and mothers of those men you so gallantly defended. The shameful conditions of the mail service in regard to soldiers' letters is so true. I have a relative wounded in a French hospital who has not had a letter from home for three months, and we have written 10 to him. May God give you courage to continue your good work and bring to justice those "powers that be" who persistently refuse to listen to the cries of those in distress who have given "their all" and who also absolutely refuse to "right the wrong."

Thanking you for what you have done in putting the facts before the people and for your splendid speech, I remain,

Most sincerely,

NEW YORK CITY, January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Every volunteer officer, especially those in the combat units in France and their relatives, will be glad to read of the issue raised by you yesterday in respect to certain Regular Army officers, their safety-first conduct, and their treatment of said volunteer officers who, educated at private expense, volunteered their services and risked their lives for their country in all posts of danger to which they were assigned and told that they would have to earn promotion under fire.

Beginning with applications for admission to officers' training schools and in such training schools in charge of West Pointers, the volunteers were hectored, bullied, and abused in a way remarkable for its smallness and pettiness and told that they were unwelcome and that they did not propose to have them, the volunteers, get commissions that it had taken them four years at West Point to obtain. The fact that such volunteers had had educations, college and other, and business experience which more than equaled the purely academic training of four years at West Point of the West Pointers during their adolescence, was entirely disregarded and considered as of no value by said West Pointers, who assumed that the course at West Point per se (obtained at public expense, for which they evince no gratitude), had given them a profound, superior, and complete knowledge of the past, present, and future tense of everything, and in addition had made them, properly from all walks of life, social superiors of said volunteers, whom they continually flouted and refused to meet on equal terms or accord equal privileges on all occasions.

When France was reached the volunteer officers were assigned to all branches of the service in the combat divisions considered of extrahazardous nature, such as manning scouting machines, aeroplanes, and balloons for observations of artillery fire, commanding machine gun and field-artillery units, even of the regular divisions, trench-mortar batteries. The latter was considered extrahazardous (not borne out) by the English and French Armies; in fact was termed the "Suicide Club," and there was not a West Pointer in command of a single trench mortar battery, even of the Regular divisions of the Army.

The truth of these conclusions is verified by the small list of casualties to West Pointers. The writer hopes that you will obtain and publish a complete statement, showing the number in the service, the number in combat divisions, the nature of their assignments, and number and proportion of casualties sustained. The writer hopes that the matter will be ventilated fully, as well as the method by which the grossly unfair promotions and commissions have been given, and that our public-school aristocracy of West Point will have much-needed and corrective measures applied to it or abolished for the good of the country.

Hon. JAS. A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have read with much interest and appreciation your remarks in Congress a few days ago about "Regular Army pets," etc., and I take this means of thanking you for same, as every National Guardsman knows that you have spoken nothing but the truth.

"Get those National Guardsmen" seemed to have been a general order right down the line; whether the means be fair or foul, it was get them.

In the Twenty-ninth Division (the Blue and Gray), to which I went with my command after the border service with much pleasure and pride, not only were the words "persecution" and "discipline" confounded in the conduct of that division, but it was the custom of our distinguished commander—having orders from "higher up," no doubt—to merge three National Guard regiments into one—I cite the Fifth Maryland Infantry as an instance—then to chop, chop, chop away at the commissioned personnel until it was trimmed to suit. On the other hand, as you doubtless know, it was the custom to expand the very inferior Regular outfits into three. The object in merging was to get rid of the officer who had for years been giving his time and efforts free in the hopes that some day he would be of some service to his country. The object in expansion being to give promotion to Regular officers, most of whom had been educated and trained out of funds coming from the taxpayers, among whom are numbered the National Guard officers and men.

As a member of the National Guard who has more than 20 years to his credit, who three times of his own accord left home and loved ones to defend the flag, I again wish to thank you for your efforts and to express my pleasure to find at last a Member of your honorable body who has enough red blood in his veins and courage in his heart to defend the National Guard.

Again thanking you, I am,

Very sincerely, yours, ——— ———.

———, MO., January 15, 1919.

Hon. Mr. GALLIVAN.

DEAR SIR: Just noticed your report on ousting of National Guard officers in this morning's paper. I am one of those unlucky ones and want to congratulate you and thank you for having backbone enough for your supporters. I was a major in Missouri and had served 17 years in the National Guard, and was relieved for doing what I call my duty. It is too bad our representatives can not take the same stand you have taken. I could tell you more but am out now and it would do no good, but I just could not help thanking you for your speech.

Hoping for your success and pledging you my support if I ever get a chance, I am,

Respectfully, ——— ———.

———, VT., January 15, 1919.

Representative JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have just been reading an account of your attack on the War Department and the high Army command in this country and in France for their treatment of the Twenty-sixth Division, and I thank God that there is one man that is not afraid to speak his mind, and now that the ice is broken I hope that there will be something done and that the Twenty-sixth Division (what there is left of it) will be on its way home soon.

We have a son over there in the One hundred and first Ammunition Train and he has been through it all. That you may know what one soldier boy thinks of Gen. Edwards, I will quote a part of his last letter to me dated December 11, 1918:

"If I were you I would not build my hopes too high on our being home for New Years, or three from then, for that matter. The Twenty-sixth Division, for some unknown reason, does not fit any too well with those higher up and never has for that matter. If Gen. Edwards could have his way we would be home in a hurry, and I am sure that he will do everything in his power to get us there as soon as possible. Mother, Gen. Edwards is the best man that ever wore stars and there is not a man in the Twenty-sixth Division who would not fight for him. I sure would like to hear him talk in Boston. If it were not for this fact, that we are not allowed to criticize anything or anybody in our letters, I might write several interesting pages on this subject."

Very truly, yours, ——— ———.

MELROSE, MASS., January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN.

DEAR SIR: Permit me to add my feeble words of commendation to those I feel must be pouring in to you from all over the land for your fearless denunciation of the injustice done the officers and men of the Twenty-sixth Division. You have surely earned the thanks of all who believe in justice and fair play, and for one I thank you. Myself an old member of Company A, Ninth Massachusetts Infantry, I have watched with a great deal of pride the splendid record made by our New England boys, especially the One hundred and first Regiment. All the more so as I had a son in Company L of that command, who now lies under the sod of France, having been killed July 20 at Vaux, in the second Battle of the Marne. As yet I have been unable to obtain any definite information in regard to his death and so far have received none of his personal effects, though I have tried in every way to do so. I surely agree with you that there is something wrong and wish you every success in your efforts to have things righted.

I have received from France an official citation for bravery issued to my son upon recommendation by his regimental and brigade commanders and signed by Gen. Edwards. While I shall always cherish that, it does not and never can take the place of my dear boy, who I feel, like many others, was needlessly sacrificed.

With highest regard, I am,

Very respectfully, yours, ——— ———.

———, N. Y., January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have just read in the New York Times the report of your speech. If there is basis for your charges I hope that you will persist in having these allegations investigated, and, if proven, the guilty ones punished.

I was not aware of the treatment accorded Gen. Edwards; wider publicity should be given it. But I and many like me have been aware of what is, as far as the Army is concerned, the gravest scandal of the whole war. I refer to the treatment accorded Gen. Wood.

Gen. Wood is not known to me personally. I speak as a disinterested person. But I have watched his career and had learned to hold him in the greatest respect, as to character, ability, and certain statesmanlike qualities rarely found in a soldier. The greatest offense of which he has been guilty has been his desire to acquaint the American people with what he considered their almost helpless condition should war suddenly come upon us. I never have heard him accused of any laxness or misconduct as far as his Army career was concerned. He has been humiliated, one might almost say persecuted, by those in authority in Washington for no other reason, that I can learn, than that he chose to fearlessly speak out on an issue that others chose to "pussyfoot" on. The criticism might have hurt the tender sensibilities of some of the most high in Washington, but it was constructive criticism of the best kind. As far as preparatory work goes, I believe that Gen. Wood's outspoken criticism which led finally to the establishment of the numerous officers' training camps all over the country before we were finally engaged in the war was the finest piece of work done by any Army officer.

I hope, sir, that you will do all that you can to open the doors wide, to the end that men of the type of Gen. Edwards and Gen. Wood may receive full justice, and to let the fullest publicity obtain so that the man in the street may read for himself and learn.

Cordially, yours, ——— ———.

BRIDGTON, ME., January 15, 1919.

Mr. GALLIVAN.

DEAR SIR: I have been reading in the Post your talk about the Twenty-sixth Division, and I am glad to see one man that will show these men up in their true light and find out why they have been crowding these boys of the Twenty-sixth the way they have done.

I have a boy in the Twenty-sixth and would like to know why they should be kept over there any longer. They have done their duty, and they should have been sent home long ago.

I certainly hope you will keep up the good work and make it interesting for them until they do do something about it.

Yours, truly, ——— ———.

BOSTON, MASS., January 15, 1919.

MY DEAR MR. GALLIVAN: I know such words as mine can not express such pride and honor which we people of this congressional district owe to such a man as you.

I have read your speech made in Congress to-day, and as I have a brother in the One hundred and first Regiment, I find it nothing but my most important duty to congratulate you on your wonderful undertaking. My brother was reported killed, wounded twice, and missing. You can imagine for a moment the feeling and sorrow which came to our home during this memorable period. However, he is now safe and sound in France—or at least he so states—and it is my only desire now to see him get a square deal and receive his due justice.

There shall be volumes of books written upon this very subject, but when I finish my college career and am about to write my view of this subject, I shall only write it with contempt and "soreness" for the men to whom you refer in connection with the treatment of the Twenty-sixth Division and the transfer of its officers.

I only hope that you shall continue your fight to a finish, and our prayers shall abide with you to the end.

Yours, forever,

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I wish to commend you for your recent criticism of the treatment of the National Guard, both before and since going abroad, and most heartily say amen to every word in your address.

I have the honor to have a boy in the Thirty-fifth Division, and I do not believe there is a father or mother of a National Guardsman who does not believe that they have had the worst of it ever since they have been called into the service. Not a breath of complaint has ever come from the boys abroad, but when we hear such reports as Gov. H. J. Allen and others as reliable it causes just a little misinterpretation. We gave our boys freely, and every one of them has been an honor to us who gave them and to their country, and we have a right to expect that both officers and men be accorded the honorable treatment they deserve.

Go on in your fight, and not a father or mother of a National Guardsman in the country but will rise up and call you blessed.

I know not wherein lies the blame, but it should be found out and wrongs be righted before it is too late.

I am, most sincerely,

STAMFORD, CONN.

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I have read with interest in the New York Times of your efforts to obtain the speedy return home of the Twenty-sixth (New England) Division.

As the mother of a lieutenant in the One hundred and second Infantry, who went to France in September, 1917, has been in the fiercest fighting, and has been twice in the hospital, I want to thank you for your efforts to secure promotions for those brave, unselfish men of the Twenty-sixth Division who have offered their lives for us all.

Surely the brave fighters of the National Guard, many of whom have borne the brunt of many battles, ought to be as readily honored and promoted as the men of the Regular Army.

Thanking you for your efforts on behalf of our own brave division, I am,

Sincerely, yours,

MARSHFIELD, VT., January 16, 1919.

Representative GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Pardon me for taking up a little of your valuable time. I saw your speech to Congress in regard to the Twenty-sixth Division in yesterday's Boston Post.

I am a farmer in the good old State that has given a good many of her sons to that noble division. I have a son who is a corporal in Company F of the One hundred and first Ammunition Train.

Gen. Edwards reviewed the Vermont troops at Fort Ethan Allen before they were put into the National Army. The boys went wild over the speech he made them. It seems very strange that the Twenty-sixth is being held over there after what they have been through.

There certainly is a "nigger in the woodpile" somewhere, and I am glad there is one man in Washington that has got sand enough to start something.

You have the respect and best wishes of one proud dad in this matter.

All honor to Gen. Edwards and the noble Twenty-sixth Division.

Respectfully,

DORCHESTER, MASS.

Congressman JAMES A. GALLIVAN,

DEAR SIR: I am writing to thank you for your eloquent address in the House of Congress. We who gave our sons to go in the One hundred and first Regiment appreciate your speech. It was so fine and so thoroughly true. Here in Dorchester and South Boston you made us all happy—we felt that we were about at the breaking point—when you made that notable speech.

We hope that the Congressmen will act accordingly and, besides bringing the gallant Twenty-sixth home, we hope that they will punish the men who mistreated our National Guard.

Congressman GALLIVAN, we gave our boys to defend the country, not to be mistreated by some of the Regular Army.

I want to thank you for your kindness to fathers and mothers, sisters, wives of the boys of the gallant Twenty-sixth Division by your eloquent speech.

From a father of a boy in the One hundred and first Regiment.

DEAR SIR: I have read with interest in to-day's New York Times of your speech in the House about Army politics.

My son received his commission as captain November 28, 1916. He was called into service May 8, 1917; served at Fort Snelling, Minn., until December, 1917, when he was ordered to France, where he still is.

Numbers of captains whose commissions date later than his have been promoted to majors, while he is serving the country in France in the rank that was given him over two years ago.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., January 18, 1919.

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN.

DEAR SIR: Having read the speech in the New York Times you made in the House of Representatives, in reference to the treatment given Maj. Gen. Edwards, of the Twenty-sixth Division, United States Army, must say I never read anything that appealed to me so.

I wish to tell you that my only son is a member of the Twenty-sixth Division, a private in Company B, One hundred and third Machine Gun Company. He has been in France since July last and has seen hard service to this day. With all the letters we have sent to him, he has not up to December 16 received any; and at this date he was in Base Hospital No. 50. We have letters returned marked "sick" and giving date taken to hospital. But he can receive none. I think it is an outrage that he can not even know if his father or mother is dead in all this time.

I hope all the people whom you represent will appreciate your remarks as I have. I believe all who have anyone in that division and think about justice will appreciate them.

Respectfully,

FITCHBURG, MASS., January 16, 1919.

DEAR MR. GALLIVAN: I will not take up too much of your time. I simply want to say "thank you" from the bottom of my heart for what you have said regarding the Twenty-sixth Division. I would only like to shake your hand.

My brother is in the One hundred and second Infantry, and thank God, from what we last heard, he is alive and well. We are all waiting anxiously for some word in regard to their departure for home.

Trusting what you have said may in some way hasten their homecoming, I am,

Gratefully yours,

God bless you.

NEWTON, MO., January 16, 1919.

Hon. JAMES A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Saw your declamation in Congress as to action of Regular officers toward the National Guard and State troops. No doubt it is correct. The same thing happened during the Civil War, but the volunteers soon told them where to head in, and they stopped it. Where would we have been without them (volunteers), and where without the National Guards and Reserves? They did the fighting in both instances.

There is and always has been too much "ego" in the Regular Army. The present war has demonstrated that we don't need over half a million men in the Regular Army at the most, but do want a National or State Guard of from one to ten regiments, owing to population, to keep up the spirit of rivalry between the States and for emergencies that may arise. We don't want to Germanize the United States with too much militarism. Stand up for the National Guard.

Respectfully,

BOSTON, MASS., January 15, 1919.

Hon. JAS. A. GALLIVAN,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I take the liberty of congratulating you in your efforts in behalf of the Twenty-sixth Division.

My son is a master signal electrician in the One hundred and first Field Battalion, Signal Corps, Twenty-sixth Division. Thinking that the following statistics may be of service to you, I send them to you. They were compiled by Lieut. Byene, of the One hundred and second Field Artillery, a Salem boy, and I am sure are accurate:

The Twenty-sixth Division was the first complete American division on the line.

In the lines the longest of any division.

Out of lines (road marches, movements from one front to another, and rest) just 35 days.

Has never failed to make an objective.

Has never been in a retreat.

Fought and won the first American battle (Seicheprey).

Has been under 17 French generals.

Has never been in a corps or an army without being cited or commended at least once.

In French general headquarters among four divisions ranked as crack (First, Second, Twenty-sixth, and Forty-second) the Twenty-sixth ranks first.

Asked for by name by high command to take hardest sector at Chateau-Thierry and Verdun.

Has taken more territory than any other division.

The One hundred and fourth Infantry of the Twenty-sixth is the only regiment in the American Expeditionary Forces who has the honor of wearing the Croix de Guerre Fongeie.

Hoping that the foregoing facts may be of some service to you, being in concrete form, I am, sir,

Very respectfully, yours,

FLORIDA, January 25, 1919.

Hon. JAMES GALLIVAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: All honor and glory and success to you in your courageous fight for the National Guard, who, although abused, misused, smashed by the "system," went across and made good. Their magnificent work on the other side must have been quite a disappointment to those who have for years tried hard to discredit them, tried in every conceivable way to fill up the public with the idea that they were untrained, inefficient, a nondependable force, and who tried by unjust discrimination to break up a morale that was unbreakable. I use the term "unjust discrimination" justifiably. There are many proofs of it. One of the early War Department bulletins of 1917 proves this. I have not a copy here with me now and can not quote exactly, but among other things it provided that all officers before being sent across would be required to pass an examination as to their physical fitness, National Guard officers found unfit would be discharged, while Regular Army and National Army officers would be retained in the service. If this is not discrimination against the National Guard officer, I don't know the meaning of the word.

I am one of the victims—discharged for physical unfitness, which consisted of a slight tremor in the right hand; in every other way sound as a bullet. The "disability" had not in the slightest manner affected my work. I have been in the field nearly a year with my regiment and had not had a sick day. The vacancy caused by my discharge was filled by an outside man—some one not connected with the regiment. The rank I held was that of regimental commander, which I had gained after 34 years of continuous service. I enlisted at the age of 20 and was not quite 54 at the time of my discharge. Served as a captain of Infantry during the Spanish-American War; but all that did not count. Was it because of a slight tremor in one hand, or was it because I was a National Guard officer?

I feel as though my life has been blasted, and I know that I must spend the rest of it in trying to explain how it is that my country had no use for me after 34 years of military training, 25 of which as a commissioned officer, and there is no redress, no matter what punishment might be meted out for the crimes and mistakes that have been committed. Nothing, I feel, can possibly right the wrong that has been done me and others. It is too late.

I wish we had more men like yourself, with the courage to tell truths; and I shall pray the Almighty that you may be successful in exposing and fixing the blame for the horrible wrongs and injustices that have been committed.

Sincerely and gratefully, yours,

_____.

Mr. Chairman, I have had something to say about the character of the fighting of the Twenty-sixth Division, and I will here insert in the RECORD a story of its wonderful performances which was issued from the statehouse in Boston recently by the governor of my State. I quote from the Boston Post of January 23:

[From the Boston Post, Jan. 23, 1919.]

WHAT THE TWENTY-SIXTH DID—WAR HISTORY OF NEW ENGLAND'S OWN DIVISION ISSUED BY GOV. COOLIDGE TAKEN FROM WAR DEPARTMENT DATA.

Gov. Coolidge yesterday issued a history of the famous Yankee Twenty-sixth Division told in statistical form, which, diverted of all sentimental and patriotic words, constituted a story which will convince the present and future generations that this division of New England heroes, led by Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, "went through" in a way to make the entire Nation proud of it.

The governor's statement, taken from data supplied Adjt. Gen. Stevens by the War Department, gives in detail those facts which no power on earth could have gotten by the censor prior to November 11, the date the armistice was signed. It shows that the division arrived at Neufchateau in the Vosges department of France on October 11, 1917, and gives the dates of its movements to other departments.

The division struck the front lines at Chemin-des-Dames February 6, and after several months of comparative "quiet" saw active service at Chateau-Thierry, beginning July 25, which continued up to the date of the signing of the armistice.

TOOK 3,148 PRISONERS.

That the division did its "bit" at St. Mihiel is demonstrated by the fact that it captured 48 officers and 2,520 men, or a total of 2,568 enemy. The total number captured by the division in all sectors was 3,148 officers and men.

The capture of 3 heavy artillery guns, 13 light artillery guns, 15 trench mortars, 132 machine guns, and 42 rifles was also included in the division's achievements.

Out of approximately 30,000 men attached to the division, 11,955 were listed among the casualties, including 1,730 killed, 3,624 wounded severely, 2,819 wounded slightly, 3,363 gassed, 283 missing, and 136 prisoners.

From the time the division became "active" on July 18 until the armistice stopped it from improving upon its record it had gained 37 kilometers of ground against the Hun and was going fast at the finish.

The principal battles in which the division participated were: Bois Brule or Apremont, Seicheprey, Flivrey, Xivray-Marvoisin, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and north of Verdun.

The data relative to the division were secured by the adjutant general at the request of the governor. The governor's announcement is as follows:

DIVISION'S MOVEMENTS.

H. Q., March 15, 1918.

[General Order No. 7.]

We regret that our comrades of the 26th Division should leave us in order to fulfill their task elsewhere.

We have been able to appreciate their bravery, their sense of duty and discipline; also their frank comradeship; they carry away our unanimous regrets.

General Edwards has been pleased to consider the 11th Corps as godfather to the 26th Division; the 11th Corps feels proud of the awarded honor, being sure that, wherever he may be sent, the godson shall do credit to the godfather.

[General Order No. 737/A.]

General Passaga, in command of the 32d Army Corps, mentions in the Army corps dispatches.

104th Infantry Regiment, U. S. A., under command of Colonel G. H. Shelton:

"For greatest fighting spirit and self-sacrifice during action of April 10th, 12th, and 13th, 1918. Suffering from very heavy bombardments and attacked by very strong German forces, succeeded in preventing their dangerous advance and with greatest energy reconquered at the point of the bayonet the few ruined trenches which had to be abandoned at the first onset, at the same time making prisoners."

Service memorandum.

The commanding general of the VIIIth Army is happy to pronounce the success of the raid on the Camp du Moulin, carried out during the night of May 30–31, 1918, by the 101st Regiment of American Infantry.

He requests the commanding general of the 32d Army Corps to forward his congratulations for this operation, as well planned as it was energetically conducted, to the commanding general of the 26th American Division.

Secret-service memorandum.

ARMY H. Q., June 17, 1918.

In the course of a powerful raid carried out on June 16, about 3 o'clock, against the sector of the 26th American Division, the Germans penetrated the village of Xivray which was evacuated by our combat group; everywhere else they were thrown back by the determined defense of the occupants, who stuck to their positions.

Shortly afterwards a counterattack, vigorously carried out by elements from two American battallons, drove the Germans out of Xivray, leaving in our hands several prisoners, including an officer.

The commanding general of the VIIIth Army is happy to acknowledge the fine conduct of the American units in the course of this action; the spirit of initiative and general grasp of the situation shown by the decisions of the commanders; the stubbornness in defending and sharpness in attacking shown by the participants.

The commanding general of the 32d Army Corps will be so good as to forward the compliments of the commanding general of the Army to the commanding general of the 26th American Division, requesting the latter to congratulate, in the name of the commanding general of the Army, the officers and men who took part in the action for the fine soldierly qualities of which they have given proof.

General GERARD.

True copy sent to the commanding general of the 26th American Division.

In forwarding the above service memorandum from the commanding general of the VIIIth Army, the commanding general of the 32d Army Corps is happy to add his personal congratulations, which, moreover, are the subject of General Order No. 131, forwarded to all the troops under his command

H. Q., June 18, 1918.

[General Order No. 131.]

On June 16 a strong detachment of 600 Germans, previously selected, reinforced by units from an assault battalion, attacked at daylight the front line of the 26th American Division at Xivray and Seicheprey. The enemy was everywhere thrown back by immediate counterattacks, leaving numerous dead on the terrain and 10 prisoners, including 1 officer.

This brilliant action does the greatest honor to the 26th Division, and particularly to the 103d Regiment, Col. Hume commanding.

This operation shows the unquestionable superiority of the American soldier over the German soldier. It also gives an idea of all that may be expected of these magnificent troops when the entente, in its turn, takes the offensive.

Subject: 103d Regiment.

1. I am directed by the commander in chief to inform you that he has noted with sincere appreciation the excellent work of the 103d Regiment of your division, which inflicted severe losses in killed, wounded, and prisoners in repelling the strong raid attempted by the enemy on the morning of June 16, 1918, on the Xivray sector.

[General Order No. 133.]

At the moment when the 26th Division of Infantry of the U. S. is leaving the 32d French Corps, I salute its colors and thank it for the splendid services it has rendered here to the common cause.

Under the distinguished command of their chief, General Edwards, the high-spirited soldiers of the "Yankee Division" have taught the enemy some bitter lessons at Bois Brule, at Seicheprey, at Xivray-Marvoisin; they have taught him to realize the staunch vigor of the sons of the Great Republic fighting for the world's freedom.

My heartiest good wishes will accompany the "Yankee Division" always in its future combats.

General Passaga commanding the 32d Army Corps.

(Signed) PASSAGA.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, July 11, 1918.

[General Order No. 60.]

1. At the moment that the Twenty-sixth Division takes up its position on its third sector in three months it is fitting and proper that the division commander should take this opportunity to thank and congratulate the officers and men of the Yankee Division on the record that they have achieved since the division actively took its place in the fighting lines of the allies for the common cause.

2. You have been taken from a sector where in three battles you have shown that the blood of New England has not attenuated, and that the same spirit and traditions which your forefathers made glorious at Lexington and at Bunker Hill still survive in the generation which at Bois Brule, Seicheprey, Humbert Plantation, and Xivray have met and defeated the picked troops of the enemy. His four years of experience in active warfare and the ferocity of his methods have not daunted you, and on every occasion where you have been called upon to face him you have distinguished yourself with notable valor and brought credit upon your division and upon the people of New England from which you have come to engage in this righteous conflict.

3. A great honor has been conferred upon the whole division in that the French and American high command has at this time picked your division to come into this critical sector. That you have been so hurried to this sector is the evidence to you all of the opinion of the high command of the mettle of which this division is constituted.

4. The past months in battle have brought men and officers into that close union of confidence and affection which have resulted in the growing morale of this division. Looking back on the past four months, with its spotless record and known achievements, which have been recognized by both France and America, it is with unqualified faith in the future and pride of the past that I see the Twenty-sixth Division go into a new sector, certain in my conviction that the men of New England will prove once more that they are capable of every effort and every sacrifice which the future may demand of them.

C. R. EDWARDS,
Major General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, July 28, 1918.

Germans in retreat from the Marne. Highest praise is given United States division by Gen. Degoutte. "Could not have done better with my best troops." Hard to restrain them. Were so anxious to fight they wished to go too fast.

The following marginal comment on the communiques has been issued: If one wants to judge the offensive spirit which animates the Americans and their tactical methods, one has only to follow in detail the operations of a division since the beginning of our counterattack between Chateau-Thierry and Soissons.

It was on the 18th, at 4 a. m., that the order to take the first line of German positions was received. The American division whose movements we will relate was at that time northwest of Chateau-Thierry, in the Bois de Belleau, at the pivot of the Degoutte army. This division was made up of New England troops and had taken the place of a division which took part in the operations of Belleau and Bouresches, and it wanted to distinguish itself as well as these clite troops. But the divisions placed at the pivot have to advance slowly, according to the progress made by the wings.

On the very first day it was necessary to moderate the ardor of the Americans, who would willingly have gone farther than the first objectives. Indeed, at the signal of the attack, the American troops went with perfect discipline, in rear of the artillery barrage to the Torcy-Belleau-Givry line and the railroad line up to the Bouresches station. They reached this line in one sweep, almost without meeting any resistance, and, excited by their success, they wanted to go farther.

However, it was necessary before continuing the general advance to take Monthiers and the Petret Wood, still strongly occupied by the Germans. There was hard fighting on the part of the French troops on the left to annihilate the resistance of the enemy.

In order to relieve them the Americans, on the evening of the 20th, made an enveloping maneuver which was crowned with success. With splendid valiance they went in one sweep as far as Etrepilly height, the Gonetrie farm, and Halmardiere. It was a model surprise attack, and it was a revelation of American audacity. Notwithstanding the machine-gun barrage and the enemy's islands of resistance they advanced for 2 kilometers, capturing three guns, a big minenwerfer, and numerous machine guns. Moreover, 200 prisoners were taken by the Americans.

"I could not have done better in a similar occasion with my best troops," commented General Degoutte upon learning of this first American success.

The Germans then found themselves in such a disfavorable position in Monthieres that they had to begin a retreat.

On the 21st the whole German line was in retreat and the Chateau-Thierry-Soissons highway was reached. The Americans were cleaning the ground and vigorously pursuing the enemy's rear guard.

On the 22d a battalion of Americans occupied Epieds. There was hard fighting in the village and the enemy opened a violent barrage fire.

The fight was in open country, and on that day it was not possible to take the village entirely. Rather than to sustain heavy losses, the commander of the American division preferred to take his troops to the rear. It was necessary, if the difficulty was to be overcome, to start the surrounding movement again, and on the 23d the Americans sought to enter the Trugny Wood south of Epieds. The Germans strongly opposed this attempt and counterattacked with energy, but they learned at their expense what American tenacity is. Stopped once in the maneuver, the Americans occupied the fringe of the wood on the 24th, entered it deliberately, took a whole company of German pioneers, and continued their advance with such fury that about 3 p. m. they were at the fringes of the Fere Woods and on the same evening had reached the road from Fere-en-Tardenois to Jaulgonne.

This American division has, therefore, realized in three days an advance of as much as 17 kilometers at certain points, fighting continuously night and day, and displaying the finest military qualities. All the liaison services worked perfectly, both at the right and at the left wings and between the units of the division. A discipline which caused the Germans to wonder and admire animated the attacking troops. They were marching with their officers at the head of the column and their bodyguards on the flanks, as the French troops.

The German prisoners were astonished. "We do not see often those who command us," they declare to their captors; "you're lucky; like the French, you are led to the fight by your officers." The French and American high commands work during the action in as close a harmony as the troops.

The general commanding the division in question is a leader of men, broad-minded, precise in his orders, of practical mind, who from the first moment dealt with the problems raised by the operations under way with a mastery which cost dear to the enemy.

These days from the 18th to the 25th give a new and emphatic proof of what the alliance of France and the United States can do on a battlefield.

[General Orders, No. 67.]

HEADQUARTERS TWENTY-SIXTH DIVISION A. E. F.,
France, August 2, 1918.

To the officers and men of the Twenty-sixth Division:

On July 18 you entered, as part of the allied drive against the enemy, upon the offensive, and continued the offensive combat until the major portion of the command was relieved on July 25.

On the assumption of the offensive your position in the line demanded an important and difficult maneuver. Your success in this was immediate and great, and the way in which you executed it elicited high praise from the French Army commander. The eight days from July 18 to 25, marking the first great advance against the enemy, in which American troops bore proportionately a considerable share are sure of historical setting. Your part therein can never be forgotten. In those eight days you carried your line as far as any part of the advance was carried. Torcy, Belleau, Givry, the Bouresches Woods, Rochet Woods, Hill 190 overlooking Chateau Thierry, Etrepilly, Epieds, Trugny, and finally La Fere Woods and the objective, the Jaulgonne-fere-en-Tardenois Road, belong to your arms. You are the recipient of praise, thanks, and congratulations of our Commander in Chief. You went unafraid into the face of the enemy's fire; you forced him to withdraw before you, or to accept the alternative of hand to hand combat, in which you proved yourselves morally and physically his superior; you gave freely and gave much of your strength, and of your blood and your lives, until pushed beyond mere physical endurance, fighting night and day, you still forced yourselves forward, sustained almost by spirit alone.

These things are now part of your own consciousness. Nothing can detract from them. Nothing that I can say can add to them. But I can testify in this way to my pride in commanding such troops, so capable of achieving success in every undertaking; and this testimony I give to each of you gladly and with deep gratitude.

C. R. EDWARDS,
Major General, Commanding.

P. C., July 26, 1918.

Memorandum.

The President of the Republic, during a visit to the VIth Army expressed his satisfaction over the results obtained as well as the proofs of valor and endurance shown by all the units of the Army.

The commanding general of the VIth Army takes pleasure in communicating to the troops of his army the congratulations of the President of the Republic.

GENERAL DEGOUTTE.

P. C., July 26, 1918.

Memorandum.

The commanding general of the VIth Army brings to the attention of the troops of the Army the following address received from the mayors of the arrondissement of Meaux, in meeting assembled, on the 20th of July, 1918:

"The mayors of the arrondissement of Meaux, in meeting assembled, on the 20th of July, 1918, are happy to acknowledge the great victory of the VIth Army, which, at the time of the Battle of the Marne, had just saved their commune from the invasion which was threatening them.

"Send to the valiant troops of the VIth Army the most earnest expression of their gratitude and admiration."

THE PRESIDENT OF THE CONGRESS OF MAYORS,
G. HUGEL, Mayor of Meaux,
Deputy from the Dept. of Seine and Marne.

The commanding general of the VIth Army takes pleasure in transmitting these congratulations to the troops of his army.

GENERAL DEGOUTTE,
Army, July 29, 1918.

[VIth Army No. 2353/3.]

From: General Degoutte, commanding the VIth Army.
To: General Edwards, commanding the 26th American Division.

The operations carried out by the 26th American Division from July 18 to July 24 demonstrated the fine soldierly qualities of this unit and the worth of its leader, General Edwards.

Cooperating in the attack north of the Marne, the 26th Division fought brilliantly on the line Torcy-Belleau, at Monthiers, Epieds, and Trugy, and in the forest of Fere, advancing more than 15 kilometers in depth in spite of the desperate resistance of the enemy.

I take great pleasure in communicating to General Edwards and his valiant division this expresison of my great esteem together with my heartiest congratulations for the manner in which they have served the common cause.

DEGOUTTE.

By command of Major General Edwards:

W. S. BOWEN,
Lieut. Colonel, G. S., Acting Chief of Staff.

Official:
C. A. STEVENS,
Adj. Gen. Adjutant.

[VIth Army.]

P. C., August 9, 1918.

General Order.

Before the great offensive of July 18, 1918, the American troops forming a part of the VIth French Army distinguished themselves by taking from the enemy the Bois de la Brigade de Marine and the village of Vaux, stopping his offensive on the Marne and at Fossoy.

Since then they have taken a most glorious part in the second Battle of the Marne, rivaling the French troops in ardor and gallantry. In 20 days of incessant fighting they liberated numerous French villages and made, over difficult terrain, an advance of 40 kilometers, which carried them beyond the Vesle.

Their glorious advance is marked by names which, in the future, will make illustrious the military history of the United States: Torcy, Belleau, Plateau of Etrepilly, Epieds, le Charmel the Ourcq, Seringes-et-Nesles, Sergy, the Vesle, and Fismes.

The new divisions, under fire for the first time, showed themselves worthy of the old fighting traditions of the Regular Army. They had the same ardent desire to whip the Boche and that discipline which always insures the carrying out of orders of their commander, whatever be the difficulties to be overcome or the sacrifice to be made.

The magnificent results obtained are due to the energy and skillfulness of their commanders and to the bravery of the soldiers. I am proud to have commanded such troops.

The commanding general of the VIth Army. DEGOUTTE.

G. H. Q., A. E. F., France, August 28, 1918.

It fills me with pride to record in General Orders a tribute to the service and achievements of the First and Third Corps, comprising the 1st, 2d, 3d, 4th, 26th, 32d, and 42d Divisions of the A. E. F.

You came to the battle field at the crucial hour of the allied cause. For almost four years the most formidable army the world had as yet seen had pressed its invasion of France and stood threatening its capital. At no time had that army been more powerful or menacing than when, on July 15th, it struck again to destroy in one great battle the brave men opposed to it and to enforce its brutal will upon the world and civilization.

Three days later, in conjunction with our allies, you counterattacked. The allied armies gained a brilliant victory that marks the turning point of the war. You did more than give your brave allies the support to which as a nation our faith was pledged. You proved that our altruism, our pacific spirit, our sense of justice have not blunted our virility or our courage. You have shown that American initiative and energy are as fit for the test of war as for the pursuits of peace. You have justly won the unstinted praise of our allies and the eternal gratitude of our countrymen.

We have paid for our success in the lives of many of our brave comrades. We shall cherish their memory always, and claim for our history and literature their bravery, achievements, and sacrifice.

This order will be read to all organizations at the first assembly formation after its receipt.

JOHN J. PERSHING,
General, Commander in Chief.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, Sept. 15, 1918.

1. The following letter is published for the information of all those concerned:

RUPT-EN-WOEVRE, September 13, 1918.

SIR: Your gallant 26th American Division has just set us free. Since Sept. 1914, the barbarians have held the Heights of the Meuse, have foully murdered three hostages from Mouilly, have shelled Rupt, and on July 23, 1915, forced its inhabitants to scatter to the four corners of France.

I, who remain at my little listening post upon the advice of my bishop, feel certain, sir, that I do but speak for Monseigneur Ginistry, lord bishop of Verdun; my parishioners of Rupt, Mouilly, and Geincourt, and the people of this vicinity in conveying to you and your associates the heartfelt and unforgettable gratitude of all.

Several of your comrades lie at rest in our truly Christian and French soil.

Their ashes shall be cared for as if they were our men. We shall cover their graves with flowers and shall kneel by them as their own families would do, with a prayer to God to reward them with eternal glory, these heroes fallen on the field of honor, and to bless the 26th Division and generous America.

Be pleased, sir, to accept the expression of my profound respect.

A. LECLERC,
Curé of Rupt-en-Woevre.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
Sept. 18, 1918.

1. The following telegrams from the President of the United States, the commander in chief of the allied armies, and the commander in chief of the American Expeditionary Forces are published to the command:

WASHINGTON, Sept. 14, 1918.

General JOHN J. PERSHING,
A. E. F., France:

Accept my warmest congratulations on the brilliant achievements of the Army under your command. The boys have done what we expected of them, and done it in the way we most desire. We are deeply proud of them and of their chief. Please convey to all concerned my grateful and affectionate thanks.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.
SEPTEMBER 14, 1918.

COMMANDING GENERAL FIRST ARMY.

MY DEAR GENERAL: The First American Army under your command on this day has won a magnificent victory by a maneuvre as skillfully prepared as it was brilliantly executed. I extend to you, as well as to the officers and to the troops under your command, my warmest congratulations.

(Signed) MARSHAL FOCH.
SEPTEMBER 15, 1918.

COMMANDING GENERAL FIFTH CORPS:

Please extend to the officers and men of the Fifth Corps my sincere congratulations for the part they have taken in the first battle of the American Army. Our successes have thrilled our countrymen and evoked the enthusiasm of all allies. Will you convey to the command my cordial appreciation of their work? I am proud of the accomplishment.

(Signed) PERSHING.

By command of Major General Edwards.

[General Orders, No. 82.]

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, September 28, 1918.

To the Twenty-sixth Division:

1. It again becomes my duty and pleasure to congratulate this division on the important part it played in the battle of the St. Mihiel salient September 12 to 14, 1918. Our task was to attack on the historic and hitherto impregnable ground near Les Eparges, where in the past so many thousands of French lives have been sacrificed.

In front of us the fortifications were manned by Germans, with a no man's land on difficult slopes, churned and pitted by four years of shelling and with a mass of wire and other obstacles from trench to trench.

The three Infantry regiments in line—the 101st, the 103, and the 104th, with the brigade machine-gun units—met a determined resistance. The enemy machine-gun fire was intense. The artillery, without daylight registration, did well, during that part of the night allowed for preparation, in cutting breaches through this mass of wire, which were completed by the Infantry before and during the attack.

The determined and effective methods of the Infantry in the attack on the machine-gun nests, the deliberate locating of these nests, and the subsequent infiltration process used in overcoming these nests; the bold dashes wherever opportunity offered, in one case resulting in the 2d Battalion of the 103d Infantry rushing and capturing a hostile battalion of greater strength before the enemy could raise his head; the fine liaison and cooperation of the artillery; the expedition with which follow-up roads were constructed by the engineers; the enterprise of the medical, supply, and other auxiliary units—all combined to prove that its wide service and experience have made this a veteran division.

I was pleased with all elements of the division.

2. By dark on the 12th the principal resistance of the enemy had been overcome. Then came the order to close the gap between our forces on the north and our troops advancing from the south in order to prevent the escape of the enemy from St. Mihiel. Our mission then was to reach Vigneulles before daylight and there establish contact with troops of our Fourth Corps.

The 102d Infantry, in the division reserves, which had followed the advance closely throughout the battle in readiness for any such emergency, was ordered to spare neither energy nor blood to accomplish this mission. The whole division was pushed forward through the night, the rest of the 51st Infantry Brigade following the dash of the 102d Infantry, and the 52d Infantry Brigade moving out on the left rear of the 102d Infantry, with the towns on the plain in the northwest of Hattonchatel, to include St. Maurice, as objectives.

In less than one-half hour after the receipt of this order the 102d Infantry and the 102d Machine Gun Battalion were on the march, led and inspired by the regimental and battalion commanders in person. They marched over 9 kilometers on the only existing road, through a dense forest, in an unknown and hostile country infested with the enemy, losing for the time being liaison both to the right and left. The leading elements, passing through Hattonchatel, reached Vigneulles before 2 o'clock in the morning, took complete possession of these two towns by 3 o'clock, and, pushing out, occupied Creue and Heudicourt and blocked the roads leading from the southwest, while sending patrols farther into the plain to gain contact with the American forces coming from the south.

This advance force captured many prisoners, much ammunition, stores of all kinds, and released many captive civilians from St. Mihiel that the enemy in his hasty retreat was forced by the 102d Infantry to abandon.

With this advance force were the entire 102d Infantry, 3 companies of the 102d Machine Gun Battalion, and part of the 101st Machine Gun Battalion from the division reserve. This last part, abandoning its motors, marched 14 kilometers carrying its guns by hand the entire way.

By the morning the whole command had taken possession of all the towns in the sector of its advance and was impatient to pursue the enemy across the Hindenburg line.

4. The towns of St. Remy, Dommartin, Thillot, St. Maurice, Billy-sous-les-Cotes, Vieville-sous-les-Cotes, Hattonchatel, Hannonville, Vigneulles, Creue, Heudicourt, Deuxnouds, Wadonville, Avillers, and Butgneville, as well as the entire length of the Grande Tranchee de Calone, with a gain of 14 kilometers, belong to your arms.

The division captured about 2,400 prisoners, large stores of supplies and ammunition, horses and motor transportation, and about 50 guns.

I am proud of you. You are a shock division.

C. R. EDWARDS,
Major General, Commanding.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, October 10, 1918.

1. The following letters are published to the command:

[2nd Colonial Corps Staff No. 29.329.]

Hq., October 3, 1918.

From: General Blondlat, commanding 2nd Colonial Corps.
To: The Commander in Chief (thru channels, general commanding 2nd army).
Subject: Proposition for citation in army orders in favor of the 1st Battalion, 102nd Regiment of Infantry, U. S.

I have the honor to send you the report which I had the general commanding the 26th U. S. Division to make on the very hard and glorious combat which this division engaged September 26, 1918.

The 2nd Colonial Corps had received orders to carry out extensive raids to attract and fix the attention of the enemy: "General Order No. 20, Sept. 20, 1918, of the general commanding the First U. S. Army. The 2nd Colonial Corps will hold the front of Bois le Chauffour inclusive to Mesnil exclusive.

"The 2nd Colonial Corps will make a demonstration along its front, launching artillery bombardment as well as making extensive raids at H house."

The dimensions and duration of the raid executed by the 26th U. S. Division certainly deceived the enemy as to our intentions; the losses suffered by the troops taking part in this operation were fairly severe, but there is no doubt that those suffered by the Germans were much more severe.

The spirit of sacrifice and magnificent courage displayed by the troops of the 26th U. S. Division on this occasion were certainly not in vain; they seem to me worthy of recompense and praise; therefore, I direct the general commanding this division to address propositions to me on this subject.

I earnestly request that the 1st Battalion of the 102nd Infantry be cited in army orders on the following grounds:

"Picked troops who, trained by Colonel Hiram J. Bearss, who led the attack in the first line, carried out brilliantly and with splendid energy a particularly delicate operation; engaged battle with a superb dash; won a victory after a violent combat over an enemy who was both stubborn and superior in numbers, entrenched in concreted shelters, strongly supported by numerous machine guns and powerful artillery, and who made use of in the course of the action infamous methods of warfare; heriocally carried out their mission in capturing in heavy fighting a village where they maintained themselves all day in spite of four enemy counterattacks and thus furnished the finest example of courage, abnegation, and self-sacrifice."

I request further that the officers and men mentioned in General Edward's report receive each and severally the rewards suggested for them by name.

(Signed) BLONDLAT.

H. Q., October 7, 1918.

From: General Blondlat, commanding the 2nd Colonial Army Corps.
To: The commanding general, 26th Division (American).

At this time, when the 26th Division is leaving the zone of the 2nd Colonial Army Corps, I wish to forward to General Edwards and to his gallant division the expression of my complete satisfaction, my best wishes for its successes to come, and my hearty thanks for the brilliant services in the attack on the St. Mihiel salient.

Although the 26th Division was only under my orders for a short time, I discovered on the part of all, both officers and men, those qualities of discipline, ardor, and esprit de corps which characterize picked troops.

I thought it buf my duty to call to the attention of the French high command the fine conduct under fire of your men in the glorious battle of September 26; they demonstrated once again their high qualities of energy and spirit of sacrifice. I have requested that citations be bestowed upon the brave men whose conduct has been specially reported to me.

(Signed) BLONDLAT.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, October 23, 1918.

1. The division commander extends to the commanding officer 51st Infantry Brigade and the officers and men of the following organizations his hearty congratulations on their great success in the operations of this date for the capture of the Heights of the Meuse in the region of Le Houppy Bois and Belleau Bois:

51st Infantry Brigade.
101st Infantry.
102d Infantry.
101st Machine Gun Battalion.
102d Machine Gun Battalion.
Detachment, 101st Field Signal Battalion.
Detachment, 101st Sanitary Train.
281st Aero Squadron (French).
Balloon No. 25 (French).
51st Artillery Brigade.
1st Battalion, 211th Field Artillery (French).

2. The attack, as planned, was difficult of execution and only to be attempted by trained troops. You carried it out like the veterans you are and with a dash and valor worthy of the best traditions of the 26th Division.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIV., A. E. F.,
France, October 24, 1918.

Extract.

1. To the artillery of the 26th Division is due my expression of admiration for its efficiency and aggressive fighting qualities and for its indefatigable support of our fine infantry. Artillery can desire no higher tribute than the conscious fact that it has gained the confidence, reliance, and thanks of the Infantry.

2. During more than 8 months of fighting service the spirit of loyalty displayed by every officer and man of the 51st Artillery Brigade toward his duty, toward the Yankee division, and toward the division commander, has been fine.

3. The record of the 51st Artillery Brigade in the 2d Battle of the Marne is glorious. It went with, supported, and protected the Infantry in its advance of 18½ kilometers by Chateau-Thierry, and afterwards in succession two other divisions in the advance from the Marne to the Vesle for a period of 18 days, between July 18 and August 4, with a gain of over 40 kilometers. It is a record of which the entire division and our country justly may be proud.

I congratulate and thank the Art. Brig. of the Yankee Div.

[17th Army Corps Staff, 1st Bureau.]

HEADQUARTERS, 24 Oct., 1918.

General Claudel, commanding the 17th Army Corps.
To the Commanding General 26th Division.

GENERAL: The reputation of your division preceded it here far ahead.

To all its titles of glory gained in fierce struggles, and only recently at the signal of Hattonchatel, it has added on the 23d of October a page which perhaps is more modest, but still does it great honor.

In a few hours, as at a maneuver, it has gained all the objectives assigned to it in the difficult sector of the Woods of Houppy, Etrayes, and Belleau.

This operation is evidence, indeed, of superior instruction, mobility, and will.

I do not know how to thank you sufficiently for your assistance, dear General, and it is my great desire to express to you all our grateful admiration for your splendid division which thus has added its name to all of those who have fought to hurl the enemy back from the outskirts of Verdun.

H. CLAUDEL.

HEADQUARTERS 26TH DIVISION, A. E. F.,
France, November 17, 1918.

1. The following letter from the commanding general Second Colonial Army Corps (French) is published to the command for the information of all concerned:

HEADQUARTERS, November 14, 1918.

From: General Claudel, commanding general 2nd Colonial Army Corps.
To: General Bamford, commanding general 26th American Division.

MY DEAR GENERAL: At this time, when the 26th American Division is leaving the sector of the 2nd Colonial Army Corps (formerly the 17th French Army Corps), I especially desire to express to you the complete satisfaction it has given me since October 15th last.

The 26th Division has made its entry into line by attacking in the difficult and long since fortified region of the Bois d'Haumont and of the Bois d'Ormont. In each case this division showed the fine qualities of vigor and dash which are characteristic of it.

Later it was engaged in the most severe fighting for the capture of the henceforth famous woods of Etrayes, Belleau, and Ormont, without ever considering its hardships or its losses.

At the same time it made a remarkable and successful effort for the improvement of the road system, so vital for the conduct of the operations.

The conditions under which the fighting took place, the weather, and the communications were most often very poor, while the enemy, determined to hold positions which were to him indispensable, did not spare his shells of all caliber or his gas shells.

The 26th Division finally received the well-deserved reward of throwing the enemy back into the plain at the moment when the final victory was won.

In the name of the 2d Colonial Army Corps and their French comrades, I desire you to extend for me to your fine troops and to the various staffs and services my thanks for the generous and devoted cooperation which they have never ceased to render.

I shall not forget, my deal general, our so very cordial relations, and I ask you to believe in the expression of my sincere and grateful feelings.

(Signed) CLAUDEL.

I. 1. Officers and enlisted men of the 26th Division, I congratulate you upon your success in the war which has just been brought to a victorious end.

2. From your entry into the battle line on February 7, 1918, at Chemin des Dames as a division of recruits until the cessation of hostilities on November 11, 1918, when you laid down your arms fighting in the front line as a veteran division, you have shown yourselves worthy sons of the country that gave you birth.

3. Bois Brule, Seicheprey, Xivray-Marvoisin, Torcy, Belleau, Givry, Bourseches, Hill 190, Epieds, Trugny, St. Mihiel Salient, Bois d'Haumont, Bois Belleau, Bois d'Ormont, Bois de Ville are indelibly written on your banners.

(Signed) F. E. BAMFORD,
Brigadier General, Commanding.

Mr. Chairman, when I addressed the House a few weeks ago I referred to the fact that the commander of this division, Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, after participating in combat with his men and assisting them in achieving the wonderful results which are mentioned in the foregoing orders, had been sent back to the States in October, 1918, and that no good reason had been assigned for his being relieved. Recently in a Boston newspaper Gen. Edwards told of his pride in his organization and reviewed the methods he had adopted in bringing the Twenty-sixth Division to the heights it reached in its many campaigns in France. Listen to the splendid story of a brave American soldier. Gen. Edwards says:

In, I hope, the pardonable pride that I took in the organization and the record of the Yankee Division I have never consciously made invidious comparison as to any other division. In my various speeches I always say that the Yankee Division is typical of other American divisions; that I knew personally about the Yankee Division and therefore could speak especially of it.

I do claim that it had an esprit, a capitalization of tradition, which developed into a soul which took the place, and splendidly took the place, of the lack of time in which to give it the training that all Regular officers heretofore have always thought necessary.

It was the first division under the American flag in the new organization entirely organized, and therefore the first completely filled up and organized division to arrive in France.

NEVER FAILED IN THE TEST.

No division was put to a higher test, and it never failed.

It is the only division which sailed as a whole and whose first concentration was in France.

All of its units did not arrive until November, and a few batteries of Artillery much later. It went into line in the first part of February.

There were few work troops in France, and during its training period large drafts from its battalions necessarily had to be detailed for unloading cars, digging sewers, building hospitals, and all the other things that were necessary at the time. It had very little transportation, it underwent unusual conditions and handicaps that could not be foreseen or could not be avoided.

In the short training period of from two to three and one-half months, with all these handicaps, it did not complain. Its fighting record is known throughout France and is commencing to be known in the United States.

NOT NATIONAL GUARD DIVISION.

It is not a National Guard division, so called, and ceased to be a National Guard division before the above excellent order was issued. It was, and now is, a division of the Army of the United States, and its officers are officers of the Army of the United States.

I never allowed the words "National Guard," "Regular," or "National Army" to be used in my division.

Battles and war service in the face of the enemy, the supreme test of war, were what selected, so far as lay in my power, its lieutenants, its captains, its majors, and its colonels. One or two battles picked out these officers, and there was not question as to their selection. The controlling element was leadership, the greatest factor in choice for command, and frequently the factor that is given the least credit in military schools and colleges.

It is wonderful and informing what can be done in six months with 30,000 men if politics, prejudice, and favoritism are eliminated and the only thought is patriotism and service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like very much to supplement the remarks made by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] in reference to the officers and the men of the Twenty-sixth Division. He has stated the case with great accuracy and expresses the opinion of the people of New England relative to both the officers and the men.

I asked for time to call attention to another matter worthy of the attention of this House which appears to me to be an abuse of the franking privilege on the part of the Comptroller of the Currency, when he sends out to every bank in the United States a circular of notification that he has had some sort of trouble with a newspaper correspondent and in which circular he supports his claim for reappointment and reconfirmation upon the part of the Senate.

This statement reached me this morning from an official of a bank in my district. It had a number on the envelope showing that it was the general mailing list of the Comptroller of the Currency, and I only have time to read one or two very brief sentences showing that the franking privilege is used for the personal support of the gentleman himself. It seems to me a very improper action on the part of a Treasury official. It is headed "John Skelton Williams, the Comptroller of the Treasury, to-day gave to the press the following statement." And in that statement he refers to the fact that he had called to his office a newspaper correspondent whom, he says, has written matter for the press asking that he should not be confirmed. He says that—

A memorandum had been addressed with a view of conducting a campaign to oppose the confirmation of the Comptroller of the Treasury in the event of his renomination. He (the newspaper correspondent) declined to affirm or deny his authorship of the memorandum.

Has not a representative of the press a right to send to his paper such matter as he may see fit, and does the Comptroller of the Currency have the right to call that man to his office to explain such correspondence and then send under the official frank of the Treasury Department such a letter as this of personal support of himself to every bank in the United States? The gentleman from Illinois a few moments ago called attention to the clogging of the mails from the soldiers. But if the use of the frank of the Comptroller of the Currency clogs the mails in any way for his personal aggrandizement, can not he stop it and give our soldier boys a chance to hear from the folks at home? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER].

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to supplement also the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts by calling the attention of the committee to another crime of the present administration of the Democratic Party. In my State, in southwest Missouri, we have a great industry down there, the zinc industry. Democratic tariff laws have seriously affected that industry, and there is pending now in this Congress a bill presented by myself to levy a tax of 2 cents per pound upon the content of all zinc ores. I am in receipt this morning of a telegram from the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri in reference to this serious condition, which I ask to have the Clerk read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., January 31, 1919.

Hon. L. C. DYER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Am instructed by the Missouri House of Representatives to inform you that there has been offered into and adopted by the house the following resolutions:

Whereas the zinc-mining industry of southwest Missouri is the greatest metal-mining industry in the entire State; and

Whereas that industry is now crippled to the extent of the closing down of 95 per cent of all the mines in said district, said closing down of the mines being occasioned by the vast importations of zinc ore into the United States from foreign countries, amounting in the last four years ending June 30, 1918, to 825,000 tons, being approximately three times the normal prewar production of the entire Joplin district, including Kansas, Oklahoma, and Missouri; and

Whereas there are now approximately 350,000 tons of zinc ore on the docks in Australia awaiting shipment; and

Whereas Mexico has a potential power of production of at least 150,000 tons annually, which must find its market in the United States; and

Whereas zinc-ore concentrates have also been imported into the United States in the last three or four years from 15 different countries, representing every continent and grand division of the world: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Missouri, That we believe it to be the patriotic duty of the Legislature of the State of Missouri to memorialize the Congress of the United States by special resolution asking that there be at once incorporated into the pending revenue bill a provision providing for a protective tariff of 2 cents per pound on the metallic contents of zinc ore, in order to keep out further importations of zinc ore, and allow the zinc-mining industry of the United States to live and be again built up to its normal condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may finish the reading of it; it is only a line or two.

Mr. MANN. The time for general debate was fixed in the House by unanimous consent. Extend your remarks.

Mr. FOSTER. The time was fixed in the House.

Mr. DYER. But it will only take a half minute; it is only a line or two. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. If Democratic Members see fit to stop the reading when there is only a line to read——

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the time can not be extended, it being fixed in the House.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I object. Let the gentleman make the point of order that there is no quorum.

Mr. DYER. I make it.

Mr. FOSTER. Make it; nobody cares.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HENSLEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15219) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, and that 263 Members answered to their names—a quorum—and presented therewith a list of the absentees for insertion in the Journal and RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The committee will resume its sitting.

The committee resumed its session, with Mr. HENSLEY in the chair.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield nine minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, upon the question that has been discussed for a few minutes so eloquently and well by the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], and when he asked the question what could be done, I think I suggested a complete answer. We have not the time to repeat the outrages that are being perpetrated upon the young men of this country who, under the law and under the rules, are entitled to discharge. The Democratic Party now has it in its power to pass a resolution. I have not any pride of opinion about it. They can pass their own resolution, and, when you adjourn sine die at the close of this Congress, a nonpartisan committee can sit here, so that we can go home and can telegraph to some civil branch of the Government to get some sort of remedy for the boys we represent. If that is done, there will be no question about your ability to pass your bills and adjourn. If it is not, there may be some question raised, for, so far as I am concerned, I regard the treatment of these boys as one of the most important things before the present Congress.

I have not time now to recite the letters that have come to me within the last 24 hours, but I will insert in the RECORD word that comes from constituents of mine, very much like the last one that I put in the RECORD, protesting against their boy being sent to Siberia. Now, Mr. Chairman, we have in Siberia 15,000 American boys. In one place we have 221 United States officers, 10,042 enlisted men, consisting of Infantry, Signal Corps, Medical, Ordnance, and Quartermaster troops, and in western Russia, at Archangel, there is a total of 5,419 officers and men, or more than 15,000 men in all. What are they fighting for?

My resolution, which I have introduced, calls upon the Congress of the United States to exercise its constitutional power. For two long years you have sat here—and I say it with no feeling of disrespect—as rubber stamps. You have not dared to exercise any of your constitutional powers. You have not used them. The General Staff has run all the questions of military power. Everything they have asked you have given them. Most of us have consented to it. But here now, in the hour of peace, with 15,000 American boys dying and fighting in Russia, 500 miles from where we have a pound of scrap iron, with the pretense that they were sent there to defend American goods and American property, we have lost 50 men and 5 officers within the past week. They were not defending American property. They were more than 500 miles from Archangel, where that battle occurred; and they are fighting and dying in the snow.

And the Constitution you swore you would uphold and defend provides that the Congress of the United States shall make rules and regulations governing the Army and the Navy of the United States. [Applause.] And I want to know which one of you will stand up here now on either side of this Chamber and say that you approve of our men fighting and dying, when you know as well as I do that the war is over? There is no German menace in Russia. The Bolsheviki menace is no worse than the menace of the Czar. Which side are you fighting on?

Mr. OVERMYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I have but little time.

Mr. OVERMYER. I thought the gentleman challenged this side to ask questions.

Mr. MASON. Make it short.

Mr. OVERMYER. I was going to inquire whether the gentleman was opposed also to sending our troops to France in the first place?

Mr. MASON. I was not opposed to sending the troops to France; but I was in favor, if you want to take up ancient history, of sending volunteers, and we have sent more volunteers than drafted men and they have made the best soldiers, too. They have all made good soldiers. But even if I was opposed, and even if I was wrong, have you the courage to exercise your power as a Member of Congress in making rules and regulations for the Army and Navy and not say by your silence that you are in favor of slaughtering American boys in the snows of Russia and Siberia? And for what? No man answers for this administration.

My constituents have a right to ask me questions. I have received a letter this morning, signed by the father and mother of a soldier. It is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., January 20, 1919.

To the Hon. WM. E. MASON,
Congressman at Large.

DEAR SIR: We have a son who was conscripted supposedly to fight the German menace. My son was a Christian, home-loving, God-fearing, obeying the command to honor father and mother, the greatest comfort to us in the evening of life. Congressman MASON, we beg of you tell us why should he be sent to Siberia? What was the great need; we want to know? We are patriotic, so is he. Willing to do every duty required by the United States for the United States. But what is so important in Siberia that my son and hundreds of other United States boys must be exiled to fight for what? We can not understand. We ask you, who represent us, why was he sent there? When will he be sent home? We ask you in the name of justice will you use the great influence you possess to have them speedily sent home?

Most respectfully, yours,

JOHN JOHNSON,
EMMA JOHNSON,
Parents.

There is no more reason for American boys to sacrifice their lives in the snows of Siberia to-day, 500 miles away from where we have any American property, than there is for us to get into a fight here upon this floor, not a bit. [Applause.] There is no justification of law for it. And you must pass on this, gentlemen. You are Members of Congress. The Democratic Party is waiting for some signal from somewhere as to what to do. They are waiting for signals, perhaps, from Paris, as to what action to take or whether to take any or not. But are the Republican Members and the Republican Party to be silent on this subject? Have you constituents there? Have you a son there, fighting 500 miles from Archangel, without knowing what they are fighting for? What are the two contesting factions in Russia to-day? They are the royal party, that wants to put royalty back on the throne, and, on the other side, the wicked, as we say, Bolsheviki, who has not a real, genuine rule for government. We furnished these men and this money to help Kerensky. And now I am going to tell you what I think.

I do not know whether you will like it or not, for I have not the proof, but I am going to get the truth if I can. I charge as to the money that we have furnished to help win this war that a large share of it, running into millions of dollars, instead of being sent to feed the starving Russians, to-day is held by the Russian minister in the United States and is being used to pay the interest upon the bonds held by Morgan & Co. to their clients before America went into this war. I believe that. I have not the proof, but I expect to get it if you will give me a chance to examine the men who are handling the money in this country.

Then you are put to the question of your boys fighting and dying over there—50 killed last week—for the reason——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MASON. I would like to have three minutes more.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. MASON. But assuming that I may be mistaken about that, why not pass this resolution, bringing them home? There is no war in Russia between the United States and Russia. The war was between Germany and the United States. There is not a German within a thousand miles of any of our troops who are there. I tell you that our boys are being used to carry out the dreams and the theories of politicians in that country, and, so far as I am concerned, I see no difference between the Bolsheviki and the Czar. The Bolsheviki can not make a worse government than they had under the Czar. [Applause.] And, so far as I am concerned, I will never consent that a drop of blood of any boy in America shall be shed to help the politicians over there. [Applause.]

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Michigan has a large number of soldiers in the vicinity of Archangel. Many of those men came from my district. I want to know if the gentleman has been able to ascertain who is responsible for sending our boys over there?

Mr. MASON. Only what I have seen in the reports of the newspapers and the statements that the State Department sent out, that they were sent there to protect American property from the Germans, with whom we were at war. We are not at war with them now. They have been under the command of Japanese and British generals, and Lloyd George has withdrawn the English troops and notified the English people that no more English soldiers shall be sent there. I say either give a million men to defend those 15,000 or else, if we are wrong, let us be manly enough to come out of there and let the politicians of Russia settle their own game of politics without the shedding of any more American blood. [Applause.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him to say that there are several boys from my district and State there. I have received many letters of complaint and protest from their families similar to those referred to by my friend from Illinois. I have permission to put some of these in the RECORD, and I shall shortly do so. I congratulate the gentleman upon his forceful statement of the situation. I agree with every word he says about this shameful proceeding and thank him for uttering them. [Applause.]

Mr. MASON. I thank the gentlemen. My time is about expired. You, gentlemen, can make war. You are the only power that can make war under the Constitution that we have sworn to support. You can order the troops out of Russia. Nobody likes to see the American flag retreat, but the American flag is just as beautiful moving one way as another. When it came down in Cuba I thought it was the handsomest flag in the world. Although it was coming down, it was keeping the promise of a great people. You have sent 15,000 boys into what may be a shambles, a slaughter pen, amid the snows of Russia, and you have no excuse for keeping them there except that party leaders intend to fight those who stand by the soviet, to fight against the Bolsheviki, and are in favor of establishing a Czar of all the Russias. [Applause.]

The following to-day:

PARIS, January 31.

Whatever forces may be sent to Turkey for garrisoning purposes, there will be no American troops among them, it developed to-day. It is pointed out that their use for this purpose would be inappropriate, as the United States has never been at war with Turkey.

Are we at war with Russia? You know we are not. If we are, let us command our own forces and send 2,000,000 men to uphold our flag, and not leave a handful of brave boys to be slaughtered in the bloody politics of the Bolsheviki and the Czar.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MASON. I append, Mr. Chairman, the resolution I have introduced:

Whereas the Constitution of the United States provides that the Congress of the United States shall have exclusive power to declare war, and also provides that the Congress shall have power "to make rules for the Government for the regulation of the land and naval forces"; and

Whereas there is now in the Siberian expedition 221 United States officers and 10,042 enlisted men, consisting of Infantry, Signal Corps, Medical, Ordnance, and Quartermaster troops, and in western Russia (Archangel) there are a total of 5,419 officers and men, comprising Infantry, Engineer, and Medical troops; and

Whereas the sending of United States troops to Russia by the Commander in Chief would be without authority of law except to protect American lives and property, and any intervention on the part of the United States to assist any political party in the formation of a government would be a usurpation of power on the part of the Executive; and

Whereas the war between the United States and Germany has ceased under the terms of the armistice and there can be no possible need of protecting American supplies in Russia; and

Whereas there is a great state of unrest and anxiety in the minds of the American people whose sons have been sent to Russia and a great state of anxiety in the minds of the people whose sons are overseas for fear their sons will be ordered into the political fight in Russia: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States is hereby directed to order forthwith all troops of the United States out of Russia, and in the meantime, while the troops are being removed from Russia, the Commander in Chief is directed to cease and desist from taking any part in the controversies of political factions now seeking political supremacy in Russia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, a great deal has been said upon the subject of allotments, and one criticism after another has been hurled at the several departments of the Government. I am in receipt of a great many letters upon all kinds of subjects relating to the war, most of them abounding in complaints which are worthy of immediate attention and adjustment. I am now in receipt of a letter that is somewhat different in its nature from many that have come to my notice and touches upon subjects that up to this time have not been brought to my attention; and I have thought best to read the letter for the information of the Members of the House, and in the hope that relief may soon be granted to the anxious parents who are directly interested:

ALTOONA, PA., January 17, 1919.

Hon. JOHN M. ROSE,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: My son, Corpl. Henry U. Brandt, Company G, One hundred and Tenth Infantry, was killed in action July 30, 1918, at Courmont, France. Before he died he had made an allotment to me for $25 a month. Since his death I have been receiving this allotment every month, and up to the present time I have checks amounting to $125. I did not have any of these checks cashed for the reason that I do not think I am entitled to this allotment, since he is dead.

These checks are coming to me from the Quartermaster General's Department, and the volume number of the checks is 1240747. I wrote three letters to the Quartermaster Department calling its attention to this. In reply to these letters they stated that they have no record that there is an allotment by this soldier made in my favor, and that if he is dead I am no longer entitled to the allotment. They further said they could not give me any direction as to what to do with the checks since they have no record of this allotment. They also directed me to write to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Treasury Department, Allotment and Allowance Division, Stopped Payment Section.

I wrote to this address, called their attention to the matter, and asked what I am to do with the checks; but from this department thus far I have received no reply, but the checks are still coming, I having received one again yesterday. As I do not feel I am entitled to this allotment, and as I know there is a severe penalty for receiving money of this kind illegally, and as the War Department does not seem to make any effort to correct it, I thought I would write to you and kindly ask you to look into this matter and try to have it adjusted in some way.

Also, thus far, I have not received my son's back pay. I sent in my application blanks about the middle of September. I received a reply that the same were received, but thus far the matter has not been adjusted. I also wish you would look into this.

Again, I have not received my son's personal effects, although he is dead nearly six months. Immediately after I received word of my son's death, at the direction of the War Department, I wrote to the Personal Effects Depot, France, directing them where to send those effects, but thus far I have not received them nor have they written me a single line about it. I am in a quandary to know how this matter stands. I wish you would likewise look into this matter and see whether you can bring about a satisfactory adjustment.

Affairs must be in a terrible chaotic state at Washington, otherwise such things would not occur. It is certainly exasperating and humiliating for the families that have given their sons to make the supreme sacrifice on the altar of the country and then to get such treatment as this from those in authority. It is surely no wonder the people are dissatisfied.

Trusting that you can adjust this matter for me, and thanking you in advance for your favor, with kindest regards, I am,

Yours, sincerely.

CHARLES H. BRANDT.

I have been thinking, gentlemen, that unless something is done to correct these glaring errors the people might do with some of us as was done with ex-President Taft, according to the story told the other evening in an able address delivered by him on the league of nations. I was very much impressed with what he said, and I may say that it was my first opportunity to listen to the distinguished ex-President. In the course of an able argument defending the league of nations he said that during his term as President he was often interested in bills presented to the Senate of the United States, and that when many of them would be returned to him for his signature he was unable to recognize the bill and that he doubted very much whether the Senators themselves recognized it. That frequently he would throw the bill on the shelf and allow it to become covered with dust and hoping all the time that the Senators might change their minds or that the people would change the Senators, but instead the people changed the President. [Laughter.].

Now, I have an idea that is exactly what will happen to some of us if we permit these various complaints to go unheeded and do not provide for an investigation such as has been frequently advocated upon the floor of this House.

I want to remind you that the people of this country will rise up in their might and place men in the Congress who will have investigations made and have justice meted out to the soldiers of our country, and to the fathers and mothers who were willing to make the supreme sacrifice in order that we may have a democracy, such a democracy for which our boys so valiantly fought. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I believe seven minutes remain of general debate. I yield that time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for seven minutes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the mails of every Member of Congress are so full nowadays of complaints relative to various things that have occurred during this war that one expects an ordinary amount of that sort of thing. But the mail that I received one day recently was so full of examples of carelessness, of stupidity, of ignorance that I thought it was justifiable and perhaps advisable to call attention to some of them.

As everyone knows, there has been great trouble in the distribution of our soldiers' mail overseas. This particular thing has been called to the attention of this committee before, but in this one day's mail are three letters that show a practice that is being pursued by somebody in the War Department somewhere that seems to me to be the very superlative of ignorance or stupidity. I am told in one of these letters that a soldier was in the Fourth Division overseas. He has received no mail from his wife since the 1st of August, although she has written him during that time four or five letters a week. He has been sick in the hospital since the 16th of last October. On the 15th of January there came back to his wife, who lives down in my country and who knew about his sickness, 15 letters that were marked across the back of them by some one who described himself as a censor, "Wounded and in base hospital." Since that time many other letters have been returned to his wife, who is down there grieving her heart out and trying to find through me and through the War Department and through the Red Cross whether her husband is alive or dead, and back comes this burden of sorrow to her, these letters marked "Wounded and in base hospital." The girl's father writes to me a very pertinent suggestion. He says, "This week she got 14 letters from France returned, all marked by the censor, 'Wounded and in base hospital.'"

He is a plain man down in the country, and his language, perhaps, is not parliamentary, but it seems to me rather in point. He says to me: "Now, W. J., don't it occur to you if that censor knew he was in a hospital the nut could have sent the letters to him easier than he could have sent them back to Floy?" That is the name of the wife. And does not it occur to you that way, gentlemen? What reason can there be, what plan is there in the War Department or among the people who are running this mail service across the seas which causes them to pursue such a cruel and unnecessary treatment of our soldiers overseas? If there is anything in God's world they want over there, it is to get their mail. I had the pleasure or displeasure, whichever it may have been, during the month of October, while this war was hottest and when the allied line was everywhere advancing, to meet many of these men in the hospitals overseas, and I talked with hundreds of them. And whether they were drafted men or whether they were volunteers, I found them all the same cheerful, brave, fearless, carefree lads; and not a complaint did I hear from any of them except the inquiry, "Why can't we get our mail from home?"

Mr. MASON. That censor that the gentleman refers to did not even tell them where the base hospital was?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Can you find out who the censor was and see if arrangements can not be made by the War Department to discharge him from the service and give him some job to which his mentality will be adapted?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know about that. I have only a little time, and I want to pursue this further.

Mr. LITTLE. I offer that as a practical suggestion.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That was the only complaint our boys over there had. In spite of their wounds and misfortunes they were all cheerful. There they were in the hospitals, where some of them would lie for months having their wounds treated, making no complaint, except this one thing, and the failure to get their mail was doing more to shatter the morale of the soldiers across the sea and it has done more to shatter the morale of our people than any other thing that has happened.

Mr. GREGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I have not the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who just had the floor, said that in his opinion the volunteer soldiers were better soldiers than those who were taken by the draft. My friends, I do not agree with him. I found that wherever there was a soldier overseas, no matter where he came from, whatever class he came from, he was ready to do all and to bear all for the flag of his country, irrespective of how he got into the service. [Applause.] There were no best soldiers overseas, because they were all good soldiers, the best soldiers that ever followed a flag into battle anywhere in God's world. They were American soldiers. [Applause.]

Now, this sort of thing ought to stop, gentlemen. It is going on to-day. The same method is being pursued.

Mr. BLACKMON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No; I do not have time to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. In the same day's mail I have another letter about a soldier in the Thirty-third Division, which contains most of the Illinois National Guard troops. His people have not heard from him since August 18, when he was in the hospital. Twenty letters came back the other day to his old mother. He was in the hospital on the 18th day of August, and she writes me heartbrokenly and wants to know why, in God's name, she can not find out about her boy. And why can she not? The War Department does not know. The Secretary of War does not know. The Red Cross can not find out. The cables under the sea are filled to repletion with fullsome accounts that are being written about somebody and somebody's plans over there for regenerating the world, but the wounded soldiers can not get their letters, and these letters are being returned in heaps to the dead-letter office, and then being sent back to the mothers and wives over this country.

I have another letter, in the same day's mail, which tells of a man who went over in August. On December 29 he wrote his wife and told her he had not received any letters since he had been there, although letters and packages had gone to him two or three times a week since he went over there in August. Not a thing had been received by him. Now, I want to say to you that that sort of thing affects seriously the morale of any country and injuriously affects public opinion. [Applause.]

The practice that I have mentioned is a general one. The leading Democratic paper in my district, the Rock Island Daily Argus, recently commented quite pointedly on this practice, as follows:

> It is hard to understand, however, why there have been so many cases in which the thread lost in a hospital or at some point where a transfer was made was not picked up later. The department might at least have taken a census of the various units after the armistice was signed and secured new records that would have made delivery in most cases possible, even if long delayed. That would have been better than giving it up and passing the job over to the dead-letter office. The military authorities can scarcely plead too much business during the last two months to give the subject of soldiers' mail the attention it deserves.

In that judgment so expressed I most thoroughly and completely concur.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HASTINGS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15219) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back without amendment with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 246, nays 2, answered "present" 3, not voting 178, as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CLEARY with Mr. EDMONDS.

Mr. WATSON of Virginia with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. JACOWAY with Mr. FREAR.

Mr. CALDWELL with Mr. BROWNING.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi with Mr. BURROUGHS.

Mr. CARLIN with Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. COADY with Mr. GEORGE W. FAIRCHILD.

Mr. DUPRÉ with Mr. FREEMAN.

Mr. HOUSTON with Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts.

Mr. LEA of California with Mr. KREIDER.

Mr. LESHER with Mr. IRELAND.

Mr. LINTHICUM with Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota.

Mr. MCANDREWS with Mr. MUDD.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. RODENBERG.

Mr. MONTAGUE with Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. NEELY with Mr. SWITZER.

Mr. OLIVER of New York with Mr. TEMPLETON.

Mr. SIMS with Mr. TIMBERLAKE.

Mr. SLAYDEN with Mr. TOWNER.

Mr. THOMAS F. SMITH with Mr. SELLS.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

A quorum being present, the doors were opened.

On motion of Mr. GALLIVAN, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GALLIVAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend and revise his remarks.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PADGETT, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, by direction of that committee, reported the bill (H. R. 15539; H. Rept. No. 1024) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying papers, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUTLER reserved all points of order.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes. Pending that motion, I would say that I have had no requests for time upon this side of the House, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill be dispensed with, if that is agreeable to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I have had one request for 15 minutes from the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. DENT. Then I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed at the expiration of 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that general debate upon the bill close in 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Military Academy appropriation bill, with Mr. SABATH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, this bill appropriates $2,900,000 to be used in the next year by one school. I find that it gets so little attention from the House that nobody has any information or desires any information, such, at least, that leads him to want to discuss it, except perhaps myself. That shows a lack of interest in a very important feature of legislation which I greatly deplore.

I read in the newspapers the other day that the management now in control, which wants $2,900,000 for the next year, is preparing to put in force the old system of hazing at that school. Under that system a new boy who comes there from the country is at the mercy of the older and the bigger boys, upon the theory that that makes a nicer man of him, when, as a matter of fact, it makes of him a little coward and a snob unless he is a boy of considerable character. He gets a little older and in a higher class and then he wants to overawe somebody else.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman is aware of the fact that there is a statute against hazing?

Mr. LITTLE. Then, would the gentleman account to me for the fact that the newspapers gave us the information that the superintendent is going to resume hazing; and does not the gentleman know that hazing has been in force ever since he has been on the Military Committee?

Mr. FIELDS. I am advised by the superintendent that it has not been, and that is all I know about it. In 1911 one cadet was dismissed for hazing.

Mr. LITTLE. If I had been on the Military Committee as long as the gentleman and did not know any more about the hazing system than he does, I certainly would get out and look it up, at least.

Mr. FIELDS. I get my information from the superintendent of the establishment, while the gentleman gets his from the newspapers.

Mr. LITTLE. I get mine from young men who have been hazed, and, what is more, the system is in vogue in every school of that kind in the United States, and they all do it because West Point does. What is the result? It makes a snob of every man that goes out of the school who allows himself to be governed by the principles that it teaches. The theory is that an older boy is better than a younger boy, and instead of reaching out a helping hand and assisting him to grow up as a gentleman, they teach him there is somebody better than he is, who can run over him and mistreat him and do anything to him, and if he undertakes to whip the boy a couple of classes above him he has got to lick the whole class to get away with it.

And that is the way you spend $2,900,000, and one of your committee gets up and tells me that the superintendent tells him that they do not haze there, and there is not another man in the House who does not know that they do, and that is the kind of information that your committee brings to you on which to warrant an expenditure of $2,900,000. I am speaking as a friend of education and of military education. My own boy is in a military school, and has been for two years, and I appreciate the value of it when at its real best, and I know its faults, and I am merely saying here that when you discuss such an appropriation for a military school you ought to know what you are doing, instead of starting off by such theories as that is.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is aware of the fact that students have been dismissed from West Point for hazing, and that bills have been introduced and have been referred to our committee in attempts to get those men reinstated, and it could not be done.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. FIELDS] informs me that one was dismissed in 1911. The gentleman from Illinois says "students." He means "student," does not he—a cadet, not cadets?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman referred a moment ago to the rule that the older classes dominate the lower ones. Is not that merely the rule of seniority, which prevails here and everywhere else? [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman is trying to get me away from the subject I was discussing. We will take that up a little later on. Of course, we all know that every time a new boy goes to another town he always has to lick every boy in the town before he can get along; but the truth is that at West Point they have adopted the cowardly custom of combining every upper class against the low class man, and, as I said before, if you beat one of the seniors you have to beat the whole class. Some gentleman here says that he does not believe that that is true. I would like to get him into West Point once.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I suggest that if the boy can lick two of them, he can lick them all.

Mr. LITTLE. Gentlemen, we all know that this bill should not go a step without some recommendation from the committee that this hazing must stop.

As I undertook to say to you when questioned by gentlemen whose information runs back too far to be useful [laughter], this makes snobs of the boys. What is the matter with the West Point boys? Why, they go into a community and they feel that they are of a different class because the minute they go to West Point they are taught that the other fellows in the upper classes are better than they are, and when they come out they think they are better than everybody else, and that is the reason in this war we are continually agitating in this House the question why we have dismissed from the Army of the United States brave and gallant officers simply because they were in the militia of the country. The Regular officers have grown weary of being eclipsed by Volunteers and are endeavoring to seize the laurels from those who deserve them in many instances.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. GORDON. How long has it been since the gentleman heard of a case of hazing at West Point?

Mr. LITTLE. Since this war the newspapers say they have discontinued it, but they are going to put it back now.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no; there has not been any hazing there for five years.

Mr. LITTLE. You see, you can not talk to these gentlemen. The gentleman should talk with some people who have met some of the cadets from West Point and talked to them within the last 5 or 10 years. You go down there on an announced inspection, and, of course, everything is fixed for an approving report.

Mr. MADDEN. Did the gentleman say he would prefer to talk with some one who had met some West Pointer?

Mr. LITTLE. Some student who has been through the business there.

Mr. GORDON. If the gentleman will yield——

Mr. LITTLE. I must make this speech myself and I do not want the rest of the House to consume all the time. I can not yield any further. The gentleman could have gotten 15 minutes if he wanted the time. There is not anybody in this House who asked for time on this bill except myself until I succeeded in getting 15 minutes and began to talk on the subject, and they hop on me and want to talk all through my time. This is an important bill and you should investigate it.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is not that the rule of seniority?

Mr. LITTLE. There goes another.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I want to corroborate the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLE. I thank you.

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. And I want to dispute the statement made by the gentleman from Ohio that there has not been any hazing at West Point for five years, because I talked with a boy dismissed from West Point for hazing since this war started. They say it is not in vogue there, but this fellow was actually dismissed last year; so that is not a matter of past history.

Mr. LITTLE. Of course, gentlemen, we all know, except gentlemen who inspect in committees, that there is hazing at West Point, and I do not want to waste time on such ideas. The reason they do not get along with volunteers in any war, the reason they are sending out better men in the militia, is simply because they are not from the West Point clique, because they have retained their Americanism and go into the Army to fight, not as a profession. Now, gentlemen, I do not mean all of them are. There are some splendid young Americans from there, and they are in a majority, I presume, and there is nothing the matter with them when they come out except West Point; but many of them are tarred with that brush, otherwise splendid young fellows. We have known man after man, scores of splendid soldiers, put out of the Army because they did not belong to the clique during this war. What is the reason for that? What is the matter with West Point?

Gentlemen, in the Spanish War, in the Philippine War, in the Chinese War, not one single, solitary general officer who achieved distinction or commanded in any action of importance ever attended a military school. Miles, Lawton, Shafter, Otis, MacArthur, Wheaton, Wood, Miller, Funston, Chaffee——

Mr. SLOAN. And Col. Little.

Mr. LITTLE. Not one of them ever went to a military school, and you can not name any man from West Point who achieved distinction as a general officer in the Spanish War, in the Philippines, or the Boxer War; not one. Every one volunteered without military education. Occasionally a West Pointer succeeded by simply getting out of the Regular Army and getting into the Volunteers, like Frank Bell. Now, there is some reason for that, and that is the reason why we should be examining this bill closer than we are doing. They tell us about the Civil War, that they were all West Pointers.

There was a West Point before the Civil War, but it was nothing but a little high school, except they taught them higher mathematics. That did not come to be compared with the West Point of these days. If that West Point made all these great soldiers, West Point to-day is useless, as there are 50 better military schools in this country now than there was at West Point before the Civil War. The great soldiers of the Civil War were all in the Mexican War—Grant, Lee, all of them; every one of them.

A MEMBER. They were from West Point.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman says they were from West Point. They came from the West Point High School, but they did not become great soldiers in the Civil War because they had been at West Point and studied a few simple things, but because their experience on the battle fields in Mexico made them great soldiers. That is what made great soldiers out of them, and I do not——

Mr. McKENZIE. Something was said this morning about the Leavenworth clique. I would like to hear the gentleman on that clique.

Mr. LITTLE. They have a fine school at Leavenworth for these boys to go to after they are out of college and become officers. Many old Army friends and comrades of mine go there. I have no quarrel with them. They are organized there just like a college secret society and all stand together.

Is it not enough for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] that I venture to challenge the infallibility and perhaps the serious utility of West Point without being involved with the Leavenworth clique too? What is he trying to do to me? Does he wish to involve me in ruin, absolute ruin? When "Wild Bill" Hickok was marshal at Hays City, Kans., a half dozen soldiers from Gen. George A. Custer's famous Seventh Cavalry at Fort Hays came to town, took a few drinks, and celebrated. Wild Bill beat them up a bit and put them in the calaboose. Their captain, Tom Custer, regarding that as lese majeste, turned out the whole troop and they started for town to kill Wild Bill on sight. Bill drove to the next station and left for Kansas City till the storm was over. He said, "I'm perfectly willing to fight a reasonable number, but I am not going to try to lick the whole United States Army." The gentleman from Illinois must understand my list is full now, without taking on any "Leavenworth clique."

The best men at Fort Leavenworth, the best teachers there, have not been from West Point. Many of them are from the Philippine service—the very best of them. The fact of the business is, gentleman, that this military business is not a profession. It is a business and must be learned in the field, like other business.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas whether he would be in favor of abolishing West Point or not?

Mr. LITTLE. Well, you think from what I say that it ought to be abolished. If I can prove that no officer from West Point achieved distinction of the first importance in the Spanish-American War, would you think it ought to be abolished?

Mr. McKENZIE. If you ask me that question, I will say very frankly to you that I think West Point, from all I have been able to learn, is the greatest military school not only in this country but in the world.

Mr. GORDON. And has been for a hundred years.

Mr. LITTLE. As to my own views, the fact that my own boy has been in a military school for two years shows what I think of a military school and its possibilities. I am not saying, nor have I intimated, that West Point should be abolished, though possibly we would be better if, like Switzerland, we had no professional officers; but the gentleman jumps as if he had been stuck the minute I discuss its foibles. If it is so bad that when I lay my finger on the sore spot he jumps, something ought to be done. The minute I suggest these facts you think it ought to be abolished. I send my boy to a military school, and I think they are useful institutions. I would like to see West Point improved until its boys can rank with volunteer officers, until they furnish a share of the generals like Miles, Wood, Funston, Chaffee, McArthur, Wheaton, and Lawton.

Mr. OLNEY. Did not Lee and Stonewall Jackson and Grant graduate at West Point?

Mr. LITTLE. I discussed that. You must have been out. Every one of them got his military education in the Mexican War, and everything that was of any use to him he got there. It is shown that this school could be greatly improved, and it would be improved if more people would take an interest in it instead of letting it go by the board in this way. That is no reason why it should not be subjected to careful analysis and criticism when we are asked to spend millions on it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. How do you come to a conclusion that it has not turned out any soldiers for any of the past wars? [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. The attitude of the advocates of this institution can be exhibited by that question and that applause. I did not say it had not turned out any good soldiers. I simply said the fellows who did not go to school were better soldiers. That is all. [Laughter.] They do the best they can with the handicap of the snobbery they get there. All the brilliant leaders of the Cuban, Philippine, and Chinese wars were civilian volunteers.

Now, I am going to close. The friends of West Point, the minute you put your fingers on their sores, begin to protest.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wanted to ask the gentleman if he does not think that the worst thing about West Point is that it is responsible for the caste sentiment that exists in our Army to-day?

Mr. LITTLE. And a snobbery that forced so many splendid militiamen out of the Army in the last war.

Mr. McKENZIE. I would simply like to ask the gentleman what he does when a young man asks him for an appointment to West Point. Do you name him, or do you advise him that it will be his ruin if he goes to West Point? [Laughter.]

Mr. LITTLE. What has that got to do with it? [Laughter.] If he is a friend of mine, I advise him to do something else. If he insists on it, I appoint him. [Laughter.] Perhaps we will get somebody in who will be as good as John A. Logan or Forrest. I can give you the key to this situation from a general officer of the Confederacy, who, I presume, graduated from West Point. He was the son of a President of the United States. I refer to Gen. Dick Taylor, a great officer. He said this, and it is the final word that I want to say: "You take the ordinary boy and send him to West Point and keep him there four years in that artificial environment, and put him two years on the frontier at some little fort with a few men, and then send him down to the department to sit around and unwind red tape for two years, and you have the finest example of arrested mental development the world ever saw." [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920:

Mr. GORDON and Mr. WOOD of Indiana rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we have just been regaled by an address from a gallant volunteer officer here, in which he said some things that I approve and some things to which I dissent. I had the honor to head a committee which made the annual inspection of West Point four years ago, and I made some inquiries into the matters and things which he has discussed here. I have been on this committee for nearly six years now and have given reasonable attention to the Military Academy as we appropriated for it annually. West Point is the finest military school in the world, and has been for over 100 years.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. No. I have only five minutes under the rule. When James Monroe, who was one of the greatest military men who ever occupied the office of President, was Acting Secretary of War he sent a message to Congress in which he discussed West Point at length. That was about in 1820. In that message he said that West Point was then the finest military school in the world. And there is no doubt that it has been such for a hundred years.

Now, the question of hazing there is a question that has not come within the cognizance of the committee since I have been a member of it, for the simple reason that it has been punishable by dismissal for the last five years, and that is what I now say. The gentleman from Michigan undertook to controvert that by saying that a fellow whom he appointed there did some hazing and was dismissed. As to that, I undertake to say——

Mr. SCOTT of Michigan. I did not say exactly that.

Mr. GORDON. Well, he said he took part in a hazing enterprise and was expelled. You can not hold the military authorities up there responsible for hazing if they visit condign punishment upon those guilty of that offense, so that, practically speaking, hazing has been abolished, just as larceny and other crimes are considered abolished by being made penalized. I have not known of any hazing since I have been on this committee.

The argument against educating and training officers is just like the argument sometimes made against college education. You often hear men say that because some of our great men had not an opportunity to obtain a college education therefore that proves that a college education is of no account. Of course, there is nothing in that argument. The best man that ever lived intellectually would have been the better if he had had the advantage of college training. [Applause.] I think everybody will admit that if he will use judgment and common sense.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Would it have improved Shakespeare? Is it not a fact that Bob Ingersoll said that "A college education polishes the pebble and dims the diamond"?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; but if Bob Ingersoll said that, I beg to disagree with him on that as well as some other things that he said. [Laughter.]

West Point is a very expensive institution to the Government. It is located in a beautiful place, which is, however, not adapted to its expansion. They have plenty of land there, but the trouble is that it is located upon the side of a hill, and the hill is of solid stone, and construction work is exceedingly expensive; and as the gradual increase of the attendance at the Military Academy has come on from year to year, the cadets recently having been authorized to be doubled, of course they are cramped for room. That is one of the serious questions which the committee has had under consideration, and which will probably confront the coming Congress peremptorily.

Now, I do not consider it necessary to answer some of the observations that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has made here, because they are all covered in the general statement that our military officers are better from having been educated in military subjects than they would be without that education. Originally West Point was an engineering school exclusively, but since then the course has been enlarged, and it is now a very comprehensive one and covers perhaps more subjects than are vitally necessary. But it certainly does equip young men and prepare them to be officers of the Army better than any other school in existence anywhere on earth.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some training in commercial work, business training, connected with the military training in West Point? That seems to have been avoided altogether.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman may have his time extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Ohio may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. I asked the question of the gentleman from Ohio because I believe that if there is a weakness in the training of a military officer it is in the lack of business knowledge.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is exactly right about that, and, as I just observed, we are teaching too many things that are not vitally necessary to the Military Establishment just now. If I were to solve the problem, I would separate the business part of the Army from the Army itself, as they have done in France. I would have at the head of the Quartermaster's Department a business man. I would not have an Army officer at all, and that would furnish a complete solution of the real weakness in our military organization, to which the gentleman has called attention. The real weakness of the average Army officer is that he has no conception of the value of money and no knowledge of practical business.

Mr. MADDEN. If I may be permitted, if I had the power, I would allow the man who has technical knowledge to write the prescription, as I would allow the Army officer to outline the policy, but I would employ a man who understood how to spend money to fill the prescription.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman is exactly right about that. That is what ought to be done in the Army. The Quartermaster General ought to be a business man. The Army officers are not qualified to act as business men. That has been demonstrated in the last few years by useless expenditures for millions and millions of dollars' worth of stuff that we did not need. Under the stress of military necessity, our civil officers immediately laid down, and if an Army officer wanted to order, for instance, $100,000,000 worth of matches, he would order them, and they have just piled up things that they will never need or use in a hundred years, and, of course, there has been enormous waste.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. I will just make this suggestion to the gentleman and leave it to him as to whether I am right. Does not the gentleman think the best thing that could happen to the West Pointer would be to be made to go out and work for two years and hustle for a living?

Mr. GORDON. No.

Mr. LITTLE. I think a practical education would make a better man and a better soldier of him. If he did that, he would make a better officer in the Army.

Mr. GORDON. No. I think the officers educated at West Point are the finest officers and the best equipped, physically and mentally, in the world. You might as well look at the question just as it is.

Mr. LITTLE. Did the gentleman say the best in the world?

Mr. GORDON. Yes. Because Col. LITTLE made a fine officer without a military education he assumes that no education is necessary. I think he makes the same mistake that I referred to in my opening remarks in regard to a college education. Education does not hurt anybody, and to say that an officer can be overeducated in military matters, it seems to me, is absurd.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. I think perhaps the gentleman can give me some information. The usual course at West Point is four years?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. HAMLIN. But after the war came on it was shortened to three years, and then to two, and then to one.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; they started in a system of rushing and cramming the boys up there and graduating them ahead of their time.

Mr. HAMLIN. Now, what I want to know, and this is purely for information, can the gentleman tell us whether the four-year course will be resumed shortly?

Mr. GORDON. That is a matter which is now under consideration, and we have just received a copy of a report from the academic board, which report is now under consideration by the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War, but no report has been made upon it. That is a matter which is now the subject of discussion, but it is not involved in this bill at all.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will ask another question which perhaps the gentleman is not prepared to answer, but I want him to think about it. Will the young men who have been graduated prematurely, as compared to the old system, be permitted to reenter?

Mr. GORDON. They are going to send them back. They have sent back one class already, and I think it is the intention to return them all to finish their education.

Mr. HAMLIN. I did not know how that was.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is there no law fixing the length of service at West Point?

Mr. GORDON. There is not. That is my understanding about it. It is a matter of regulation.

Mr. MANN. Purely a matter of regulation?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Who regulates that?

Mr. GORDON. The Secretary of War.

Mr. MANN. There was a law as to Annapolis.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes. If I am in error about what I have just stated, I should like to be corrected.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The gentleman is not in error as to the fact at present, but the change is a recent one, and I will submit an amendment presently to cover that very situation. The academic board were requested by Gen. March to make a report on whether or not the course could be shortened.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Gen. March asked the academic board to make a report as to whether or not the curriculum could be shortened. This academic board is made up of the various professors and instructors of that institution, including the superintendent. That board unanimously reported against any change in the four-year course. They reported that the four years could not be shortened by placing any part of the instruction in the remaining three years, because the time of the boys was fully taken up now, and they would not have any time to include any more studies, and that the only way in which the course could be shortened would be by cutting off either the last year's course or the first year's course. If they cut off the last year's course the student would be deprived of all military instruction, because in that last year is included the principal military instruction received by the boys at that institution. If they cut off the first year's course they would raise the standard so high that only college graduates could be permitted to enter the institution, and the high-school graduates and boys whom we have been accustomed to appoint would be excluded.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Before the war was the length of the course a matter of regulation?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Until very recently it was fixed by law at a four-year course, but recently it has been changed, and is now a matter of regulation.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. When was the change made?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I can not recall, but it is a recent change. The result has been that the Chief of Staff is taking steps, without the permission of Congress, to alter the course at the Military Academy, or he is making inquiries along that line, and I am going to ask this body to adopt an amendment fixing the course at four years.

Mr. MANN. I was under the impression that we had authorized the graduation of classes before the regular time.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. You can do that in time of war.

Mr. MANN. We have done it.

Mr. GORDON. I thank the gentleman. I will say, in further answer to the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, that another plan has been suggested, and that is to convert West Point back into an engineering school, building another institution to deal with other subjects. Upon the question of shortening the course at West Point, it seems to me that their plan is well worthy of consideration by Congress. My impression was that the length of the course at West Point was a matter purely of regulation and had been ever since I have been in Congress. If I am in error about that I shall be glad to be corrected.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think the change ought to be left to Congress and not to the Chief of Staff?

Mr. GORDON. No; I do not think so. I think that if the Congress has any comprehensive plan it is satisfied to adopt it ought to go ahead and do it, but unless it has it ought to be a matter of regulation on the theory that military training requires a matter of expert knowledge.

Mr. DENISON. The greatest complaint I have heard against the institution is that there is there taught, or there grows up there, a spirit of snobbery or military caste which makes the man that comes out have contempt for other men who go into the military service. Has the gentleman any suggestion by which Congress or the department could take some action that would democratize the institution and get rid of that tyranny?

Mr. GORDON. I do not think there is any legislation that would cure the difficulty. The real truth about it is, the thing which the gentleman complains of is incident to the Military Establishment, and especially the Military Establishment of the United States. Our military system was organized by Baron von Steuben, who had been a Prussian officer on the staff of Frederick the Great. He came to the United States early in the Revolutionary War and cast his lot with us, gave his services to us, spent the remainder of his life in this country, and died here. He was a very distinguished officer and, of course, he gave us the Prussian system. He was the first Inspector General of the United States Army, and naturally the system which he planted here has continued in the same lines in the Regular Army.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORDON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman think, in view of the results that have been accomplished in the last four years by the Prussian system, that we should adhere to it?

Mr. GORDON. I will tell you that if you want a first-class military system you can not find a better one than the Prussian system. That has been demonstrated in this war. Of course, I want you to understand that I am opposed to it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. But they got licked, did they not?

Mr. GORDON. Finally, but it was some job. [Laughter.]

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I wish to make a few remarks about a subject which I expect every Member present is more or less familiar with, and that is order No. 77, promulgated some time ago by the War Department, whereby is was supposed that the boys in the military service might be relieved by making a proper showing. Every Congressman who represents an agricultural district is being besieged by his constituents asking why it is that after they have complied with the requirements of this order they can not get action, let alone favorable action, on their petitions. We were led to believe by the order that if a farmer made application for the relief of his son, who was wanted on the farm, and filed with it the proper affidavits of disinterested people as to the facts set forth in the application that he was needed on the farm, unless there was great reason why he should not be relieved he would be permitted to go home and do work on the farm. Thousands and thousands of farmers have filed these applications. They have been absolutely ignored in most cases. I do not know who is at fault, but there ought to be some remedy applied.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I had a letter this morning from the Secretary of War, stating that it was not the policy of the War Department to discharge a man because he had a position awaiting him at home.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Then they have misled every Member of this House. I have been misled by this order 77. I want to call the attention of the House to a case, and I dare say I am but reiterating your own experience. I have a case where there is a position awaiting a young man at $150 a month. He is supposed to be occupying a position of clerk in the Army, but as a matter of fact he makes the beds and washes windows, and they say they can get nobody to take his place. I asked for a report on this from The Adjutant General's office the 8th of last month. The Adjutant General informs me—and I have no reason to doubt he is telling the truth—that he has called again and again for a report in reference to the case, but down to this good hour the officer in command of that company does not deign to give him an answer.

I have another case where a widow living in Benton County, Ind., whose husband died since her boy entered the Army, filed an application with the necessary supporting affidavit that her son was her sole reliance and that she could not get along on the farm without his help; that she needed him for the purpose of farming 160 acres of land. The captain receiving the application acknowledged the receipt of the same and expressed some delight at the sufficiency of it. But he said that "while it is true the armistice is signed, it does not necessarily follow that peace will be declared, and your son is a member of the Thirty-fourth Field Artillery, a combat unit, and to discharge him or any other member of this unit would have a depressing effect on the peace congress now being held in Paris." [Laughter.]

I took the letter from that captain to The Adjutant General of the United States more than three weeks ago and asked that it be investigated, and I suggested that a captain who had no more sense than to write a letter of that kind was not fit to command pigs, let alone men. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Has the gentleman any idea that this captain is one of those that we have been hearing about who wants to keep the company in order that he may keep his captaincy?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not know; but I do know this——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do know this, that in one of these camps there is a captain who was a sergeant in the Regular Army before we got into this war. He was getting $44 a month as a sergeant. He was made a captain. He gets $200 a month as a captain and he gets $44 for commutation of quarters and another small sum for commutation of light. Then he gets his fogies, which, by reason of his service in the United States Army, amount to $60, so that in all he is getting $320 a month as captain. The very minute that he loses his position as captain he goes back into the Regular Establishment at $44 a month. That gentlemen has made the remark that he proposes to hold on to what he has as long as he can.

There is another thing to which I desire to direct your attention, and if gentlemen do not know that what I am telling is true they can find out by inquiry, for it is prevalent in almost every camp in the United States. There are companies with five and six and seven captains, with five and six and seven first lieutenants, and with five and six and seven second lieutenants. Perhaps they may have a dozen privates. What are they doing there? Yet you can absolutely get no relief either by addressing a telegram or a letter to these commanding officers, and you can get no relief by going to The Adjutant General of the United States. He seems to be absolutely impotent to give any satisfactory reply to any inquiry involving this want of consideration on the part of these petty officers.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Would it not be possible for this House to obtain some information in respect to this interesting situation by requesting these gentlemen on the Military Affairs Committee to report to us in relation to it? What are they here for?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That may be, but the time is soon coming when the Congress of the United States will be held responsible by constituents for this condition of affairs, for, after all, these gentlemen are not monarchs of all they survey. They are answerable to the Congress of the United States, and it strikes me that in the interest of the farmer, in the interest of the business man of this country, who are alike interested in seeing some order come out of this chaos, the Congress of the United States ought to take some action requiring the Secretary of War to inaugurate some scheme whereby Members of this Congress will be treated at least with respect, and where at least The Adjutant General of the Army will be treated with some respect, and some provision made that these men answer his inquiries.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, reverting to the fact of so many captains to the same company, a matter which can be easily established, has the gentleman any possible explanation of why it is?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The only explanation that I have heard from even those who are attempting to defend this thing is that they are being held there until some place can be assigned to them where they may be of real service. They are being held in these places where there are five and six and seven captains and five and six and seven first lieutenants and five and six and seven second lieutenants for the purpose of drawing their salaries, and nothing more.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. These companies of which the gentleman speaks, where there are so many captains and first and second lieutenants, the gentleman does not mean to say are Infantry or Artillery companies, does he? Surely he is referring perhaps to the Motor Transport Corps.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. They are not all in the Motor Transport Corps by a long measure. They are very much diversified, and I dare say that you will find there is no branch that is entirely guiltless when it comes to this thing. The Congress of the United States, in the last analysis, is responsible for the conduct of the Army, for we are the ones that provide the regulations that are supposed to control it, and our constituencies will be looking to those who are responsible for its control to furnish them the relief that has been promised by the Secretary of War and which is being denied, and because of which so much hardship is resulting.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. DENT. Has the gentleman any concrete idea that he would like to suggest? If so, the Military Committee would like to have it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I think it would be a good idea for the Committee on Military Affairs to adopt some plan whereby soldiers who are needed in civil life can be released for the purpose of entering civil pursuits where they are needed, and whereby their requests would not be dependent upon the whim or caprice of these petty officers. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to one other concrete case which came to my attention today. This is the case of a young man from Jasper County, Ind., who is wanted at home for the purpose of managing 1,500 acres of land. His mother is a widow and joint owner with a brother who is incapacitated by illness. I have asked repeatedly for the discharge of this boy, furnishing all of the required proofs and affidavits, and get this character of answer: The commanding officer says that while it is most commendable that this man should want to go home and help supply food for the country in the conduct of 1,500 acres of land, it is likewise commendable that he stay there where he is a valuable man in the discharge of his services as a clerk, thus showing that these commanding officers do not intend that their convenience shall not be interfered with, no matter how important the case presented for a discharge may be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, the Members of this House know that I am not prone to bring in mere kicks or to deal in matters connected with "sore toes," "sore heads," or anything of that kind. The matter just referred to, however, by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has been a real abuse. Either the War Department has tried to put something over on the soldiers and their families in this country or the orders issued by the War Department, apparently in good faith, have not been carried out.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Just for a question. I desire to finish in the five minutes.

Mr. LONDON. Is not the real complaint that heads of the Army seem to have no plan in reference to demobilization?

Mr. TILSON. That may be.

Mr. LONDON. Is not that the real trouble?

Mr. TILSON. I am not sure. Here are the facts. I always try to deal in facts. Instead of criticizing anybody I like to present the facts, and if those facts hit anybody on the head, all right. I am not responsible for the facts, except to bring them before you. The War Department, on the 21st of November, issued Circular 77, which says that—

> Department commanders within the United States, commanders of ports of embarkation, and commanders of camps not under the jurisdiction of department commanders or of chiefs of bureaus of the War Department are authorized to discharge enlisted men upon their own application when there is sickness or other distress in the soldier's family or when he is needed to resume employment in an industry or occupation in which there is urgent need of his service.

Circular No. 77 was not lived up to fully by all commanding officers, so on January 6 Circular No. 6 was issued by the department. It says:

> Applications for immediate discharge under the provisions of Circular No. 77, War Department, 1918, will be acted upon as expeditiously as possible, and the applicants will be informed without unnecessary delay of the action taken. Deserving cases should be investigated, and where the applicants have not correctly or fully stated their reasons for asking immediate discharge, officers should render such assistance as may be necessary to correct them so that the application may be properly presented and acted upon.

These circulars, fairly construed, indicate an honest intention on the part of the War Department to release the men therein described.

If there were good reasons why no men whatsoever should be demobilized or good reasons why the entire Army should be demobilized by units, and the War Department had so announced, then there would not have been the same ground for complaint. The gist of my complaint is that either these orders were not issued in good faith or that they have not been lived up to in good faith.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I will.

Mr. GARNER. The gentleman is on the Committee on Military Affairs and probably knows more about the policy of the War Department in respect to demobilization in this country than the ordinary Member of Congress.

Mr. TILSON. I try to know something about the subject, but have not succeeded very well.

Mr. GARNER. What is the policy of the War Department in reference to demobilization of the Army on the American Continent? I saw a statement in the newspapers that Gen. March said that within 30 days they will be all demobilized. I wanted to know if the gentleman knows——

Mr. TILSON. I do not.

Mr. GARNER (continuing). What the policy is and whether they are going to demobilize all of them in 30 days or not.

Mr. TILSON. I know only what is vouchsafed to us through the public press in regard to demobilization. Through the official orders issued by the War Department I try to get information——

Mr. GARNER. I understand you have been having hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. TILSON. On the appropriation bill.

Mr. GARNER. It does seem to me that the gentleman could have gotten from some man in authority what is to be the policy in reference to demobilization of the Army in this country.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] in charge of the deficiency bill, which covers the earth, stated the other day in response to a question which I put to him that the Army officials before the Committee on Appropriations, the proper officials, stated that all of the troops in this country would be demobilized within 30 days' time. Of course, I do not believe——

Mr. GARNER. That word "all" means a great deal.

Mr. MANN. The statement was made. It did not mean everybody in the Army, because the Committee on Military Affairs has not yet reported the bill providing for any Regular Army or enlistments in a regular way.

Mr. GARNER. If all troops are to be demobilized in 30 days, of course these complaints will cease at that time, but I do not understand that they will demobilize all, because they would have to keep sufficient troops to take care of the different camps, and so forth.

Mr. TILSON. Even if what the gentleman suggests takes place that does not take care of the real grievance which these men have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Can I have three minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Secretary of War did appear before the committee, and this particular question was asked him. His direct testimony was that they could dismiss these men faster by units than they could in an attempt to investigate the individual cases. The Chief of Staff has stated, as the gentleman from Texas has called to our attention, that inside of 30 days all the units in this country would be dismissed, except those necessary for the preservation of the different camps, and that a different policy has been declared.

Mr. TILSON. Here is one of the many reasons why the instructions of the War Department have not been carried out. Circular No. 77, signed by the Chief of Staff, was dated November 21. I hold in my hand an order issued by a company commander on December 16, 1918, nearly a month after the order of the Chief of Staff had been in full effect. It reads as follows:

OFFICE MOTOR TRANSPORT COMPANY No. 377,
Camp Bragg, N. C., December 16, 1918.

No further action will be taken in regard to discharges. Commanding officer will not discuss the matter with anyone until definite information as to possibility of securing same can be obtained from higher authority.

This is signed by W. S. Patteson, first lieutenant, Motor Transport Company, at Camp Bragg, N. C. I have in my possession evidence to the effect that a number of applications were filed, coming clearly within the terms of Circular No. 77, giving indisputable cases of dependence, cases that would have exempted men under the selective-draft law if they had been presented, and yet this high and mighty first lieutenant refuses even to accept the applications and posts an order over his own signature to the effect that no further action will be taken in regard to discharges. As I have the official order with the signature of this mighty warrior, I shall insert it as a part of my remarks if permitted to do so.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. I yield.

Mr. DENT. I understood the gentleman to make the statement a moment ago that the regulations had not been properly carried out by those in authority.

Mr. TILSON. That is my belief.

Mr. DENT. I am sure the gentleman does not mean to say that the General Staff and the Secretary of War did not issue the order in good faith?

Mr. TILSON. I did not mean to say that at all. I say it has not been carried out; but I am of the opinion that it might have been carried out better if authority higher up had informed subordinate commanders that full compliance with the letter and spirit of these orders would be insisted upon.

Mr. DENT. Now, I want to ask the gentleman, inasmuch as he is a very valuable member of the Military Affairs Committee of the House——

Mr. TILSON. Thank you.

Mr. DENT. In this individual case did he call that to the attention of the War Department? I have had similar cases, and I found when I called them to the attention of the War Department they were straightened out.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GARNER. I know a number of cases similar to the one the gentleman refers to, and they have sent them to the War Department and can not get a reply from them.

Mr. TILSON. I have had cases both ways. In some cases I have gotten relief; others I have not. However, the attitude of the War Department has been a surprise to me in this, that its efforts to hold subordinates to a strict compliance with orders have taken the form of a mild request, as if to implore these lieutenants to please discharge these men from the service.

Mr. GARNER. In reference to the good faith of Order No. 77, undoubtedly we must assume that it was issued in good faith; but I want to call the gentleman's attention to one fact, that I have not heard up to date where a lieutenant, a captain, or a major, or anybody else, has been reprimanded or otherwise punished for his failure to carry out that order.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman has stated the crux of this whole matter. That is the place where the War Department lays itself open to a charge of lack of good faith, namely, in not seeing to it that these officers are called to account for their failure to live up to the spirit and letter of the orders publicly promulgated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting the order which I read to the House and a letter accompanying it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the order and the letter referred to:

OFFICE MOTOR TRANSPORT COMPANY No. 377,
CAMP BRAGG, N. C., December 16, 1918.

No further action will be taken in regard to discharges. Commanding officer will not discuss the matter with anyone until definite information as to possibility of securing same can be obtained from higher authority.

W. S. PATTESON,
First Lieut. M. T. C., Acting Motor Transport Officer.

1. As per letter January 3, the following is submitted on the above subject:

A. Keeping up morale at Camp Bragg.

Great difficulty is experienced in maintaining morale among voluntary enlisted men who have been in service for periods ranging from 16 to 10 months when so many draftees are obtaining discharges. This difficulty is increased by publication in newspapers of irresponsible and incorrect statements, such as speech of Representative TILSON, of Connecticut, in House of Representatives, January 15. This same speech has caused discontent and unrest at this station, where conditions absolutely require personnel to be kept in service.

In order to combat this influence soldiers are being given as much freedom as is possible, and efforts are being made to provide social entertainments. It being found that civilians in near-by town of Fayetteville charged admission prices for dances far beyond the means of men in uniform, "a soldier-boys club" has been organized by personnel of Motor Transport Company No. 377 and Companies A and B, of Forty-sixth Infantry, stationed here as guards, which provides dances at reasonable rates in cooperation with certain people in Fayetteville having the welfare of the soldiers at heart. The first dance given by this club was held Wednesday, January 15, and has been pronounced as the most enjoyable social function that has taken place in that town for some time. It is contemplated to have a masquerade in the near future. It is also contemplated that this organization will put on a minstrel show or some other form of entertainment in the near future.

W. S. PATTESON, Motor Transport Officer.

JANUARY 22, 1919.

Representative JOHN Q. TILSON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I trust you will pardon the liberty I am taking in addressing this letter to you, but I have been requested by one of the men still in service to present the following facts to your attention:

Your speech as reported in a recent issue of the New York World, in which you stated that some officers in the Army were not carrying out their instructions in regard to discharging men of their commands, as they wish to retain their present positions, was absolutely correct and "hits the nail square on the head."

I would like to call your attention to the following facts concerning Motor Transport Corps 377, now stationed at Camp Bragg, Fayetteville, N. C. This corps was formed with enlisted men 16 or 18 months ago, with the distinct promise to all the men who enlisted therein that they would see immediate overseas service. This promise was never fulfilled, and up to a month ago they were permanently attached to Camp Merritt, N. J., where they did all the construction work as well as troop movement, this being the port of embarkation. The "boys" did not complain, although they were very anxious to get across, as they realized that somebody had to do the work on this side. They worked hard and "did their bit" cheerfully, and their work brought forth words of praise from the commanding officers of the camp.

Last December they were ordered to report to Camp Bragg, N. C., and left Camp Merritt on the 3d of that month driving their two-ton Pierce-Arrow trucks over the road. They arrived at Camp Bragg December 12.

The commanding officer of this company is First Lieut. William S. Patteson, whose home is in Penn Yan, N. Y. Before Lieut. Patteson entered the Army he was holding down a position in his father's lumber mill at a salary of not more than $15 or $20 a week. Several of the men in his command come from his home town and knew him intimately for many years before he entered the Army. They will vouch for the truth of the above statement. Lieut. Patteson has many times expressed the wish that he did not want to get out of the Army before being commissioned a captain, and in that case he would remain in the Army for several years yet. He realizes that if his command is demobilized he will lose his present job, and consequently has done everything in his power to prevent the discharging of his men. He absolutely refuses even to discuss the matter of discharges with his men and has told several of them who have insisted on trying to take this very important matter up with him that he would see to it that they would be the last to be discharged, as they refused to follow the order he had posted on the bulletin board and which I am inclosing. This order speaks for itself.

He also will not issue any of the forms for applying for discharges, as he says they would not get any further than his hands. Before the company left Camp Merritt the questionnaires for discharges were filled out by all the members of the company, but that is all that ever happened to them. They are still locked up in the company safe.

Camp Bragg, as you no doubt know, is still being constructed, and except for two guard companies and M. T. C. 377 there are no other enlisted organizations on the reservation. The camp has not been turned over to the Government and will not be for a long time yet, as the building process is very slow. The contractors are in charge, and the men feel that they are in the same position as a gang of convicts hired out by a State government to a contracting company. They are doing absolutely nothing that is conducive to maintaining the troops still on the other side or helping in any way the return of those troops. If such was the case there would not be a word of complaint. As it is they are absolutely wasting their time, and as most of the men have families who are dependent on them for their support, this delay in being discharged is working a real hardship on them.

Since the company has arrived in Camp Bragg not one of the Government Pierce-Arrow trucks has turned a wheel, as it is utterly impossible for them to be operated on account of the heavy sand and impassable roads in and around the camp. They have just stood out in the rain and are deteriorating from the effects of the elements. This in itself is a big loss to the Government, as the large sum of money that is represented by these 30 trucks is not paying a single dollar on the investment. The only work the company is now doing is to drive civilian foremen of the constructing company and a few officers around in Fords.

There was a report from Camp Jesup, Atlanta, Ga., that they would not send any extra parts to keep the Fords running, as they understood that the camp was to be demobilized. Whether this is true or not, I can not say at the present moment. Lieut. Patteson has gone down there, and if he follows out his usual policy he will no doubt do everything in his power to have this order canceled, if it is true.

Lieut. Patteson is woefully lacking in knowledge concerning motor trucks and automobiles. After being in command of a truck company as long as he has one would think that he would at least know something concerning the working of a motor, but such does not seem to be the case. The other day he displayed this ignorance by asking in all seriousness if a Ford motor had valves in it. He is absolutely incompetent to command a company, and it has always been a mystery to his men how he ever managed to receive a commission.

I am also inclosing a true copy of the weekly letter sent to headquarters at Camp Jesup. I think that also speaks for itself. I might add that Lieut. Patteson had absolutely nothing to do with getting up the dance he mentions, as the boys did it themselves on their own initiative. As for the "Soldier Boys' Club," they have never heard of it.

Trusting that you may be good enough to look into this matter and see if something can not be done, so that the boys may soon be returned to their families, I have taken the liberty of writing you. All the boys ask for is a square deal, and they do not feel that they are getting it under the existing conditions. They have gladly done their bit and worked hard, with no hope of the glory and praise that falls to the lot of the men who were lucky enough to be sent over. What they are complaining about is the fact that they are now nothing but "meal tickets" for Lieut. Patteson.

Very truly, yours,

ONE WHO IS DEPENDENT ON ONE OF THESE BOYS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Chairman, returning to the Academy bill, for the purpose of the information of the House, I wanted to submit a report of the academic board on the subject of a course of study at the United States Military Academy at West Point, for the purpose of having the same inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the extension referred to:

REPORT OF ACADEMIC BOARD.

From: The general committee.
To: The Superintendent United States Military Academy.
Subject: Course of study at the United States Military Academy.

1. In compliance with the third and fourth paragraphs, War Department letter of November 16, 1918 (File No. 351.1 West Point), the general committee submits the following report covering the suggestions therein relative to a revision of the course of study at the Military Academy.

2. In its deliberations upon the proposed revision of the curriculum the general committee has been guided by its conception of the functions of the Military Academy. The functions are to graduate young men capable of at once performing the duties of junior officers and with the fundamental moral and mental training which will insure them the ability to use their rational faculties to the fullest advantage under the varied conditions of the service, such ability being the most useful result of education, and which with after years of development will enable them competently to fill positions of leadership and high responsibility. In the military profession the graduates of the Military Academy should set the standard of the Army. Upon this standard depends the ability of the country to organize and employ without undue wastage its military resources.

3. With these functions of the Military Academy constantly in mind, the general committee is unanimous in the opinion that the quality of the graduates is of far greater importance than the number. Even should Congress in its reorganization of the Army largely increase the peace establishment, the committee believes that it would be a mistake to allow the need for a large number of junior officers to force a general lowering of the Military Academy standards. Such a demand should be met by the establishment of other academies.

It has never been the policy of the Government to draw its officers exclusively from the Military Academy. Indeed, it is doubtful whether such a policy would be desirable. The opportunity offered to enlisted men and to graduates of other institutions to gain commissions has been an inspiration to many and has resulted in the addition of a large number of efficient officers to the Army. By the existing policy, however, in which the Military Academy graduates form only a part of the officers, the necessity for the high quality of its graduates is accentuated, as it should be their province to set the standards of professional training and character for the whole Army. Any plan, then, which would result in lowering the standards of the Military Academy graduates would react injuriously on the Army as a whole.

4. The importance of this emphasis upon quality is revealed by the experience of the war which has just ceased. The enormous expansion of the Army, involving complicated duties of organized equipment, transportation, supply, training, and leadership, required a large number of general officers of ability. For the supply of such officers the Government naturally and rightly looked first to the graduates of the Military Academy. From such graduates of 30 or more years of service the Government selected most of its general officers.

5. In support of the statement just made, the following statistics are given from the best information available:

Class.	Number in active service.	General officers.	Percentage.
1880	13	9	69.2
1882	11	10	90.9
1883	22	16	72.7
1884	20	15	75.0
1885	13	11	84.6
1886	36	25	69.4
1887	36	26	72.2
1888	26	23	88.5
1889	28	14	50.0
1890	35	22	62.9
1891	40	17	42.5

The average percentage appointed general officers from the classes of 1880 to 1888, inclusive, is 76.8.

6. From the facts cited in paragraphs 4 and 5, it is evident that in attempting to fulfill its immediate functions, the Military Academy is also training the material for future general officers in times of crisis and capable in the meanwhile of maintaining a high standard of professional efficiency in the Regular Army. If the graduation requirements are lowered to a point where the fundamental education and training are an insufficient foundation upon which to build, then the graduates of the Military Academy will no longer be able to qualify themselves for the positions they must fill in peace and war. The emphasis in the past upon quality rather than quantity, and the present urgent recommendation of the committee that this emphasis be maintained in the future are thus justified.

7. The course of study at the Military Academy has been mathematical and scientific, and it should continue so. The military profession is scientific and technical in character, far more so than formerly and certainly to become increasingly so in the future. The committee thinks that the profession of an officer in our Army is more likely to demand men of character and logical power than simply men of information and knowledge; the committee is convinced that the power and habit of clear, exact, and logical thought engendered by the proper study of mathematics and in the application of mathematical principles and processes to mechanics, engineering, electricity, ordnance, and other practical sciences are the best assets that can be provided our graduates, and the academy should supply them. The work of the graduates in this war, as in our past wars, has proved that the character of the course of study is essentially sound. The system has been adequately tested, and it has stood the tests. Graduates from all parts of the classes have shown their ability to develop the professional knowledge required, even though such development after graduation from the academy has been allowed to be largely individual and voluntary. No radical change in the system at the Military Academy should be made. Preserving the present character, the course should be developed and improved in every way possible. Such development and improvement the various heads of the departments are continually striving to introduce.

8. The criticism that a course of mathematical and scientific character contains subject matter not apparently of direct application in this or that branch of the service is answered by the fact that the Military Academy is not training or educating officers for only a particular branch of the service, nor does it claim to prepare a finished product in any branch of the service. It is giving a sound basis of education, which by proper effort upon the part of a young officer can be readily expanded to meet any other minor scientific activities of the service; of such activities there always have been and must continue to be a large number in the hands of line officers. This basic education is also the foundation upon which any officer may safely build in preparing himself for the duties and responsibilities of higher command. The value of the Military Academy to the country is being judged to-day in large part by the work of its graduates of thirty or more years ago; not upon what was actually taught them as cadets but upon the adequacy of their mental training and character, as a foundation for their later development.

9. If the character of the course of study is to remain essentially mathematical, and the course itself is to remain essentially scientific and technical, as the committee believes they should, then no material change should be made in the relative times devoted to the scientific and to cultural subjects. The course is now all that the average cadet can carry, and any increase in one subject can only be accomplished by a corresponding decrease in some other. The mathematical and scientific subjects constitute a logical and continuous development, of which no step can be omitted. Any increase of the cultural subjects would necessitate the omission of some of the scientific subjects, a change which, in the opinion of the committee, would do a great deal more harm than good.

10. If the course of study at the Military Academy is to be shortened to three years it can be done in one of three ways:

(a) By a complete change in the whole character of the course.
(b) By cutting off a year at the end of the present course.
(c) By cutting off a year at the beginning of the present course.

11. If plan (a) is advocated, it must be with a view to the substitution, in a shortened course, of some cultural subjects for the mathematical and scientific subjects. In considering this plan it should be remembered that the military profession is more closely akin to the various branches of the engineering profession than to any other. For many years the Military Academy was the leading technological and scientific school of the country, graduating men who led in all the engineering activities of our country at the same time that it was sending forth such soldiers as Grant and Lee, Sherman and Joseph E. Johnston, George H. Thomas and Stonewall Jackson, and others. The important and technical nature of the duties of our Engineer officers is well known, but the great variety of minor engineering activities that are often required of line officers is not generally known.

The duties of line officers in our Army are more varied and more comprehensive than in any other military service in the world; these are constantly detailed to duties requiring technical knowledge. The quartermasters of our service are, very many of them, line officers detailed to that duty; they build posts, quarters, and all the various utilities which pertain to posts, with all their mechanical accessories, and keep the same in constant repair. Then, too, owing to the smallness of our Engineer Corps and the fact of the great amount of civil work imposed upon it, line officers frequently have to perform the duties of engineers.

In field operations in time of war with our small Engineer Corps it is increasingly essential that many line officers should be capable of performing the duties of field engineers and be able to construct various forms of emergency bridges, field works, build roads, repair railways and telegraphs, erect temporary structures—in short, to meet the requirements of temporary exigency. In addition to this it is of the first importance that line officers should be able to conduct military topographical surveys and reconnoissances and prepare field maps. It is a matter of record that our line officers in recent years, as well as formerly, have performed every variety of scientific duty above enumerated and others not mentioned.

In this connection it is deemed hardly necessary to mention, but it should not be forgotten that the technical nature of all the material appliances of war is far greater than ever before, and this applies to means of transport as well as to all weapons of combat, on land and in the air; if our officers are to be more than skilled craftsmen in the technical duties of the service, their mathematical and scientific attainments can not possibly be diminished.

The committee is convinced that for the purely practical purpose of being able to perform intelligently the duties likely to devolve upon graduates, as well as for the reasons given in paragraph 7, the course at the academy must be scientific rather than cultural. No engineering school would think of substituting cultural for necessary scientific studies.

Were this school being inaugurated for the first time some of the issues here presented would lack the test of experience, but West Point has been tested by the varied exigencies of a century of national growth. From the beginning of the last century to the close of the present war in every important activity of the Nation's life the influence of its graduates has been felt and universally recognized, at critical times often directing and exerting a decisive influence. A full discussion of this subject can not be here undertaken, but the overwhelming evidence as to the efficiency of the academy's work shows that it is not the result of accident or chance; the worth of its individuality has been proven beyond a doubt. The committee is convinced that any experiment would be unwise which would disintegrate or materially modify the influences which result from the character and scope of its curriculum, its discipline, its traditions, and its admirable system of instruction, upon all of which depend the results of the academy's work.

12. If plan (b) is to be followed the subjects covered during the last year of the present four-year course, including law, Spanish, ordnance and gunnery, and civil and military engineering (covering fortifications, army organization, and military history) will have to be omitted. These subjects can not be added to those taught in the earlier years of the course, for the work of those years is already as heavy as the average cadet can bear. Certain of these subjects, too, as ordnance and gunnery and civil engineering, rest upon the previous courses of study and can not be properly taught until the completion of those courses. All of these subjects except Spanish are essentially military, and their entire omission in the education of an officer would be inconceivable.

13. It may be suggested by some that these subjects of the last year of the Military Academy course can be taught in the service schools. The committee fails to see any advantage in such a system. The necessary plant is already available at the Military Academy; the students are under full control; their pay is that of cadets; the training and teaching staffs are already organized and efficient. The change of system would require the organization of new departments in the service schools, entailing a waste of effort by duplication; the supply of considerable equipment at large expense; and the payment of the students on the status of officers instead of that of cadets.

14. Under plan (c), the Military Academy course would be shortened to three years by increasing the entrance requirements to cover one year's work. The entrance requirements would then include algebra (complete), plane and solid geometry, plane trigonometry, English grammar, English composition and literature, history, geography, and beginners' French. Inasmuch as successful mastery of the advanced courses in the academy depends upon the thoroughness of instruction in the fundamental branches, the only proper test for entrance to such three-year course would be by examination. The only way by which qualified candidates can be secured in the various sections of the country for such a course is by State-wide competitive examinations.

Under the conditions thus set forth, namely, admission by State-wide competitive examinations, covering algebra (complete), plane and solid geometry, plane trigonometry, English grammar, English composition and literature, history, geography, and beginners' French, the general committee could and would approve a three-year course, and believes that the academy could continue to graduate men well qualified for later development. These conditions are the only conditions upon which the general committee believes that it would be justified in recommending that a three-year course be established.

15. If the three-year course under the conditions indicated in paragraph 14 be considered desirable, certain practical difficulties must be faced and solved before attempting to put it into effect. If these difficulties do not permit of solution, the committee believes that the attempt to introduce a three-year course should be abandoned. These difficulties are as follows:

(a) Enlisted men would be no longer able to qualify. Even with the present requirements, very few enlisted men qualify; with increased requirements, probably none could do so without extensive furloughs for special preparation.

(b) The entrance requirements would lose touch with the public free-school system, for few public schools cover thoroughly all the subjects in the proposed entrance requirements.

(c) Few of the most desirable class of young men would present themselves for examination. The class of young men who by their college work would be considered most desirable would normally have progressed so far toward completing their education for business or profession that they would not care to exchange their college for the Military Academy. Experience has shown that even under peace conditions few young men leave college to enter the Military Academy; in the absence of compulsory military service no greater number is to be expected as a result of increased entrance requirements.

16. The question of the length of the course of study is thus seen to be dependent upon the question of whether there is any widespread desire on the part of young men of good scholastic ability to come to the Military Academy. The evidence presented by the many failures on the present entrance examinations and by the general character of the certificate now submitted for admission indicates that there is not. It seems probable that a substantial increase in the entrance requirements would bar much of the material now seeking admission, and the committee sees no reason to believe that any higher class of material would present itself if the requirements were raised.

The general committee believes that the difficulties mentioned in paragraph 15 are insurmountable.

17. If the War Department agrees with the committee in believing the difficulties involved in increasing the entrance requirements to be insurmountable, the committee is thoroughly convinced that the existing four-year course of a scientific and technical character should be followed in its essentials in the future. This present system is very desirable. The full period of the collegiate education is covered here, so that thoroughness can be required at all stages. It places the cadet under full control before he has developed beyond the impressionable stage in the majority of cases, so that the military discipline, physical training, and moral influences of the academy have their maximum effect.

18. In determining the length of the course at the Military Academy little weight should be given to any arguments based upon the lengths of the courses at foreign military schools. Compulsory military service enables entrance standards to be set at discretion and the material to be chosen with care. The Military Academy must continue to offer a collegiate education and be satisfied with the character of material attracted.

19. The committee does not feel justified in submitting at this time any recommendation based upon the relation of the Military Academy to the post-graduate schools. All of these schools are now closed, so far as their regular work is concerned, and the committee assumes that modifications of the former courses will be desirable as a result of the experience in this war. The committee believes that there should be thorough coordination of the work of the post-graduate schools with that of the Military Academy and to that end recommends that, as soon as conditions clear up enough to give some definite idea of what the future is to be, a board be appointed, on which the Military Academy and all branches of the service shall be represented, to formulate a general plan for the educational system of the Army. The members of this board should be officers of rank and experience. The system of education, while taking care of the immediate needs of each branch of the service, should also provide for the broader development of officers with a view to their general usefulness in high command. The committee hopes that in the system adopted, which must primarily take into account the needs of the multitude of officers who are nongraduates, a way may be found to provide for the continuous development of the graduates of the Military Academy.

20. In conclusion the general committee desires to call attention to the fact that continual modifications in the curriculum are being made as the necessity of adjusting the course to changed conditions becomes evident. The committee has at no time regarded the course as fixed and rigid. As examples of such modifications in very recent years the following may be mentioned: (a) Establishment of the department of military hygiene; (b) formation of the department of English and history; (c) development of practical shop work in ordnance and gunnery; (d) reorganization of the instruction in drawing and military sketching; (e) changes in the department of chemistry, involving the omission of mineralogy and geology, the expansion of the work in electricity, and the preparation of a course in the principles of internal-combustion engines; (f) changes in the department of philosophy, involving the curtailment of work in astronomy, the introduction of fundamental instruction in physics, and the further development of the course in mechanics, including the mechanics of flight; (g) the temporary omission of Spanish and substitution of a longer course in French to meet the war emergency; (h) introduction of a supplementary course in minor tactics. The general committee earnestly desires that it should be recognized that the departments at the Military Academy are endeavoring constantly to adapt their work to the best interests of the service and the country.

HEADQUARTERS UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., December 13, 1918.

To THE ADJUTANT GENERAL OF THE ARMY,
War Department, Washington, D. C.:

1. This report is approved by the academic board and fully concurred in by the superintendent in reference to letter from The Adjutant General of the Army, November 16, 1918. (351.1.)

(Signed) S. E. TILLMAN,
Colonel, United States Army, Superintendent.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what are we to gather from the remarks to which we have listened to-day in criticism of the War Department? What lesson do they teach us? What do they mean? What do the gentlemen have in mind when they project into this body a series of assaults of the character that have been made upon our military system, and upon the high command, charged with the conduct of the war? Are we to gather that our whole military system is imbecile, unjust, and inefficient? Is that the lesson intended to be taught? Are we to understand that the Chief of Staff, the General Staff, Gen. Pershing, and everyone connected in a military way with the responsible management of our military affairs have been absolutely incapable, and wholly unjust, and unfair, in their dealings with inferior officers, and in the administration of the system over which they presided? If there is any responsibility for the alleged grievous wrongs, and acts of flagrant misconduct that have been recounted in our hearing, to whom is the responsibility for that long catalogue of injustice and misdoing intended to be imputed?

Let us look the facts of the situation squarely in the face. We sent Gen. Pershing to France with plenary power. I undertake to say that no military commander was ever put into the field with larger authority than was lodged in him with the willing assent of this House. We gave him everything for which he asked. We were lavish both with respect to affording the means of warfare, and with respect to the authority for its conduct. If as suggested there has been absolute failure and breakdown of the military machine in France, who is the responsible man, or men, to be visited with our reprehension?

If these attacks are well founded, then some responsible head must be sought for this functional failure. One gentleman in the course of his remarks to-day, referred to some mysterious Leavenworth clique. Who and what is the Leavenworth clique, that is apparently superior to the commander in chief in charge of operations in France?

Are we prepared to believe, as Members of this House, that the Military Establishment in France teems with injustice, that capable men are demoted through military prejudice, and in utter disregard of the merits of their claims, that officers of confessed ability are unable to secure a fair hearing, that injustice runs rampant and triumphant? Supposedly we have had a commander in chief in France who has been popularly regarded as conducting a successful campaign to the entire satisfaction of the American people, and in conformity with the requirements of military propriety, as well as of military discipline. Where was the commander in chief, what had become of his authority, and headship, when this Leavenworth clique, whoever they may be, were perpetrating the wrongs that have been recited in our hearing? Were they able to do these things, without the knowledge of the man in supreme command, or did they perpetrate them in defiance of his authority? I repeat that if these wrongs were flagrant, and widespread, as intimated, upon whose shoulders is responsibility for the existence, and continuance of these misdeeds intended to be placed? Who is making the charge, who is demanding an inquiry? Where is the point upon which we may put our finger and say, "Here is where the responsibility rests"?

I am not here as the champion of any individual and certainly do not condone any act of injustice, or any collective acts of injustice; but an ex parte statement does not establish a case. If we accept at their full value the charges and complaints that have been made in the course of this legislative day, then they indicate one unescapable conclusion, and that is that the entire Military Establishment is incapable, imbecile, and flagrantly capricious and unjust. Is this House ready to accept that conclusion? I believe not. I believe that it will reserve judgment until it hears from the men who have been attacked either directly, or by necessary implication.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me, without knowledge—and I am not criticizing—that the responsibility resides in the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Very well. Then that means that these attacks are upon Gen. Pershing.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Oh, no!

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. He is not commander in chief.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Oh, you mean that the President is responsible? Very well. I will accept that proposition. He is undoubtedly ultimately responsible, but the more immediate responsibility must rest upon some one below him. Has it been shown in any wise in this body that the President has interfered in any way in France with respect to the exercise of authority by Gen. Pershing? Has it been shown in this body, or suggested, that as the result of mischievous interference by a civilian—for the President is but a civilian—the commander in chief in France has been in any wise hampered, or hindered in the enforcement of proper military discipline in the Army under his charge? If injustice has been done in France to individuals, or groups of individuals, if merit has been disregarded, if carping jealousies have prevailed, where a generous appreciation of duty well done, should have been manifested, is it suggested that it can be traced to some reprehensible interference by the President, with the supreme authority of the commander in charge of operations at the front? If so, those acts of hampering interference should be indicated, so that just responsibility may be placed.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know who is responsible, and I do not know what the abuses are; but the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy constitutes his Cabinet, his Secretary of War, his Chief of Staff, his——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Who was the supreme military potentate in France? Gen. Pershing. During the progress of the war, this body has been asked from day to day, and from time to time, to stand by the high command in France, and we have never failed to give the support asked at our hands. I do not for a moment undertake to say that I believe that these assaults are just, but if they are well founded, then some one is responsible. If it is not intended to intimate that responsibility attaches to the commander in chief in France, to the supreme head of the military machine, in that area, then to what person or persons in authority, is responsibility supposed to attach? If an organization does not function properly, the man at the head is supposed to be at fault. Certainly in case of success, credit for that success is ascribed to the responsible head.

Mr. TEMPLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Is the gentleman aware that Circular No. 77 does not apply at all to the troops under Gen. Pershing's command, but applies only to the troops in the United States?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am not talking about troops in the United States, but about operations in France, where the Leavenworth clique has been supposed to be doing, or to have done its mischievous work.

Mr. TEMPLE. And the criticisms have been directed largely to proceedings in the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, may I proceed for five minutes more?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The criticisms of the proceedings at home, are only a part of the general body of criticism. I am perfectly willing to take up the discussion of the cases at home. If there is some one in this country other than the military heads, the Chief of Staff, or the General Staff, who is responsible for any of these alleged wrongs, and doubtless some mistakes have been made, and some injustice has been committed, why may not the Committee on Military Affairs of this body investigate these cases, and fix responsibility on the appropriate parties? [Applause.]

Mr. BAER. You are right.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman would not desire to cover up anybody further down the line than the head?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not want to cover up anyone. On the contrary I want to uncover everybody, from the President down to the privates. I wish to fix responsibility where it belongs. As it is, the whole Army is being besmirched. A few months ago we were proud of our Army in France, men and officers. Keep up this continual inuendo, and imputation of systematic wrongdoing, and the public will not know what to think, or where credit should be given.

Mr. TILSON. Not the privates, but somebody down about to the grade of company or regimental commanders. Suppose they are not living up in good faith to the orders issued by the War Department itself. Does the gentleman think it is unjust criticism for us to suggest investigations, as we have to determine the facts in the case?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No.

Mr. TILSON. And to point out that they have failed to carry out the orders they have received?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. No. That is not the question, though.

Mr. TILSON. It has been suggested here to-day that it is unjust to do that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have not done so. Not a bit of it. I am upholding your hands. I ask you, a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, what have you done to investigate these cases, and establish responsibility? [Applause.]

Mr. TILSON. I have at least 500 letters——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have as many, possibly.

Mr. TILSON. I have gone through them all, and from them I have selected a few and have presented them here to the House by way of extension of my remarks.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is just what I am protesting against. Why are you loading up the records of this House with matters which appropriately belong to your committee for investigation? [Applause.] Bring before your committee the men whom you think are responsible for this injustice, and when you deal with them you will find that this body, Democrats and Republicans alike, will uphold your committee. [Applause.] I wish to see specific action taken looking to the ascertainment of the merits of these complaints, and the fixation of responsibility.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman knows that members of the Military Affairs Committee on his own side of the House have opposed such action.

Mr. DENT. Name some of them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Have you made any effort along this line? Have you undertaken to have any action taken by the Military Affairs Committee?

Mr. TILSON. I have suggested to the House of Representatives some of the facts I have found.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why not take specific action along the line I have indicated?

Mr. DENT. What is the specific action that the gentleman suggests?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will tell you what is the specific action that I favor.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. There is a specific statement made by the gentleman from Connecticut that a first lieutenant——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman. I wish to get at the facts in this matter.

Mr. DENT. I thought the gentleman yielded to me?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If the gentleman from Alabama had not finished, certainly I yield to him.

Mr. DENT. I ask the gentleman if he has any concrete plan that the Military Affairs Committee could adopt that would correct the various individual cases? Unquestionably some of these individual cases are not getting just treatment.

In an organized Army of nearly 4,000,000 men it is impossible that there should not be such cases. Now, I want to know what the Military Affairs Committee of the House could do by resolution or by inquiry that would correct this situation?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think I have in mind something that could be done.

Mr. DENT. I would like to have it. I want a practical suggestion.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will give you one for what it is worth, as a practical proposition. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] has presented the facts of a specific case, which indicates that gross injustice has been done. Let him bring these facts to the attention of your committee and ask for an inquiry. I think your committee possesses the authority, or can readily secure the authority to deal with that, or any other case, and secure the facts.

Mr. DENT. And then do what?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Why, when you have investigated the facts, bring back a report to this body, and I have no doubt that we will take further and appropriate action. First let us get the facts by appropriate inquiry.

Mr. FIELDS. Let the gentleman introduce his resolution.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Now, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think by yielding I will lose all of my time, but I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman a while ago said it would be advisable to have special instances called attention to. I was about to call attention to the specific instance mentioned by the gentleman from Connecticut, where a first lieutenant undertook to override the general orders. It seemed to me that that might well come within the jurisdiction of the Military Committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I think so. It seems to me that the Committee on Military Affairs might well take up the case of a first lieutenant who attempted to override the orders of his superior officer, and bring before them not only the lieutenant, but the superior officer, and ask the latter why he has allowed proper military authority to be set at defiance by a subordinate.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will yield.

Mr. LONDON. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] made a very serious charge in reference to the conduct of Army officers in France.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. LONDON. That a number of military enterprises and a number of assaults were ordered on unknown ground solely for spectacular purposes. If there is any truth in that charge, it is a very serious indictment, and I believe that that particular accusation ought to be looked into.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If it is made as an accusation——

Mr. LONDON. The most serious charge that I ever heard.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If there is a foundation of sufficient fact for that charge, what conclusion do you deduce from it? Evidently that there has been a great failure somewhere in the high command in France. Are you prepared to believe that?

Mr. LONDON. The charge was made——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand perfectly well what the charge was. We had fondly believed that in France we presented an illustration of the most successful and perfect scheme of military operations ever conducted in any country. But if the charge made is true, that a series of acts evincing gross incapacity, and egregious favoritism, has marked the military management of affairs in that country, then we may well hang our heads in shame. We ought to take some action to ascertain if the charge is true and not leave the whole Army machine under suspicion.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I have heard it said that Gen. Pershing was responsible for the conduct of the war in France. I do not know how you could get the information, but the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee is here, and he ought to have more information on that subject than anybody else.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman ask his question? I have but little time, hence have but little to yield.

Mr. GARNER. I will ask the question, Who is responsible?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have the same knowledge that the gentleman has and no more. We sent Gen. Pershing overseas and in substance said, "Go to it. We will furnish you all the men, money, and authority that you need." This we have done.

Mr. GARNER. That is the statement; but is there any record of it?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not know any more about the facts than the gentleman does. I have only the knowledge common to every Member of this body.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I think we are all in sympathy with proceeding in an orderly way, so, following up the gentleman's suggestion, how could any committee of the House, or how could Congress, interfere in a matter involving discipline in the Army which, under the provisions of the Constitution, is under the supervision of the Commander in Chief?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then, if we can not do anything, why discuss these alleged wrongs and injustices? I am not one of those who believe that we are powerless in this matter, and believe that we can correct this, or any other evil in the Army, the Navy, or the body politic, once we are agreed on action.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman knows——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am rather short of time——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman knows that I am speaking in good faith, and my high opinion of the gentleman's knowledge of the law is that he knows himself——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Will the gentleman put his question?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. This is a serious question, and there is no doubt that there have been abuses, some of which ought to be cured, and perhaps some have gone beyond it, and I ask the gentleman as a lawyer trained in such matters, How can the committee correct a breach of discipline in the Army?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The rules of discipline in the Army are not established by the Constitution.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The enforcement of them are; the responsibility of command and obedience.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The regulations of discipline in the Army, are regulations established under authority afforded by the legislative body, a civilian body.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The enforcement of discipline in the Army is distinctly a function of the Commander in Chief, constitutionally.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Of course, once the rules have been established.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is exactly it.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That brings us back——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. How are we going to correct an individual infraction of those rules?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let us come back to the immediate matter I have been discussing, namely, the administration of military law by the military authorities in France. If the charges that have been projected into this body, rest upon a solid foundation of fact, then there has been a very gross abuse of administration by those authorities. Now who is responsible for that abuse? First establish the facts, then fix the responsibility, then apply the remedy. But do not treat these ex parte charges, as establishing a case against Gen. Pershing and the other military heads in France. At least we ought to reserve judgment until a counter-statement is made.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. DENT. I think there is no question in the mind of anybody that when Gen. Pershing was put in control of the Army in France he was given carte blanche. The Secretary made that statement to me. I am not stating that he ought to be criticized.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Neither am I stating that he ought to be criticized. I am asking the Members of this body, and the public to reserve judgment. In the meantime I maintain that the continued presentation of these ex parte complaints, and unsigned criticisms, as they are played up by the newspapers, serve no useful purpose whatever. They merely operate to besmirch the whole military organization, to sap and undermine public confidence both in its integrity and capacity. When we sent Gen. Pershing to France, you will recall that he was told to use the pruning knife, to cut out all of the dead timber, to remove all of the inefficient officers, and to leave only those in charge of the fighting men who were intellectually, morally, and physically fit for the job. Did you not know at the time that if Gen. Pershing executed the authority afforded, relentlessly, and inexorably in the spirit in which it was intended, that grievious complaints would follow? Have you ever seen a man removed from office in civil life, on the ground of incapacity, who recognized the justice of his decapitation?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to continue for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I shall try to complete what I have to say, in the time given. Was it not inevitable that in this great war some acts of injustice might be done, and grievous complaints would be made in other cases, where the action taken was entirely proper?

It was inevitable that these incidents would attend the development of our gigantic military machine. But to accept as true in advance of inquiry every ex parte complaint, is to give judgment before we hear the facts. It is one thing to believe that in the functioning of a great military machine, occasional acts of injustice may be done. It is quite another to accept offhand charges that, if fully sustained, reveal a military machine fundamentally incapable of doing justice, since the just authority of the Commander in Chief has been replaced by the lawless and mysterious power of a self-constituted clique, which apparently has superseded the Commander in Chief, since it is not alleged that these acts of wrongdoing, have been done with his acquiescence, or by his direction. But in a peculiar sense, the head of an army is responsible for the practices that prevail in its military administration. If these imputed practices have prevailed, then some military head is responsible. Somewhere in the military organization, in the President, the Chief of Staff, the General Staff, the commander in France, this responsibility must be found, if the practices alleged have been allowed to continue, if they have permeated the military system. If they were manifested in an acute form in France, then, the investigations should be conducted in that quarter to ascertain whether they were done with the acquiescence of the supreme authority, or conformably to his directions.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am a good deal concerned about the American troops having been sent to Archangel, and I would like to inquire——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Suppose we confine our attention for the time being, to France, and the abuses of authority alleged to have occurred there. I am not undertaking to give information about Archangel, or Siberia, or other remote portions of the earth.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That is a similar charge, and one that is grave, to my mind.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask the gentleman, was the Leavenworth clique operating in Archangel?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have never heard anything about that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then evidently the gentleman was not here this morning when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN] addressed the House.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was here when he presented the pension bill and until he yielded the floor, and I did not hear——

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. The gentleman did not hear him say anything about the Leavenworth clique?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Not during the time that he was presenting that bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the gentleman must have been asleep.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; not asleep.

Mr. MANN. Mr. GALLIVAN, the gentleman from Massachusetts, took the floor a second time.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Does the gentleman from Virginia hold that in view of the charges made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GALLIVAN], which were brought about, as he said, by the Leavenworth clique, that that is any evidence of the Army being incapable or inefficient?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Certainly, abundant evidence, if the charges can be sustained.

Mr. McKENZIE. Might not they be very capable and very efficient and yet these abuses carried on within the military organization over which, in my judgment, this Congress has no power?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit me to say, the gentleman has asked for something that the Military Committee could do, and he has asked if there is any clique that runs through the Army that is stronger, perhaps, than the commanding general, and I am going to offer the gentleman what I think to be an answer and a suggestion. I am going to say I have every reason to believe—and it has been suggested that some of this is all a vicious assault upon the United States soldier—in my judgment I can demonstrate that on the morning after the battle of the Argonne, when a division came out of battle—that was one of the hardest fought that the world ever saw—a member of this clique from general headquarters came down the day after the battle, as they came out, with all the confusion of battle and with all the tired feeling that a soldier in that shape would have, and wrote in a report the most disgraceful, villianous, villification of the American soldier that was ever made in the history of the world, and I demand now that the Committee on Military Affairs discover—if they can not find, I think I can—the report of Lieut. Col. Peck—that is his name, I think—which was made on the 2d of October, about the division Gen. Traub commanded, the day after the battle. I think if the record warrants it that he ought to be court-martialed and discharged from the Army if his report seems to indicate that he should be. Now, take that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not think the gentleman has suggested a plan.

Mr. LITTLE. Maybe I have overlooked something. My suggestion is that the Committee on Military Affairs look for the report of Lieut. Col. Peck of October 2 about the Traub Division, the Twenty-seventh, I think, and if they find that it is a disgraceful insult to the volunteer soldiers of the Republic they should request the War Department to dismiss the man promptly from the Army. There will be a lot——

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman does not mean the Twenty-seventh Division, does he?

Mr. LITTLE. Coming from Fort Sill, I may have the number wrong. It is the one commanded by Gen. Traub.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was going to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will ask for two more minutes and then I will positively yield the floor. Much of my time has been consumed by interruptions to which I will say however I have cheerfully yielded.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—but how long does the gentleman from Alabama intend to keep the committee here to-night in the consideration of this bill?

Mr. FIELDS. The gentleman from Alabama is off the floor just now, but he intends to try to get through as quickly as possible.

Mr. MANN. Intentions are a good deal like the military policy.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have but two minutes more and I am committed to finishing what I have to say in that time.

I desire to say in conclusion, that I have no doubt that there have been some acts of injustice and some abuse of authority, but with respect to these acts if anyone will offer a resolution looking to an investigation of the same, either of an individual case, or of an aggregate of cases, and the fixation of responsibility, whether in the result that responsibility will attach to the President of the United States, or to some subordinate official, it matters not to me whence that resolution comes, I will vote for it. [Applause.] This is the proper course to be pursued. Unless some specific action is asked, we should not fill the RECORD, and encumber our proceedings with extraneous matter which in the form in which it reaches the public inevitably tends to create the universal impression that the military authorities in France have rewarded demerit, demoted merit, mismanaged military operations, and by incompetence in the field wasted precious American lives. This body should be careful to do nothing, and say nothing which will dim the glory of the American soldiers, and the American officers who reflected undying luster upon their country by their recent achievements upon the historic battle fields of France.

Pay of Military Academy: Permanent establishment: For pay of seven professors, $26,500.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman has not read the first part of the bill. I want to move to amend on page 1——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas will be obliged to secure unanimous consent to return to the first paragraph.

Mr. LITTLE. I do not think so. I was on my feet in plenty of time. I ask unanimous consent——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent——

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that part of the bill has been passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has just so ruled.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes and to return to page 1 for an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to return to the first paragraph. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 1, line 6, after the words "nineteen hundred and twenty," strike out the colon, insert a comma, and the following: "but none of this money shall be expended until the custom of hazing lower-class students by upper-class students has been abolished at the West Point Academy."

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that is not in order.

Mr. LITTLE. That is a limitation. Of course it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. It is a limitation on this money. It says, "the following sum shall be hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, an hour and a half ago I took the liberty of reserving 15 minutes' time to discuss this West Point bill, it being announced there would be no debate thereon. It seems that I have precipitated a discussion of an hour and a half on it; and, after all, there was something in that discussion. I am glad the Committee of the Whole takes an interest in the military bill. I think the first thing you have got to do to rid the American Army of some of this criticism is to stop hazing at West Point. The most trifling feature of hazing is its purely physical development of beating and overawing the younger and weaker men by gangs of cowards and roughnecks from an upper class who would not dare tackle the smaller boys alone. If the superintendent of the academy would apply a paddle to the posterior of each of these desperate devils, who are only desperate when they run in herds and catch freshmen out alone, the whole system would disappear in 20 days. The absolute menace of hazing is the social system at West Point, which Prussianizes young Americans by teaching them that somebody else is better than they are and that they are better than somebody else, establishing a military caste just as dangerous to our Republic as the Bolsheviks.

On a Nile dahbeah a man from Devon and a man from Kansas joshed about the social etiquette of their respective countries. Calling attention to the lofty position of a British duke in England's social order, the Englishman inquired what attitude the American would have toward such a social dignitary. The Kansan said, "Oh, I wouldn't look down on him particularly. In America every citizen is a sovereign, wielding the sovereign power. In England there is only one sovereign, and every Englishman inferior to him socially is necessarily inferior to every American sovereign. But no gentleman would emphasize that to the embarrassment of a nice man." Every American boy should be trained to know that he is the equal of every man alive. This West Point system tends to destroy that natural independence and to make a herd of snobs, Rajputs, and Prussians. We should eliminate snobbery from West Point before we spend another dollar on that academy.

The gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Military Committee, has suggested that I offer something tangible. One of the worst results of this system of snobbery produced by hazing and its social corollary at West Point is the report of Lieut. Col. Peck on the Thirty-fifth Division, where he saw those men come out of the six days' battle, under all the troubles and difficulties that they would have after such fighting.

He did not know anything about such a fight, because, from all I could learn, he was never in one. If he has been a real soldier he should be more loyal to his comrades than to try to ruin their fame and glory. Lieut. Col. Peck, so far as I can learn, was never in any fight. In spotless attire, rolling on the scene in a limousine, he had the gall to offer his puny and presumptuous criticism of those whose shoestrings he was unworthy to unloose. His report is made. That report is an attempt to break down the militia of this country and to destroy the character of the volunteer soldier. It springs from hazing and its consequent snobbery, effective in after life. It springs from this so-called "Leavenworth clique" and its effort to eliminate the National Guard. It is a combination of all the infamous outrages of this war that have been discussed, where professional soldiers have attempted to insult and overreach and drive out of the Army volunteer soldiers. If the committee will take this report and examine it they will find that it is a vicious insult to our soldiers, the flower of the Republic; and if they find it so, then they will see that he has not behaved like an officer and a gentleman; and if he has not he is subject to court-martial. And if this committee wants to do something to purify the Army from these charges—some true and some not—they have an opportunity to do it. This man made a report on the Kansas and Missouri boys—the Thirty-fifth Division—after he inspected them as they came out of the six-day battle in the Argonne, which, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

HEADQUARTERS THIRTY-FIFTH DIVISION,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
October 16, 1918.

Memorandum for: C. G., Sixty-ninth Infantry Brigade; C. G., Seventieth Infantry Brigade; C. G., Sixtieth Field Artillery Brigade; and to their respective regimental commanders.

1. The division commander directs that the attached copy of report of Lieut. Col. R. G. Peck, inspector general, corps inspector, be furnished you, together with copy of his reply.

2. The reflection on the discipline makes the division commander's cheeks burn, and he counts on his brigade and regimental commanders to eradicate the cause of these disparaging remarks.

3. Each regimental commander will immediately investigate, report upon, and make recommendations concerning the loss of Stokes mortars, Chauchat rifles, pistols, and rifles in each organization.

H. S. HAWKINS,
Colonel, General Staff, Chief of Staff.

HEADQUARTERS FIRST ARMY CORPS,
AMERICAN EXPEDITIONARY FORCES,
Headquarters First Army Corps, October 12, 1918.

From: Lieut. Col. R. G. Peck, I. G., corps inspector.
To: Commanding general, Thirty-fifth Division, American Expeditionary Forces.
Subject: Irregularities and deficiencies noted at recent inspection.

1. Under the provisions of Army Regulations, 692, the following statement of irregularities and deficiencies observed during the inspection of your command October 2–9, 1918, is furnished you:

(a) March discipline: The march discipline of the division observed during the three days' marching was poor, and the following faults were noted:

All parts of units failed to move at the appointed hour, which caused several columns to meet and try to move on the same road.

There was no attempt to maintain distance between battalions, regiments, or even brigades. On October 2 practically the entire division, less the artillery, with combined field and combat trains marched in a solid column without any interval between units or gaps in the transportation.

There was little or no supervision on the march on the part of the officers. Enlisted men throughout the division fell out of ranks at will and rejoined the column as best they could or became stragglers. There was, however, very little real straggling noticed. There was no evidence of officers or anybody in authority being detailed to march in rear of organizations with a view of insuring proper march discipline.

At rest halts there was no apparent effort made to have foot troops clear the road. At times traffic was blocked by men sitting and lying in the road.

Many unauthorized men were observed riding on wagons. Sick men had been ordered to ride on wagons instead of being placed in ambulance by proper authority.

Mounted men failed to dismount at halts.

Wagons were poorly loaded and overloaded. In many instances wagons were loaded with rations, ammunition, baggage, etc. There was no evidence that an attempt had been made to load the various classes of supplies in separate wagons.

The march discipline of the Field Artillery brigade, which marched separately, was good. It was noticeable that at each halt the mounted men immediately dismounted and looked over their animals, officers supervising.

(b) Camps and billets: Camps and billets were in fair condition, except those pertaining to the One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry, although kitchen areas in practically all units were dirty and showed lack of inspection on the part of officers concerned. The One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry was inspected 18 hours after arrival at its permanent location. At 9.30 a. m., the hour of inspection, the shelter-tent camp at the two battalions was in a disgraceful condition. A few straddle trenches had been dug, but apparently not used * * * The enlisted men were very dirty, and most of them had made no attempt to wash that morning, although water was close by and available. Arms and equipment were strewn about the camp. Nearly every rifle inspected was covered with rust and dirt and no attempt had been made to clean them. The animals of the supply company had not been groomed.

Except in the One hundred and fortieth Infantry, whose billets were in very good condition, there was a very apparent lack of inspection on the part of battalion and company officers. No orders had been given for a neat and orderly arrangement of blankets and equipment.

(c) Animals: The animals of all units, except the Artillery and One hundred and tenth Ammunition Train, were in fair condition, considering the hard work they had performed during the recent operations; that is, long hauls, long hours under harness, and short rations. There is practically no disease among them, and all they need is rest, good grooming, and sufficient food for a week or 10 days to put them in good shape.

The animals in the Artillery brigade and the One hundred and tenth Ammunition Train are in very weak and run-down condition. They have been overworked and underfed, and, in my opinion, it will be several weeks before they are in good condition.

Animals on hand in the division:
Sept. 25	5,370
Oct. 6	4,152
Loss by casualties and evacuation	1,218
Shortage Oct. 10	3,000

The shortage in the Artillery brigade and One hundred and tenth Ammunition Train is so great that until replacements are received these units are practically immobile.

Animals on hand and shortage in above units.

	On hand.	Shortage.
One hundred and twenty-eighth Field Artillery	333	641
One hundred and twenty-ninth Field Artillery	375	799
One hundred and thirtieth Field Artillery	461	977
One hundred and tenth Ammunition Train	328	296

(d) Clothing: The division needs practically an entire reissue of clothing. There has been no issue of clothing in this division since it left the Vosges sector about September 1. Most of the units were without dubbin, and the majority of the men inspected had never used any on the shoes they were wearing.

(e) Equipment: The division was well equipped, with the exception of transportation, just prior to the recent operations, commencing September 26. Nearly all organizations are now short considerable personal ordnance equipment. Accurate figures could not be obtained, but the division ordnance officer reported that he believed there was a 15 to 20 per cent loss of mess kits, knives, forks, pack carriers, etc. The following shortages of other ordnance equipment now exists: Forty-four machine guns, 5 Stokes mortars, 304 Chauchat rifles, 1,876 pistols, and 2,600 rifles.

It will be noted that this shortage is for present strength, and indicates considerable loss on the battle field. Two hundred and ninety-nine men of the One hundred and thirty-seventh Infantry were noticed marching in ranks without rifles who were supposed to have them. The regimental commander reported that these men did not have rifles. A considerable number of men rejoined the division between October 1 and 9 from hospitals without equipment, which accounts for part of this shortage. The One hundred and thirtieth Machine Gun Battalion lost 22 machine guns, put out of action or abandoned. Company D of this battalion lost 11. The battalion commander stated that the company became disorganized September 29 in the Montrebeau Woods and fell back without their machine guns.

There is practically no gun oil in the division. All units reported that they had been without it for some time. There is also a great shortage of saddle soap and oil for harness and other equipment.

(f) Quartermaster supplies: A number of rolling kitchens are missing and many others are in an unserviceable condition. In the One hundred and thirty-eighth Infantry there is a great shortage of kitchen utensils throughout the regiment. Several companies in this regiment had practically no equipment to prepare food and were improvising and borrowing as best they could; other shortages of quartermaster supplies are small.

(g) Ambulances: The division has only 12 mule ambulances, 8 motor ambulances, G. M. C., and 3 motor ambulances, Ford.

(h) Discipline: The division as a whole has none of the outward signs of a well-disciplined organization. Saluting throughout is very poor. Individuals and groups of men pay no attention to passing officers, and in many cases fail to get up when spoken to. It was very noticeable that the junior officers made no attempt to enforce discipline. Hundreds of men were noticed out of billets on the streets in improper uniform and with blouses unbottoned and no attempt made to be neat or orderly. Passing officers paid no attention to them and made no effort to correct these irregularities.

Most of the organizations inspected showed all the earmarks of National Guard units, which they are. Captains and lieutenants were continually noticed on most familiar terms with enlisted men. Most of the orders that I heard given were in a more or less apologetic and familiar tone, and the results were what could be expected. The regimental commanders and field officers accompanying me practically asked the enlisted men to stand at attention and salute the inspector.

R. G. PECK.

Mr. LITTLE. When their country called, the boys of Kansas and Missouri marched off to victory or death on the plains of Europe. The tramp of their marching feet shook the hills of the Argonne. The thunder of their "hell-roaring howitzers" scorched the skies. They charged the nests of machine guns that held the poilu at bay for four long years and drove the boches across the Rhine. As they came out of the frightful combat and glorious triumph, worn, weary, battle stained, but with magnificent victory perching upon the banners of these civilian soldiers, they were met by this lily-fingered inspector, Lieut. Col. Peck, forsooth a West Point expert:

> Neat, trimly dressed,
> Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin new reap'd
> Showed like a stubble land at harvest home;
> Perfumed like a milliner.
> And as the soldiers bore dead bodies by
> He called them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
> To bring a slovenly, unhandsome corse
> Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
> With many holiday and lady terms
> He questioned me;
> For he made me mad,
> To see him shine so brisk and smell so sweet.
> And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman
> Of guns and drums and wounds. God save the mark!
> And that it was great pity, so it was,
> This villainous salt petre should be digged
> Out of the bowels of the harmless earth.
> And but for these vile guns
> He would himself have been a soldier.

Inspector Peck forgot to tell Shakespeare's Hotspur, "they showed all the earmarks of a National Guard unit, which they are." Shakespeare forgot to say that "captains and enlisted men from Kansas and Missouri in the Thirty-fifth Division came out of the gates of hell at the Argonne 'on most familiar terms' and 'gave their orders in a more or less apologetic and familiar tone.'"

Harry Hotspur's inspector overlooked the fact that "saluting was very poor" as Kansas and Missouri units of the National Guard came off the field where they had beaten the German disciplined, professional army to death, after everybody else had failed in the task. Hotspur doesn't mention the fact that they came out of battle "with blouses unbuttoned," "which passing officers paid no attention to." One line of Inspector Lily-fingered Peck's opinion of the heroes of the Argonne is so much better fitted for disinfection than for perusal, compels its omission. "Wagons were poorly loaded or overloaded" as they came out of the Argonne. Where was the expert Peck and his comrades in expertness when they loaded the wagons in the Argonne? Where was he at 4.30 in the morning, when the big guns began to roar the first day of the battle? Where were Peck and his like when the lads from Kansas and Missouri National Guard went over the top? Where was Peck when they charged in the teeth of machine guns that swept the earth like hailstones? Where was Peck when the Thirty-fifth Division outmarched its artillery and did not wait for the divisions to the right and the left, but fought its way through the German fortifications and shattered the concrete fortifications that "these military men," these experts had declared impregnable? Where was Peck, the educated and trained expert, when civilian soldiers fought and died for their country? Where was Peck when 827 soldiers of the Thirty-fifth Division died in battle in six days for the country that educated him at West Point and stands between his family and starvation every day in the year? Why, he was back at headquarters, perfuming for the fray that he would start when they straggled back in glory and honor, in mud and rust, in disorder and triumph, but, thank God, in familiar love and affection between officers and men who in six days' fighting at the Argonne had forgotten that the principal duty of a soldier was to salute a lily-fingered inspector and march in such gilded and orderly array as would please his corseted soldierdom and his belladonnaed eyes of criticism.

On the indorsement of Peck's report, I read, signed by H. S. Hawkins, colonel, general staff, chief of staff:

> The reflection on the discipline makes the division commander's cheeks burn, and he counts on his brigade and regimental commanders to eradicate the cause of these disparaging remarks.

You can see that the Thirty-fifth Division had a faithful comrade in the chief of staff who sent them into action. Not a line has he to say in protest against this villainous assault upon the men he sent into battle, not a word to tell of their valor, of their courage, or their heroism, and of the skill with which they beat the best-disciplined army in the world into the bowels of the earth among its wrecked concrete. The Thirty-fifth Division should have marched without salute, in disorderly array and on familiar terms, by Hawkins and Peck and spat on them till the current carried them downstream into the depths of oblivion, followed by the everlasting curse of every gallant soldier who ever risked his life for his country.

Then it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, 'ow's yer soul?"
But it's "Thin red line of 'eroes" when the drums begin to roll,
The drums begin to roll, my boys, the drums begin to roll;
Oh, it's "Thin red line of 'eroes" when the drums begin to roll.

While it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Tommy, fall be'ind,"
But it's "Please to walk in front, sir," when there's trouble in the wind.
There's trouble in the wind, my boys, there's trouble in the wind;
Oh, it's "Please to walk in front, sir," when there's trouble in the wind.

For it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' "Chuck him out, the brute!"
But it's "Savior of 'is country" when the guns begin to shoot;
An' it's Tommy this, an' Tommy that, an' anything you please;
But Tommy ain't a bloomin' fool—you bet that Tommy sees!

If this report is an insult to the heroes of the Argonne he is liable to court-martial for not being an officer and a gentleman. If this committee will investigate it and determine that he is not, and will ask for his court-martial, you will have brought the whole thing to a head, and you will secure the reform in the Army we need.

Gen. Pershing is not to blame for that report. No fighting man is. The men who make such reports never go to battle, but are what are called "experts" in the Army. They have failed in all their expertness. Their claim to efficiency has been exploded and yet they undertake to destroy the reputation of volunteer fighting men by such a report as this. And if you take that fellow and court-martial him and discharge him from the Army you will bring the whole thing to a head, and you will do more good to stop hazing and snobbery and its vicious outcome than you can do in any other way.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. I can not yield just yet. This man Peck picked out a division of heroes coming from one of the world's greatest victories. The man probably never participated in any action at all and had no comprehension of the conditions natural and inevitable among such troops at such a time. Any soldier could have explained it to him, but he was a military man, and he wished to destroy the standing of civilian soldiers in order to increase the reputation of professionally trained and educated military men. He showed the cloven foot and divulged their whole scheme to wreck the National Guard. Less than 40 per cent of the Regular Army and its West Pointers went to France, and a very small percentage, I am told, of those in action leading troops were educated professionals. This man should be court-martialed and his name should be placed in an eternal pillory that he who runs may read that the American boy who enters the Army to fight is the man who wins all our battles from Concord to Guiguinto.

Now, that is the suggestion I make; and I want to say in conclusion, gentlemen, that all the upshot of this is—and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] wants to know the upshot—that the alleged "military experts" have fallen down practically every time during this war, and the tide of battle in this war was turned at Chateau-Thierry by raw soldiers, some of whom had been in the Army only 16 weeks. And if the battles of this country are won, as at Chateau-Thierry, by volunteers and drafted men, and not by the military experts, for that reason it is not proper that they should be subjected to the criticism they have received from such men as this. If the committee will do what I have suggested with Col. Peck, it will do a lot of good to the whole American Army for centuries to come.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to take exception to the statement that snobbishness exists in our Military and Naval Academies to-day, as discussed by the gentleman from Kansas. I think most of us Congressmen, and Senators, too, conduct examinations under the Civil Service Commission when selecting men for nominations to these academies, and thereby we get men of all classes, kinds, and conditions. In my own experience I know that the 10 or a dozen young men whom I have appointed to Annapolis or West Point in the past four years have been young men in humble circumstances. One boy's letter especially appealed to me. He says:

Mr. OLNEY, I have been playing tennis here at Annapolis. I thought this was a rich man's game.

I have appointed boys to West Point and Annapolis who sold papers and periodicals as a livelihood before entrance into the academies, or who were engaged in other useful occupations, and I find that such boys make good, rank high in their studies, and exert a good moral influence at West Point and Annapolis. I want to repeat that I take exception to the criticism that there is snobbishness prevalent to any extent in our military and naval academies.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I divert for a moment from the discussion of West Point Academy by reciting some experiences during a visit I paid this afternoon to St. Elizabeths Hospital in the District of Columbia. I shall attempt to prove that the criticisms directed against the management of the institution are unfair, unjust, and without foundation. I thought to myself, as perhaps many of you did, that it was an improper place as a hospital for the insane to send soldiers and sailors convalescing from overseas and from our camps and cantonments in the United States to recover.

I found registered there to-day 3,782 patients, of which 2,425 were white men, and 420 colored men. There were about 1,200 soldiers and sailors there.

The gentleman from Illinois may have seen fit very justly to criticize the War Department for sending to St. Elizabeths 300 men detached from the hospital surgeon's office to take care of the patients, but it was absolutely necessary on account of the existing shortage of labor especially in the class of hospital attendants. I went out to the institution unannounced and Dr. White, manager of the hospital, accompanied me through various buildings. I am impressed with his humane treatment of patients, and am thoroughly convinced that the institution is conducted in an efficient manner, and that the inmates are not subject to cruel and abusive treatment. I confirm the statement made in the House a few days ago by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in effect that St. Elizabeths should be stamped with a clean bill of health.

I talked with several patients, and from observation I can say to you that none are sent to this institution unless they have been under careful medical observation in other hospitals throughout the country for various kinds of diseases; and if they are pronounced partially insane or entirely insane they are sent to St. Elizabeths Hospital, where they can be watched carefully and can be treated by eminent specialists in diseases of the mind. Mind you, no soldiers or sailors are sent to St. Elizabeths except those who are suffering from partial insanity, depressed condition of the mind, and whose mental condition would be benefited by treatment there.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLNEY. Certainly.

Mr. LITTLE. Just what has this insane asylum to do with West Point?

Mr. OLNEY. Nothing at all; but I asked the patience of the House for departing from the subject of the bill to a subject not quite germane to the Military Academy. But I thought, as a member of the committee, I might correct an impression which many Members of Congress may share, that things are not perhaps properly conducted at St. Elizabeths Hospital. There are 1,200 soldiers there in various stages of convalescence, and the only particular criticism I had to direct to Dr. White, the superintendent, was that certain patients who had convalesced and who had become greatly improved as to their mental condition should not be allowed to associate in those wards where there were almost violently insane patients; and he answered that such cases were being corrected as rapidly as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. OLNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment, and I will ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman withhold his point of order?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LITTLE: Page 1, line 6, after the figures "1920," strike out the colon and insert a comma and the following: "but none of this money shall be expended until the superintendent has certified to the Secretary of War that the custom of hazing of lower classmen by upper-class students has been abolished at the West Point Academy."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. If this amendment is adopted, will it permit the hazing of the upper classmen by the lower classmen? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not regard that as a parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman from Ohio make his point of order?

Mr. GORDON. I do not see any objection to the amendment now in its modified form, unless the chairman wants to make a point of order.

Mr. DENT. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. LITTLE) there were—ayes 7, noes 27.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARRISON of Virginia: At the bottom of page 1 insert the following: "And provided, That the course of instruction at the United States Military Academy shall continue to be the present regular four-year course until Congress by appropriate legislation shall provide otherwise."

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on that.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is simply to keep the course of instruction at West Point just as it now is, four years, until Congress shall by appropriate legislation determine what shall be the policy at that institution. It seems to me that is a matter that ought to be determined by legislation and not by an Executive order or the Chief of Staff.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In a parallel case, as, for instance, the curriculum and courses of study in our State universities, does the gentleman believe that the State legislature should determine the course of study or that it should be left to the regents of the respective institutions?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I think the State legislatures generally determine those matters.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not in the State of Wisconsin or the State of Michigan.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. When they appropriate the money they determine what character of institution they propose to have.

Mr. STAFFORD. They do not prescribe the length of the course of study to be pursued by the students who attend the university, either the professional schools or the academic.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. They may not determine what studies shall be pursued, but they certainly determine the character of the institution.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Is it not the practice of most legislatures of the States to say that before a degree shall be granted to a student, whether of medicine or of law, or a doctor of philosophy or a bachelor of arts, that so many years of study, or their equivalent elsewhere, shall be passed in the institution which the State conducts?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That has been my understanding, of course.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not understand that the State undertakes to prescribe just what textbooks shall be used or what particular subject shall be treated at any institution, but that it does determine the character of the institution.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Of course, the gentleman is quite aware, as we all are, that this debate now is proceeding on the merits of the amendment rather than on the point of order.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. The point of order is not made, but reserved.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I understand that. Having that in mind, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. I am more or less in sympathy with the idea that there ought to be some revision of the length and character of the course of study at West Point, but I think the gentleman, as well as many others of us who have given some attention to the subject, are persuaded that this is not a good time to put ourselves on record in one direction or another with regard to finalities on that question.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. This does not.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is my fear that, while it is intended not to do that, the effect of for the first time writing into our statute law a limitation as to the course of study at West Point, a thing we have not done in this generation, will be taken as a precedent and a basis upon which argument in the next Congress will be so firmly attached that we will never be able to dislodge it.

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. That is not my information. My information is that until recently the course has been prescribed as a four-year course by law.

Mr. GORDON. When was that?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not know. That is what I was informed at the Military Academy—that until recently it was a matter prescribed by law.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Even at that, it is not now prescribed by law, we are informed. Ought we to go to the point of writing into law this unnecessary thing, which may act to prejudice against writing into the law hereafter just what we may want?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. My object is to write this into the law now to prevent the Chief of Staff changing the course until Congress has an opportunity to say whether it shall be changed. In other words, if the provision is not incorporated in this act, it is my belief that an Executive order will change the whole course of instruction in that institution. It is for that reason that I desire to obtain a statutory provision to keep the West Point of to-day until Congress can say whether we shall have a West Point of another character and kind to-morrow.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I sympathize with the gentleman's intention most heartily, and I think such interchange of personal opinion that we have had heretofore accords with that, but it seems to me, from a parliamentary viewpoint, this is the wrong way to go about it, and I shall have to object.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the point of order, I want to ask the gentleman, this is new legislation, is it not? There is no legislation of that kind now on the statute books?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No, sir.

Mr. LITTLE. What is there on the books anywhere in the way of legislation that would authorize this appropriation?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. My understanding has been that until recently the statute prescribed the course at West Point that it should be four years, and it has been continued as a four years' course until recently. What I am afraid of is that by Executive order, or military order, the whole course at the institution will be changed.

Mr. LITTLE. Is not this new legislation, and if it is not, what is the old legislation?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I will admit that perhaps it is new legislation.

Mr. LITTLE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order. It is as easy for us to make points of order as it is for the committee.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I notice by the hearings that Col. Tillman says that the class that entered last June will go out in 1920. What does the gentleman understand by that?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that during the war we needed officers, and they graduated two classes in advance of the regular time of graduation, and then they had an appointment of two cadets by each Congressman to take the place of those that graduated. The intention was if the war had continued to graduate them at the end of one year. Now they are trying to get back to the four-year course.

Mr. PLATT. They could not immediately get back to it, and would not the gentleman's amendment prevent it?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. No; my amendment is to keep the institution as it now is until Congress can adopt a plan for the institution. It is going to mean a great deal for every Member of this body if by Executive order the character of that institution should be changed. As a Member said a few minutes ago, we have been accustomed to go out among our young boys, taking them from the high schools and from all walks of life, and sending them to this institution to be there trained and developed. If the character of that institution is changed none of those boys can get into that institution, because the standard will be so high that nobody but a college graduate can enter. In other words, the report of the academic board, which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made a part of the RECORD, which is a report made in response to the request of Gen. March that the course be adapted to a three-year course, goes fully into the question. It shows that it is absolutely necessary to cut off one year either at the end of the course or one year at the beginning of the course. It can not be done at the end of the course, because that is when the cadets receive their military instruction, and the boy would have to receive that instruction, if he did not receive it at West Point, at some other military institution. Therefore, it would be necessary to cut out the first year's course, and in doing that the high-school boy, the plain, simple country boy, would be denied admission to the institution.

Congress, in 1916, increased the number of cadets to twice the number theretofore authorized, and it seems to me plainly indicated the high popular regard in which the institution is held.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing selections from certain letters that I have received in regard to a matter discussed this afternoon on the floor of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia, upon the ground that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to withhold that for a few minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall withhold the point of order for the accommodation of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. It seems to me very clear that the course at West Point could well be and ought to be cut down to three years. I have read the report of the general committee of the academic board on this subject, and it is obvious there is but one way to do it, and that is to cut one year off the beginning of the course. They say in order to do that they will have to require algebra (complete), plane and solid geometry, plane trigonometry, English grammar, English composition and literature, history, geography, and beginning French. Nearly every college in the country requires about that for entrance.

The Military Academy at West Point is below the average college in requirement, and, strange as it may seem, that is one reason why boys fail to pass West Point examinations. At the average age for entrance to West Point the average boy preparing for college has progressed in his school work way beyond West Point requirements, and in order to pass the examination has to go to a fitting school and cram up on stuff which he studied five years ago and which he has partly forgotten. If you raise the West Point requirements to the average college requirements, and require a modern language, algebra (complete), and plane and solid geometry, and plane trigonometry, which can be studied in every high school, there will be less trouble for boys to get into West Point than now. They will then enter a year later, and the course can just as well be cut down to three years as not. It is merely necessary to make the West Point requirements conform to the requirements of the college entrance board. I taught for two years in a military school and I used to prepare boys for West Point. Furthermore, West Point is in my district and I have long been interested in its work and have tried to keep somewhat in touch with it.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Not at present. I have discussed the matter with instructors at West Point; some are for it and some are aganist it. I have read this report with a good deal of interest, and I think their conclusions are more or less ridiculous. There is no word of recognition in the report of the fact that college entrance requirements are above West Point requirements. The average requirement for all of the great eastern colleges—Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Cornell—are all higher than for West Point, and I have no doubt the same is true in respect to most of the western colleges. Practically every high school gives these studies which the academic board says "few public schools cover thoroughly," and where there may be now and then one high school that does not, a little extra study would prepare any bright boy to enter West Point on the requirements they say are necessary to cut a year off the course.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Reverting to the requirements for entrance in colleges, what is true of the eastern universities is true throughout the country.

Mr. PLATT. That is what I believe.

Mr. FESS. Each State has a college association. Membership in that college association is determined by the standard of entrance in it, which is 15 units. Then there are the general college associations, taking in colleges of the various States, so that the gentleman is correct as to the requirements of the college being higher than the requirements mentioned here.

Mr. PLATT. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his statement. The gentleman was until recently a college president and is an authority on the subject.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is it not true also that one of the reasons why the standard for entrance is kept low is the fact that West Point still continues to teach an academic or high-school course of a general character before it begins to specialize on military science and kindred sciences?

Mr. PLATT. It does. Its first year is practically a high-school year, with, of course, rather more intensive work than that in most high schools.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Yes; and the result is that, founded years ago when secondary schools were not common, they thought they had to give, as they did have to give, an academic education as well as a military education to a young candidate for a commission.

Mr. PLATT. I think that is largely true.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is not true of the social, economic, and educational conditions of this generation.

Mr. PLATT. Certainly not. The high schools practically all afford an opportunity to prepare boys for college to-day and therefore the requirements ought to be brought up to the average college requirements. There will be no trouble; it will not hurt anybody, and I believe the raising of the requirements will make it easier for a great many boys to get to West Point than it is at present. We have the cases of boys from 19 to 20 years of age who have gone through all these simple subjects four or five years before in the high school. It seems to me that the conclusions of the committee of the academic board in paragraphs 15 and 16 of their report are almost wholly unwarranted. The entrance requirements would not lose touch with the public-school system. More, rather than fewer, of the most desirable class of young men would present themselves for examination. In order to make sure that I was not wrong about my comparison of college entrance requirements with West Point requirements—for my own teaching days were a good while ago—I talked the matter over very recently with a couple of preparatory school mathematics teachers in Baltimore, and they agreed with me fully. I was a little in doubt about what the academic board meant by algebra (complete), but they assured me that this does not include what is known as higher algebra, but is what they are teaching every day in preparing boys for college. Even if algebra (complete), solid geometry, plane trigonometry, and French were added to the present West Point requirements they would not be equal to the entrance requirements of the leading eastern colleges. Some of them require Latin and Greek, or an equivalent, besides.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. The amendment seeks to take away discretion that now lodges in an executive department to determine the curriculum, the course of study at the Military Academy at West Point. In the debate this afternoon on this institution it was admitted, as I recall, that there was no law existing as to the length of the course of study at West Point. Certainly if there is such a law it was violated during the present war, when the course of instruction was reduced from four years to one year. The fact that the course of instruction was reduced without any direct authorization by law rather confirms the position that the length of the term is a matter of regulation rather than of legislation. Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, if the course of instruction is determined by regulation, therefore this amendment would interfere with the discretion now lodged in the executive officers. There are plenty of decisions that hold that even an amendment in the form of a limitation that limits the discretion of an executive officer in the performance of his duty necessarily is legislation. I think I have said sufficient to show the Chair that this is legislation and is not in order on this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia if he concedes this is legislation?

Mr. HARRISON of Virginia. I think it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of cadets, $960,000: Provided, That the pay of cadets shall be fixed at $780 per annum and one ration per day, or commutation therefor, such commutation to be 67 per cent over and above the cost of the Army ration, to be paid from the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army: Provided, That the provisions of the item above shall be operative from and after July 1, 1918.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the paragraph. There is on the calendar a bill that embodies the same provision as incorporated in this paragraph, which seeks to increase the allowance to cadets from $600 to $780 per annum and increases the commutation of rations 67 per cent over that which they now receive. I make the point of order.

Mr. DENT. The point of order, of course, is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Having made the point of order to the entire paragraph, does the gentleman from Alabama wish to make any amendment for pay of cadets?

Mr. DENT. I will have to reduce the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to ask unanimous consent to return?

Mr. DENT. Not at this time—until I have the figures.

The Clerk read as follows:

For extra pay of officers of the Army on detached service at the Military Academy: For pay of one superintendent, United States Military Academy (brigadier general), in addition to his regular pay, $1,000: Provided, That the provisions of the above item shall be operative so long as Col. S. E. Tillman continues as superintendent of the West Point Military Academy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that part of the paragraph after the word "Academy" in line 13.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to concede the point of order?

Mr. DENT. I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one commandant of cadets (lieutenant colonel) in addition to pay as captain or major, $1,100.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Perhaps this place is not as opportune as was some other paragraph upon which to base my remarks. I take this opportunity to make an observation as to the discharge of soldiers now in this country not because of any definite knowledge of my own, but quoting some that is going out to the country and which I assume is correct. Gov. McKelvie, of our State, was importuned by the farmers of the State to do what he could to obtain the release of boys for the 1st of March farm work. He came to Washington and interviewed the Secretary of War.

The governor before leaving said that he was assured by the Secretary of War that the soldiers would be demobilized by the 1st of March. I thought it would be proper to have it understood here as to what word is going out to the country.

But what I particularly desire to talk about is the matter of Army and West Point snobbery suggested to-day by Col. LITTLE, and on the 28th of last month by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON]. If, as a matter of fact, the institution at West Point does teach the snobbery that we find some officers later practicing in the Army under certain circumstances, I would not be in favor of voting one dollar for its support. As to the snobbery at West Point I do not affirm or deny.

I desire to read in your hearing that which went into the RECORD on the 28th of last month as a part of the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], which is embodied in an order issued by Gen. Buck, who is in command of Camp MacArthur. It is as follows:

OFFICERS ADVISED SOCIALLY—CAN'T MINGLE WITH ENLISTED MEN—BY COMMAND OF GEN. BUCK ORDER POSTED REGARDING ENTERTAINMENTS.

The following order has been posted at Camp MacArthur:

Headquarters, Camp MacArthur, Waco, Tex., January 6, 1919, General Orders, No. 1.

1. The attention of officers of this command is called to the impropriety of attending social affairs at which enlisted men, or persons in the uniform of enlisted men, are present.

Any institution in this country, supported by public money, that teaches a doctrine of that kind should be wiped off our political and economic map. [Applause.] More than that:

Hereafter any officer of this command who finds enlisted men present with proper authority, i. e., duly invited or permitted to pay their way in, at any social affair at which the officer is a guest, such officer will at once depart from such social affair, and if he finds persons in the uniform of enlisted men permitted to be present he will take the same action.

I know across the water that "person" is the word that indicates "inferiority or degradation." They say, not "this man," not "this soldier," but "this person."

When an officer finds enlisted men present at any social affair without proper authority, he will take such steps as the occasion may warrant to cause them to leave, and will report any violation of regulations which may occur.

By command of Maj. Gen. Buck.

W. H. WOOLWORTH,
Major, Infantry, United States Army, Acting Executive Officer.

Official:

E. E. LAMBERT,
Major, Adjutant General's Department, Adjutant.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield there for a moment?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. LITTLE. I suggest to the Committee on Military Affairs, that wanted suggestions, that an officer who issued an order like that in time of war about American soldiers is not an officer and a gentleman, and under the articles of war is subject to court-martial. If the committee wants to do one thing more than anything else to improve the Army, it will call the attention of the department to that and advise that this fellow be court-martialed.

Mr. SLOAN. Now, to invite or to force any boy into the ranks from the homes of America and give him to understand that he is not as good without shoulder straps as he is with them is un-American. I should like to see some good, manly, young enlisted man, when insulted as he would be by the observance of that order, send out his good right arm and send his insulter to mother earth. [Applause.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. May I interrupt the gentleman in order to call his attention to the article of war which says that if an enlisted man as much as lifts his hand as though to strike a commissioned officer he will be punished by death?

Mr. SLOAN. And he could not sell his life at a better price than that, to raise the question in America as to whether there are to be these obnoxious social distinctions in the American service. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given another five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. SLOAN. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Just following up that last statement that the gentleman from Nebraska has made, that he believes the soldier ought to take the law into his own hands, now, the gentleman is himself a lawyer and a peaceful, law-abiding citizen; and does he recommend to our young men under military discipline that, disapproving of any order, they should, without any judicial inquiry whatever, knock down an officer that issued the order?

Mr. SLOAN. No man, with shoulder straps or without, has a right to insult a fellow American.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I said the gentleman is a lawyer, but he need not prove it by any evasion.

Mr. SLOAN. I am glad you say I am a lawyer in the open, with all these witnesses about. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I want you to give me an answer to my question. Are we to understand you to say that without any judicial investigation or trial of the facts in the case, a young soldier's opinion as to whether that order was insulting or not would be to him a full warrant, or sufficient warrant, for violence on his part?

Mr. SLOAN. No intelligent, red-blooded American would have any doubt that the enforcement of that order is an insult to an American soldier.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. This matter has been settled by the courts-martial of this country, and the question that the gentleman from Vermont asked has been answered. During the Civil War, Gen. Nelson, a volunteer, a very able man from Kentucky, who probably saved that State to the Union, was assembling and marshaling the forces, when Col. Jefferson C. Davis, a West Pointer, a little fellow, went in to see Nelson. Gen. Nelson, a big man, said to the little regular, "How many men have you in your regiment?" Davis said, "About 800." Nelson turned on him, and to those about him said, "That is a correct answer, is it, for a colonel of the Regular Army to make? Blank blank you, go out and find how many men you have got." Jefferson C. Davis went out and got a pistol and came back and shot him dead. That is the answer that the Regular Army makes when it takes the law into its own hands. I think that answers the gentleman.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am appealing to another authority,

Mr. LITTLE. I think a client ought to be satisfied with the dictum of his court.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am satisfied if the gentleman from Kansas is satisfied.

Mr. SLOAN. I enjoy the ingenuity of the gentleman's interrogations.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I would rather be treated to facts than be smothered in a bed of roses. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLOAN. Then why does not my friend get some facts? I have a great store for him.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I am asking you for them now. Do you recommend as an established doctrine for the discipline of the Army at any time that every soldier, feeling himself aggrieved by the text of an order, should himself be empowered to construe its intent or effect and determine whether it was proper or improper, whether it was insulting or what not, and, having made such a consideration of it in his own mind, take the law into his own hands and punish by physical violence the officer who issued that order?

Mr. SLOAN. The gentleman has taken into his question entirely too much territory. My statement was made with reference to and within the scope of the obnoxious order quoted and its enforcement. The order being discussed does not relate to rank or obedience while in the ranks, in battle, or anywhere else where military discipline is involved. The soldier owes obedience to his superior officer in things military. But he should not admit inferiority or degradation socially, morally, religiously, or politically.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. That is the statement the gentleman made in substance.

Mr. SLOAN. When an order is made that where a soldier is invited to his father's house, or to his friend's house, and finds an officer there, and the officer drives him forth, or, with much ostentation, leaves himself, so that the insult is palpable, I think the argument ad hominum, delivered in the manly American way, in accordance with the American art of offense and defense, is the only proper treatment. It is the only argument that some men, vain coxcombs and mere martinets, under many circumstances are ever able to understand. It is the only way that brings them to a realization of what they ought to do. I know that a Green Mountain boy, such as my friend GREENE was in the Philippine War times, would not put up with an insult without visiting condign punishment, such as a man has the right to visit upon a soothless insulter, whether he ranks him in the Army or out of it. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to the item on page 2, for pay of cadets, where I wish to offer an amendment, in view of the fact that the proviso was held to be subject to a point of order. I ask unanimous consent to return to page 2, line 5, for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to return to page 2, line 5, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 2, line 5, insert:
"For pay of cadets, $600,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SABATH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

HOUR OF MEETING ON MONDAY.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow it adjourn to meet at 11 a. m. on Monday. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina what he plans to take up on Monday out of the ordinary?

Mr. KITCHIN. I shall ask unanimous consent that the House dispense with the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar for the purpose of concluding the Military Academy bill, and that after the Military Academy bill is disposed of we go back to the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that on Monday the business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar be dispensed with pro tanto; that is, until the Military Academy bill is finished, and then that the House take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are quite a number of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar that Members are anxious to dispose of. These bills are quite important. No one knows how long it will take to dispose of the Military Academy bill if we take it up on Monday morning. It may take a very large part of the day, in which event the unanimous-consent business would not be considered. It seems to me that it would be just as well to take up the unanimous-consent business at 11 o'clock in the morning, dispose of it, and then take up the Military Academy bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. I suggest that it would be impossible to dispose of the Unanimous Consent Calendar, for the reason that Members want to move to suspend the rules on so many bills.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is true that there are a number of requests for suspension of the rules, which the Speaker expects to take care of, but that is an additional reason why we should have a large part of the day Monday for that business.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can we come to this understanding, if the gentleman from Wyoming will permit, that we shall proceed on Monday for an hour and a half in the consideration of the Military Academy bill? Many of us expect it will be concluded in that time. Then, if it is not concluded, we can go ahead with the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. DENT. I suggest to the gentleman that he make it two hours for the Military Academy bill. The bill itself will not take that time, but the outside discussion which developed here to-day is what takes up the time.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think unquestionably we can finish the bill in two hours.

Mr. DENT. We can without any doubt if the discussion is confined to the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would that meet the objection of the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. KITCHIN. Let us make it two hours, and I will modify my request and ask that, if at the end of two hours the Military Academy bill is not finished, the committee shall rise and go back into the House, when the House shall take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House meet at 11 o'clock a. m. on Monday, when not more than two hours shall be devoted to the consideration of the Military Academy bill; that if the Military Academy bill is finished before the end of the two hours, or if it is not, then at the end of two hours the House shall take up the Unanimous Consent Calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSIONS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, are we to understand that the Committee on Military Affairs during the past two months of this session has not had authority to sit during the sessions of the House?

Mr. FIELDS. We thought we had, and think so now, but there was some question raised in the committee.

Mr. GORDON. You have been in almost continuous session?

Mr. FIELDS. We have been in almost continuous session.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the Military Affairs Committee be permitted to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Sunday, February 2, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the president of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co., transmitting report of the East Washington Heights Traction Railroad Co. for the year ending December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1748); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the president of the Washington Gas Light Co., transmitting detailed statement of the business of the Washington Gas Light Co., with a list of its stockholders, for the year ending December 31, 1918 (H. By Mr. TAGUE: Telegrams from certain business men of Boston, Mass., regarding proposed taxes in the 1920 revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VARE: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, Philadelphia, Pa., opposing Government ownership of public utilities; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WOODYARD: Petition of Huntington Lodge, No. 104, International Association of Machinists, favoring House bill 10550, relating to Government ownership of railroads; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

SUNDAY, February 2, 1919.

(Legislative day of Friday, January 31, 1919.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

[The proceedings of the Senate will be found in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.]

The Senate (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Monday, February 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SUNDAY, February 2, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Author of the Universe, Father of all souls, in the midst of the impenetrable mysteries which surround us, we come with profound faith, eternal hope, that in Thy wisdom, power, and goodness we shall be exalted, ennobled, glorified, in Thine own good time.

Let Thy richest blessings descend upon us now as we gather here to give expression to the worth of the men who were dignified by the people and made Members of the Congress of the United States. What they did to glorify a Nation of freemen will live and be a blessing to future generations.

Let Thy loving arms be about their dear ones to comfort and sustain them in this hour of trial. Give them a vision of the larger life and help them to look forward to a reunion with their dear ones in a realm where mysteries shall be dissolved and the brightest hopes realized in the dispensation of Thy Providence. Through Him who died, that we might live. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Journal.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal may be dispensed with until to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with until to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the special order for to-day.

THE LATE SENATOR WILLIAM J. STONE.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. RUCKER, by unanimous consent,

Ordered, That Sunday, February 2, 1919, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE, late a Senator from the State of Missouri, and the Hon. JACOB E. MEEKER, late a Member of this House, from the State of Missouri.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 543.

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended, that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Missouri, and the Hon. JACOB E. MEEKER, late a Member of this House from the State of Missouri.

Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of their distinguished public careers, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the families of the deceased.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. IGOE took the chair.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, when Gov. Benjamin Gratz Brown, one of the most brilliant of all Missouri statesmen, on a historic occasion said: "Missouri is a grand State and deserves to be grandly governed," he uttered an immortal truth. He might have added, with equal veracity, "She deserves to be grandly represented in the Congress of the United States," and she has been in the main, particularly in the Senate, where paucity of members and length of tenure more surely fix a man in the public eye than service in the House.

First and last, Missouri has commissioned 26 different men to represent her at the other end of the Capitol, in the less numerous branch of the National Legislature, in the Chamber of the Conscript Fathers, in "the Upper House of Congress," improperly so called, or, as Senator Morgan, of Alabama, would have it, "ambassadors of a sovereign State" to the Federal Government. Beginning with David Barton and Thomas Hart Benton, her pioneer Senators, who at once attracted general attention and challenged universal admiration by reason of their commanding talents, down to this very hour, when, in the persons of JAMES A. REED and SELDEN P. SPENCER, she holds high position in that conspicuous arena, Missouri has taken second place to none of her sister States.

These 26 Senators naturally divide themselves into two classes—the Barton line and the Benton line, 18 in the former and only 8 in the latter.

In the Benton line are Benton himself, Henry S. Geyer, Trusten Polk, John B. Henderson, Carl Schurz, Francis Marion Cockrell, William Warner, and JAMES A. REED.

Lucky the man who gets into Barton's seat; luckier, far luckier, the man who secures that of Thomas H. Benton, as the precedents indicate a longer public life for him.

An examination of the dates at which Missourians entered and left the Senate will disclose two curious facts in Missouri history. She is the first State that ever elected two men for five full consecutive terms to the Senate of the United States—"six Roman lustrums," as Benton was wont to boast in his pompous way. These were Benton and Cockrell. The only other State to do that is Maine, Missouri's political twin. Missouri was the first State that had only one Senator for any considerable length of time through failure to elect another. By reason of the unrelenting warfare between the Bentonites and the anti-Bentonites the legislature chosen in 1854 never could and never did elect a Senator, as it was in duty bound to do, so that for two entire years Henry S. Geyer was Missouri's only Senator.

What is more, the governor did not appoint or attempt to appoint anyone to fill the vacancy, nobody then dreaming that the governor had such power. But in these later days several States have followed Missouri's example in failing to elect Senators, and, strange to say, divers governors have insisted on the right to fill vacancies by appointment under similar circumstances, until finally the Senate, after lengthy and ponderous debate, solemnly vindicated the wisdom and knowledge of constitutional law possessed by the governor of Missouri in 1855 and 1856, Sterling Price, by declaring that a governor has no right to make such ad interim appointment under such circumstances.

Of Missouri's 26 Senators there were 18 Democrats, 1 Whig, and 8 Republicans. Of 156 years of senatorial representation to which she has been entitled, 2 were not used, 6 fell to Whigs, 28 to Republicans, and 160 to Democrats.

This roster of Missouri Senators is an array of names of which the Nation, no less than the State, may well be proud. There are many great men—scarcely a small one—in the list.

Missouri is proud of her immeasurable physical resources, which will one day make her facile princeps among her sisters; but there is something else of which she is prouder still, and that is her splendid citizenship, consisting at this day of nearly 4,000,000 industrious, intelligent, patriotic, progressive, law-abiding, God-fearing people.

When questioned as to her riches she could with propriety imitate the example and quote the words of Cornelia, the mother of the heroic Gracchi, and, pointing to her children, say truthfully and pridefully, "These are my jewels."

The foregoing remarks, with a few figures changed to bring the facts up to date, constitute the opening paragraphs in my speech presenting the statue of Gen. Frank P. Blair. They must still be of interest to Missourians, at least.

Of these Senators, WILLIAM JOEL STONE was one of the most eminent and forceful. Like so many other men who have achieved high position in imperial Missouri, he was born in Kentucky. Good Bishop Berkely was both a philosopher and a prophet when he wrote the familiar line:

Westward the Star of Empire takes its way.

It has been so always. Asia peopled Europe; Europe peopled America; and now we are engaged in peopling the Philippines—thus belting the globe, reaching out to the cradle of the human race. Before the railroads deflected travel from its natural course, it is interesting to note how closely immigration hugged parallels of latitude. Until the cataclysm of the Civil War dislocated things, the base of population in Missouri was composed of Virginians, Kentuckians, North Carolinians, and Tennesseeans, together with a sprinkling of the elite from every State in the Union and from every civilized nation in the world.

It will interest Kentuckians and Missourians to refresh their memories with the fact that James B. McCreary, soldier, governor, and both Representative and Senator in Congress; David Rowland Francis, mayor, governor, cabinet minister, and ambassador; and WILLIAM JOEL STONE, governor and both Representative and Senator in Congress, were all three born in Madison County, Ky. It is interesting to try to guess what would have happened and who would have come out on top if all three had remained in their native county. Judging from their careers, and knowing that all three were ambitious all their days, and that they fought their way to place and power, it is absolutely safe to say that much friction and much resulting heat would have been engendered in the historic old county of Madison.

The members of that distinguished trio were unlike in appearance and endowments in most respects, but were alike in being men of undoubted ability and of soaring ambition. Each in his own particular way was a skillful political artist. STONE and Francis prove what a bright Kentuckian may come to in the rich soil of Missouri if transplanted young enough.

I had an interesting and amusing experience growing out of the fact that STONE, Francis, and myself were all Kentuckians by birth. Most of you may not know it but it is true that Ambassador Francis pulls off a Fourth of July celebration of his own when he is at home in St. Louis. As president of the "Louisiana Purchase Exposition," he erected a magnificent memorial building to Thomas Jefferson, and it is in that building he and his friends celebrate the birthday of the Republic. In 1915 the Fourth fell on Sunday, Senator STONE and I speaking in different places in St. Louis. Ambassador Francis had his celebration that year on Monday, the 5th. Learning that both the Senator and myself were in the city, he drafted us and took us out to the Jefferson Memorial Building, where all three of us made speeches. The chairman of the meeting seemed to think it out of the ordinary that all three were Kentuckians by birth and Missourians by adoption. When he introduced Senator STONE, who spoke first, he enlarged on what appeared to him to be a remarkable coincidence. He repeated that formula when he introduced Gov. Francis, who came second. He rolled it as a sweet morsel under his tongue when he presented me. I began by saying: "It is true, as the chairman has stated thrice, that Senator STONE, Gov. Francis, and myself were all born in Kentucky for better or for worse, and I am reasonably certain that I could name certain Missourians who wish that all three of us had remained in 'The Dark and Bloody Ground.'"

Col. Benton served in House and Senate, and to this day holds the Missouri record for congressional service—32 years; 30 in the Senate and 2 in the House—but the governorship was denied him. Trusten Polk was governor and Senator, but never in the House. James S. Green and Gen. Frank P. Blair served in both Houses of Congress, but were never governor. Blair's brilliant cousin, Benjamin Gratz Brown, reversing the usual order, was first United States Senator and then governor, but never in the House. Gen. John Miller, who served longer as governor of Missouri than any other man, served in the House, but not in the Senate. Gen. Stirling Price, John C. Edwards, Willard P. Hall, Joseph W. McClurg, Thomas T. Crittenden, and Alexander Monroe Dockery were all both governor and Representative in Congress, but never in the Senate. Trusten Polk and WILLIAM J. STONE were the only two Missourians to go from the gubernatorial chair to the Senate, and in STONE's case there was a period of six years between ending as governor and beginning as Senator. He is the only Missourian to serve as both Representative and Senator in Congress and as governor of his State.

WILLIAM J. STONE was a great Representative, a great governor, and a great Senator. He was one of the most skillful and successful political leaders the State ever had. After a long and stormy career he had attained a sort of suzerainty over the Missouri Democrats. He did not accomplish that difficult feat by brass-band methods or by using a meat ax. He did it by persuasion, by diplomacy, by consultation, and, above all, by being an exceptionally good listener. When he was in St. Louis, Kansas City, Jefferson, St. Jo, or any other city or town in Missouri, the most prominent Democrats called on him in his rooms and consulted with him. That was his favorite method of ascertaining public opinion—his favorite plan of campaign—to converse with small groups of men and out of their various views to determine the best course to pursue. He preferred that way of doing things to large and boisterous crowds; and because he did pursue that wise and successful procedure, his enemies—and he possessed a large and enthusiastic assortment of them—fastened upon him the sobriquet of "Gum Shoe Bill," which his friends and admirers, who composed a mighty host, took up and converted into a term of affection.

He was a political strategist of high degree. Two instances will suffice. When he was a candidate for the gubernatorial nomination in a fierce and close contest and Col. Richard Dalton unexpectedly carried St. Louis, STONE immediately appealed to the rural districts and won, after a contest which roused the State to white heat from Des Moines River to Arkansas and from the Mississippi to the mouth of the raging Kaw.

In subsequent bitter contests—and considering what a polite, mild-mannered man he was it is surprising how many bitter contests he had—when the Metropolitan press unanimously assailed him with ferocity, he boldly and savagely assailed the Metropolitan press, skillfully rallied the rural press to his support and invariably came out victor. I am inclined to believe that he enjoyed the contests more than he did holding the offices, which assumption, if true, sheds some light on the never-settled old question which we debated when we were boys, whether there is more pleasure in pursuit than in possession. He was elected to the House three times, to the governorship once, and to the Senate three times. Notwithstanding the awful storm of vituperation which broke upon him in the later months of his life, I have no sort of doubt that he would have remained in the Senate for 15 years more had he lived so long. Even before his death the storm was receding, and when the great Senator died the love of the generous people of the mighty State which had so often crowned him with her choicest honors, and which he had served so long with pride and approved capacity, returned to him in undiminished measure and augmented intensity. Since the mighty Benton was laid to rest in "The Great City of the Iron Crown" no such splendid funeral pageant did the people of Missouri arrange for any other of her illustrious sons as for Senator STONE.

What manner of man was he? In his prime he was physically the typical Kentuckian—tall, slender, sinewy, lean of flank, high of head. He always reminded me of a Kentucky race horse in his best estate, needing neither whip nor spur to urge him on.

Intellectually he was of a high order. His parents were neither rich nor extremely poor. They were what we in common parlance designate "good livers," and good living in the Blue Grass region of Kentucky is a status to which most folks never attain. In case of his father and mother Agur's prayer seems to have been answered: "Give me neither poverty nor riches." They were, however, able to give their son a university education. During his entire busy life he was a lover of good books and delighted to associate with learned people. He was familiar with the poets, but the books which he studied most were the best of all books—men and women. As a public speaker he stood high, being dowered with logic, wit, humor, sarcasm, and eloquence when he thought eloquence was appropriate to the theme, the occasion, and the place. Some of his speeches were gems, blending in artistic proportions the ingredients aforementioned. He was one of the most deliberate speakers I ever heard, and when in fine fettle it was a delight to listen to him analyze a subject or excoriate an opponent. The dramatic quality he possessed in large degree. His facial mobility was almost equal to Tom Corwin's. His long black forelock, which was forever tumbling into his eyes, was one of his principal properties in public speeches. His deft manipulation of that raven forelock was a joy to his friends and an irritation to his enemies. He loathed utterly a double-dealer, a hypocrite, a mountebank, or a liar. He never pretended to be better than he was; he loved his friends, who fully returned his love; and after being the stormy petrel of Missouri for a generation grew ever gentler with increasing years, and forgave all his enemies except a very few, who had treated him so outrageously and slandered him so maliciously that they had forfeited any claim to forgiveness.

It will be remembered that in the early spring of 1911 newspapers began to mention me for the Democratic presidential nomination. The mentioning grew in volume and frequency until by November it was universally discussed in the public press and in private conversation. Senator STONE and I had never been enemies but we had not been intimate friends. It will also be remembered that the public press was also mentioning Gov. Joseph W. Folk very frequently. A more or less active argument was in progress between my supporters and his as to which of us should have the Missouri delegation. In the meantime Senator STONE spoke no word, gave no sign as to which of us he favored, if either. It happened that in the last part of November Dr. Bartoldt's friends gave him a banquet at the Southern Hotel, which he deserved and which he was anxious I should attend—which I did. That afternoon I was out at the home of Judge Virgil Rule, one of my old pupils, three or four miles from the business center of St. Louis. The Judge had invited about a dozen of my friends to be present to consult about starting my campaign. Unexpectedly Senator STONE walked in. The other gentlemen, taking it for granted that he had come to see me, after shaking hands with him adjourned to another room.

So soon as they disappeared this brief dialogue ensued: Senator STONE said, "Mr. Speaker, I came out to ask you just one question for my own guidance, are you a candidate for President"? I replied, "Senator, men do not announce for President as they do for constable." He answered: "Tell that to the Marines. I want to know. I have seen it in the papers. I have seen men who assert that you are a candidate but I I never saw any man who said you had told him. I desire to know definitely." I said: "Yes, Senator, I am a candidate." Without another word, he picked up his hat, cane, gloves, and overcoat and went down town. Immediately headquarters were engaged and the fight was on.

From that hour until the announcement was made that Governor Woodrow Wilson was nominated, Senator STONE could not have worked harder for me if he had been my father, brother, and son rolled into one.

He was a delicate-looking man in those days; but the amount of work he did was amazing. I formed a deep affection for the man which will abide with me so long as life lasts. To speak of him is to me a labor of love.

Mr. Speaker, it is rare that any State memorializes two congressional sons at one time. Such, however, is Missouri's sad case this day. I have spoken somewhat elaborately touching the life and character of Senator STONE. Now I pay a brief tribute to our fellow Representative, Dr. JACOB E. MEEKER. Stone was a veteran statesman, of long and conspicuous service, verging close on the psalmist's allotment of three score and ten, while Dr. MEEKER was a comparatively new Member, in the last half of his second term in the House. The chances are that had he lived he would have had a long and conspicuous career. That district kept his immediate predecessor in the House, Dr. Richard Bartholdt, here for nearly a quarter of a century, and probably would have done equally well by Dr. MEEKER, as he appeared to have a strong hold on the confidence and affection of his constituents. Senator STONE had been for years in delicate health, while Dr. MEEKER was an exceedingly robust man in the very prime of life. He was a strong, energetic, capable, courageous man, of splendid mentality and fine scholarship. He was a forceful speaker, his first efforts in that regard being in the pulpit. He was a ready debater, and was rapidly fighting his way into the front rank. I have no sort of doubt that had his life been spared and had his service here been extended, he would have attained eminence in this body. His death was a surprise to all who knew him, as he had not attained his meridian and seemed destined for length of days.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I knew United States Senator WILLIAM JOEL STONE all my life. I lived in southern Missouri and knew him during his public days there. During the early part of it I was a young chap, but I knew him as Congressman, as governor, as Senator, and as man. He played a full part in each rôle. Death always comes too soon, and this is only emphasized as it comes home to us with our families and our friends. The adage is emphasized when it comes home to the life of a man who has spent his entire life in usefulness and activity, and such was the life of Senator STONE. I shall not in the few words I utter here to-day try to place Senator STONE on any unnatural pedestal. If he were in the flesh here this day, it would not be his desire. He spent no time, Mr. Speaker, in eulogistic appeals to his Creator "that he was not as other men," but he preferred to be one of them, to think and act as other men. He was one of men.

It is quite the custom when men are called to that last rest to picture them in some unnatural pose. That would not be Senator STONE's desire. I know of no tribute more beautiful to pay to the memory of a man than to say that he preferred to be as other men and preferred to be one of men, as distinguished from constantly drawing his skirts about him and saying, "I thank God I am not as other men." When I see life ebbing away I am always impressed with the certainty of death and the shortness of the time we may spend here. The thought that is ever uppermost in my mind is that every moment here ought to be spent in some useful endeavor. It ought to increase the ambition to emphasize that thought in the minds of all of us. Senator STONE as Congresman, as governor, and as Senator of the State of my birth honored Missouri as Missouri has ever honored him. He honored the Nation and the Nation honored him. He was loved and respected by his friends as no other man in Missouri has been loved and respected. Hated by some, I prefer to believe at this moment that the hatred that resides in the heart of any Missourian against Senator STONE was because they had either collided with his ambition in some way or that they did not know him.

I have many tender ties for Missouri and Missourians. I was born there, married there, educated there, and cast my first vote there. I have felt it was only proper to say these few words, due to my own acquaintance with Senator STONE, due to my residence in Missouri and my birthplace there. I have been happy in being honored by an invitation to pay this short tribute to his memory and in loving remembrance of him as a friend, as a man, and as a statesman. He was true to every trust; he was a man; he was a Missourian; he was an American.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, the life of Senator WILLIAM JOEL STONE was an eventful one, filled with distinguished public service. He was born in Madison County, Ky., on May 7, 1848. He came to Missouri in his early youth, first to Boone County, and attended the University of Missouri, at Columbia, from which institution of learning he was a graduate, and later there was conferred on him by the university the degree of doctor of laws.

In his early manhood he moved to Vernon County, in southwest Missouri, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. He practiced law at Nevada, Mo., and attained high rank in an active practice, winning success by his untiring industry and his marked ability as a lawyer and as a gifted public speaker. He served one term as prosecuting attorney of his county, and afterwards served with conspicuous ability his great district in the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses.

My first acquaintance with WILLIAM J. STONE was in 1878, at the congressional convention in Carthage, Mo., when he was a candidate for Congress. There were six candidates in that contest. It was a great convention, lasting several days—the field against Charles H. Morgan, the popular sitting Member—resulting in the nomination of Maj. Waddell, of Greene County. Over that convention presided M. E. Benton, a parliamentarian of ability, who afterwards served in Congress for 10 years with distinction.

Several times did STONE contest for a seat in Congress from his district before he was successful. He battled for congressional honors with such men as Morgan, of Barton; Waddell, of Greene; Ferguson, of St. Clair; Bassett, of Bates; Salmon, of Henry; De Armond, of Dade, and finally winning in 1882 in a close contest in which the other candidates in the convention were Morgan, Abernathy, and De Armond—all strong men and worthy. Later the gifted De Armond was elected to Congress for 10 consecutive terms and made a great record and a national reputation.

After serving in Congress for three terms WILLIAM J. STONE voluntarily retired and returned to the practice of the law in his home city of Nevada, Mo. Within two years after leaving Congress STONE was nominated, in a notable contest with Richard Dalton as his principal opponent, running as Farmer Dalton, for governor of Missouri. Dalton carried the big cities of Missouri with the support of the labor vote, except Kansas City, which had a candidate of its own in the person of Judge James Gibson. WILLIAM J. STONE had more farmer delegates in the nominating State convention at Jefferson City than all the other candidates combined, and was nominated by reason of that support. He bade defiance to the corporation-controlled vote of the great cities and won by reason of his popular strength in the country. He won his election in November by a great majority over Maj. William Warner as his opponent, the popular idol of the Republican Party in Missouri, afterwards United States Senator from Missouri. Maj. William Warner opened his campaign at Sedalia, Mo., in a speech widely published and circulated, the text of which, as I recall, was "Stand up for Missouri." The Republican organ of Missouri, the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, had rung the changes on "Poor old Missouri" by reason of Democratic rule, and in the shadow of this attack Maj. Warner had taken his text "Stand up for Missouri," charging a need of change of administration by reason of Democratic rule, and putting his seal of approval upon the Republican cry of "Poor old Missouri." WILLIAM J. STONE opened his campaign in the city of St. Louis in a speech, the most notable ever made in his public career, and answered every attack of the Republican organ—the Globe-Democrat—and the charges made by his Republican opponent—Maj. Warner—against Democratic rule.

This great speech when made and circulated as a campaign document throughout the State made unnecessary any further campaign, though the usual speaking campaign was conducted to a successful end, using Stone's speech as a text. That speech was a sufficient answer to every attack made upon the State under Democratic administration, as compared with Republican misrule in the days following the Civil War. It was the most masterful address and appeal ever made, in my judgment, to the electorate of the State, and resulted in the triumphant election of this great Missourian, who served his State as governor for four years with conspicuous ability, when he again retired to private life and entered again upon the practice of his profession in the city of St. Louis.

After a brief while he became a candidate for the United States Senate and succeeded the gifted George G. Vest, who had retired after serving his State for four terms with great and distinguished ability—a colleague of Gen. Francis Marion Cockrell, who served as Senator for five terms, or 30 years, with like great ability—a great Democrat of wonderful personal popularity, loved and respected for his great worth and popular service.

Senator STONE was first elected Senator by the legislature of Missouri in January, 1903, and reelected in 1909, and in 1914, by popular vote, for the term which would have ended on March 4, 1921. In my judgment, if Senator STONE had lived and retained his health he would have continued to serve his great State in the Senate of the United States by a reelection at the end of this term, in the middle of which he passed into the great beyond.

He was a worthy successor of Benton and Blair, of Vest and Cockrell, of James S. Green and Waldo P. Johnson, of B. Gratz Brown and Carl Schurz and John B. Henderson, and the others who filled with honor and distinction that office of high trust—a galaxy of men of merit.

No public man in Missouri ever had a greater personal following of ardent and loyal friends than Senator WILLIAM J. STONE, and they were found in every section of the State, ready to help and sustain him in every contest. He had filled every position of trust with singular ability and with an honesty of purpose that made successful his great public career. He was a successful lawyer, a worthy Representative in Congress, a great governor, the only governor of Missouri since the Civil War elected again to high position. He was a fearless champion of the rights of the people against the domination of selfish corporate interests. He won success against the bitter opposition of corporate power and the attacks of the great press in the great cities. He had no great paper to champion his cause. He knew the people and knew how to arouse them in support of his efforts to win, regardless of the organized opposition that continued to combat him in his great public career. The country press was his organ.

Senator STONE had a great heart. He not only loved his friends and the great State that honored him so often, but his heart beat in sympathy with the masses of the people, whom he loved and trusted and in whom he believed. He loved fair play, he hated hypocrisy, and was incapable of a mean or a small act. He led an honest and courageous life and left an honored name as a rich legacy to his relatives and friends.

Senator STONE was a man of strong convictions, of great courage, and dared to follow the dictates of his own conscience regardless of the consequences that might follow. No one doubted his honesty of purpose or the courage of his convictions. He followed the dictates of his own conscience with a courage unsurpassed in the political life of Missouri politics.

I knew Senator STONE well. For nearly 40 years I had been his personal and political friend. I had tried to help him in his struggles for political preferment, for Congress, governor, and Senator. His life was a continual battle. Our relations were close and intimate. He loved his friends and they loved and honored him. They believed in him. He knew men, their strength and their weaknesses. He knew the motives that prompted men to action. He knew the right and dared do it. He feared no man or political interests. He was a leader in his party, State, and Nation, and high in its councils. He helped to make its nominations and its platforms. He wrote its great declarations upon which it went to battle with its political opponents. He believed in the Democratic Party and loved its organization, and believed its success was best for the whole country. He loved his country as ardently as any man, and his great heart almost broke when he saw it involved in a great world war into which he had hoped it would not be drawn. However his friends may have differed with him on any great question, no man ever doubted his honesty or his patriotism.

He was a national character of great ability and power at all times, and his great character and distinguished patriotic services won him the respect and admiration of all who knew him. He was a leader among men. He has passed into the great eternity, mourned by the thousands who knew him and loved him and honored him. Thousands came from far and near to see him laid away in his last resting place in the beautiful cemetery in his much-loved city of Nevada, where he had lived, where his multitude of friends had helped him in his ambition to rise to high place in the service of his country. Peace to his ashes. God bless the memory of the much-loved WILLIAM JOEL STONE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is recognized.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, Missouri lost a great citizen, a great public servant, in the death of Senator STONE. The great Speaker of our House [Mr. CLARK], my colleague from Missouri, paid a deserved and a fitting tribute in his address to the life and public service of the distinguished Senator.

Senator STONE was very close to the people of Missouri; that was demonstrated by many incidents in his long and great career. Like other men in public life who take a determined position upon public questions, he had, of course, his opponents in his own party and in the other party; but, as the Speaker has said, Senator STONE was a man who was not afraid to meet his enemies in the open and who would fight for what he believed to be right.

Probably that came from the fact, alluded to by the Speaker, that the distinguished Senator whose death we mourn to-day, and to whom we pay tribute, came from the great State of Kentucky. Kentucky furnished to Missouri some of our most splendid citizens, men who have rendered great service. It is true, as the Speaker has said, that Missouri in its early days was made up largely of men and women who came to it from States like Kentucky, Virginia, and Tennessee. I am proud myself of those men and women who came to Missouri when it needed men and women of strong character and determination and who helped shape its destiny, I believe, more than anything else has helped to make it the great State that it now is.

I feel some little personal pride in that myself, from the fact that I am a descendant of some of that stock. My father was born in Virginia and my mother in Kentucky, and I know, from their lives and from the things that they stood for and did, that they believed in everything that was for the best in public and in private life.

So to-day, in paying tribute to those men and those women who came from those States to help make Missouri what it is, I can join not only in paying tribute to the life and public service of our great Senator, but also in paying tribute to the other splendid men and women who did so much for our State and to testify anew to my love and affection for my good father and mother, who were a part of that great citizenship.

Senator STONE gave the greater part of his life to the service of the people of Missouri and the people of the Nation. He rendered conspicuous, able, and brilliant service, and, although of a different political party from his, I say most truthfully and candidly that I think Senator STONE was one of the greatest public servants that Missouri has ever had. I feel that we have lost a great public servant, and feel privileged to enter in the RECORD my judgment, as one of the Representatives of Missouri, as to the great public service of Senator WILLIAM JOEL STONE.

Mr. Speaker, as has been said by my colleague, we meet to-day not only to pay tribute to the life and public service of our deceased Senator but we meet also under an order of this House to pay tribute to one of our colleagues from Missouri in this House, the late JACOB E. MEEKER.

JACOB E. MEEKER was born on a farm in Fountain County, Ind., October 7, 1878. He was the second son of T. M. and Julia McKnight Meeker. He graduated from the public schools in 1894 and entered the academy at the Union Christian College, at Merom, Ind., the same year. After completing the preparatory course in the academy he entered the college, graduating from that institution in 1900. He was married on the day of his graduation, and was the father of four children.

He entered Oberlin Theological Seminary in 1900 and did one year's work. He returned to the farm in Indiana in 1901, and for the next year farmed and preached in country churches. In 1902 he returned to Oberlin, and graduated from the Oberlin Theological Seminary with the class of 1904. In western Indiana he was known as the boy preacher, having had a regular pastorate before he was of age.

Following his graduation he located at Eldon, Mo., under the appointment of the Congregational Home Missionary Society. He remained at Eldon for two years, organizing Sunday schools and developing Congregational Church work in that section. In 1906 he came to St. Louis to take charge of the Compton Hill Congregational Church. He remained there as pastor until 1912, when he resigned to complete his law studies. He was admitted to the bar January 6, 1914. He had been active in politics since boyhood, his father having been one of the leading Republicans of Indiana for many years. In 1914 he became a candidate for Congress, and was elected to the Sixty-fourth and reelected to the Sixty-fifth, winning in the second contest by a majority of more than 20,000. He was nominated by a large majority in the August primaries to the Sixty-sixth Congress, but passed away before the election.

During all the years of his ministry he was a live participant in the political and sociological affairs of his community. Instead of holding the old-fashioned "revival" meetings, he conducted in his church and elsewhere series of popular Bible studies. He maintained his church study in a down-town office building and was daily found in the hospitals, the juvenile and police courts, and the eleemosynary institutions. He established a national reputation for himself because of two things he has done. He has fought prohibition with all of his might, and he has opposed the entrance of the church into politics. While in the pulpit he steadfastly refused to convert his church into a political club or to air his partisan views on political questions, and in the field of politics he has consistently refused to be swayed by religious or sect prejudice.

Mr. MEEKER, like Senator STONE, whom I alluded to a moment ago, was a man of forceful ideas, and, by reason of the strong position that he took upon public positions, had his intense enemies in public life. It was my privilege to first know JACOB E. MEEKER about 11 years ago or so, when he came to make his home in the city of St. Louis. He located in that section of the city where I had my home. He was a neighbor of mine, and he came there to take charge of a church located in my neighborhood. That was in about the year 1906. He became the pastor of a church there, and not only the members of the congregation of that church but the citizens generally of that neighborhood—I was one of them, not being one of those who worshipped with that congregation—had their attention directed to the fact that they had in that church a young man of energy and a young man of intellect.

Many of us from time to time went to that church to hear this new preacher. We all liked him. He began immediately to take an interest in affairs in the neighborhood. He helped to organize in his church a civic organization of that neighborhood of which I was a member. It had for its purpose and its object the betterment of conditions of the people generally in that section of the city.

He was forceful, keen of intellect, a splendid man, and a splendid pastor of his church. His church grew in influence, grew in power, and grew in good. He was a man who, as I have said, would not, because of his peculiar make-up and energy, allow himself to be confined wholly in the work to which he was specially called. He felt that he should get out and take an interest in things that affected the people generally, and from time to time he became active in those matters, and out of his active interest in those matters grew his entrance into politics. People felt and believed that he could render especially good service in public office. They began to talk of him for public office while he was pastor of the church.

Mr. MEEKER resigned the pastorate of his church and returned to his home in Indiana, whence he had come. When he went to Indiana it was my belief and understanding that he had gone there to make that his home.

I do not believe that he had any idea or thought of running for public office, but a situation grew up in the city of St. Louis, in the tenth congressional district, where the gentleman who had been representing that district here for so long, Hon. Richard Bartholdt, had issued a statement in which he said he would not be a candidate for renomination and reelection. As it is in all districts when the older Member retires, several new men aspired to this office, and factions of the party in control often have candidates. One of the factions of the party in this district urgently sent for and wrote letters to Mr. MEEKER, urging him to come back and become a candidate for Congress in this district. Mr. MEEKER returned and became a candidate, was nominated and elected, was again renominated and elected, was again renominated, and, had not death called him, would have been again reelected by the usual majority in that district of some 24,000 or 25,000. We mourn his going, because he had given evidence of his efficiency as a public servant; he had given evidence of his ability to represent the people in this House. He was a young man, only some 40 years of age, when death claimed him. A great opportunity laid before him, and I, as his friend for many years and his acquaintance and well-wisher since he came to our city in 1906, sincerely regret his going. The people of St. Louis, a large part of whom he represented here, mourn his loss. He was a good and efficient public servant, and we will miss him sadly.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that one of the closest personal and political friends of the late Senator STONE is prevented from being present to-day on account of sickness; in fact, he is not in the city. I refer to our colleague (Mr. BOOHER), and I ask unanimous consent that he may have the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid confusion, I ask unanimous consent now that each of the Missouri delegation, several of whom can not be here to-day, being kept away on account of sickness, be permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD, as well as other Members who desired to be here, but can not be here to-day, be also permitted to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and also that the same may apply to all gentlemen who speak.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? (After a pause.) The Chair hears none.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Speaker, this occasion arouses within me a renewed sorrow for the loss of a cherished personal friend who permitted none of the many distinctions of a long-honored life of public service to mar or stem the warm current of the trust and affection he gave me. I wish to record here somewhat of my sincere estimate that in his taking away the State and Nation he served have themselves lost no truer friend than in WILLIAM J. STONE dead who, living, had no deeper delight and held no higher purpose than to serve them for their happiest advancement and noblest elevation. His experience, his learning, his accomplishments, and his generous heart equipped him for the most eminent trust of our representative manner of government.

Naturally, thinking of him now, my heart turns first to the place and the scenes that form the picture of our friendship's beginning. I came here February 24, 1889, to serve the unexpired term of a deceased Representative, the Hon. James N. Burnes. Here I met the late Senator. Here began the forming of ties which the passing of more than twenty-five years have only enriched and strengthened, such ties of mutual esteem and consideration that now, in these moments of regretful reflection that an ending of all pulsing, responsive friendships is inevitable, I am fain to seek somehow the consolation that recollection affords of the man I loved and who generously gave me the affection I may no longer enjoy. Thus only memory's alchemy may turn the gloom of mourning into golden light.

WILLIAM JOEL STONE, born 70 years ago in Madison County, Ky., began his career as a statesman—destined to became known and honored among America's highest and best—more than 35 years ago. It was with the first year of the first Cleveland administration that he started a service of three terms in this House. In its six years he was brought into contact and relation with the most famous representatives of our times. His talents for public service, his gifts and graces of speech and bearing, were such as suffered no depreciation of contract with the qualities of the great men about him. John G. Carlisle was the Speaker of the House, and during Mr. STONE'S years there were in this great arena for national heart-expression such men as Samuel J. Randall, Sunset Cox, Roger Q. Mills, William R. Morrison, Pig Iron Kelley, John W. Daniel, William P. Hepburn, Charles R. Crisp, David B. Culberson, long gone from the place they illuminated with their fine and lustrous personalities, and with only two scarcely less distinguised happily yet among living American statesmen still in the public service, KNUTE NELSON of Minnesota and JOSEPH G. CANNON of Illinois. These great men represented every part of this Nation. Ardently devoted to their several constituencies, they were scarcely less fervent in their loyalty to the all-embracing Federal institution and the first creature of the Constitution, the House of Representatives. But in the expression of these endowments of faith and accomplishments of intellectual enterprise none excelled WILLIAM J. STONE.

In his fertile mentality grew a remarkable variety of capacities for public service and enlightening public instruction. His speeches and conversations on the floor of the House and in the committee conferences were illuminating, persuasive, and so entertaining as always to recall with pleasure. To me, it was ever a recollection that made me proud that he was my friend and fellow Missourian. He did honor to the name of his State wherever he went, whether in the public service or as a trusted councilor in political party service. He was a Democrat of Democrats in the most Democratic of States. For his expression of himself as such, he was especially popular and honored in Missouri. In his participation in the affairs of representative government for all the States of the Union he was no less sincerely and constantly and courageously a Democrat. I do not believe a man has lived since the day of the Father of American Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, the greatest apostle of representative government the world has ever known, whose mind and heart were truer to the rights of humanity than the mind and heart of WILLIAM J. STONE. Like Jefferson, to him the greatest of all liberties was the liberty of mind and conscience to achieve for the individual unrestrained by government the best things possible. In this was he one of the greatest of American Democrats. With all the ardor of a virile, sympathetic nature, he was at all times partisan to the principles that exalt the name of Jefferson and which even now shine with new glory in the triumph of the American and allied armies over the implacable foes of democracy.

In the Senate, where he began his service 15 years ago, being at his death in the middle of his third term, the superior scope for intellectual energy afforded by that great body afforded him fit opportunity for the exercise of his conspicuous abilities. His speeches and even his most casual contributions to its adventurous debates are among the most finished ornaments of the Senate's literary record. He touched no subject he did not embellish with the attractive suggestions of a lively imagination bodied forth in the comely raiment of excellent phrase. In the slash of differing views, he will be remembered with admiration by his friends and recalled with respect by his adversaries in contention. Partisan as he was, always expectantly looked to as a Democratic leader, his loyalty to party at no time of his long public and political career marred his friendships, which were numerous and widely extended. No intellectual divergence of view from his convictions altered the cordiality of his relations with men in any position. Incapable of submerging himself in the presence of political opposition and before the assaults of word and act upon principles be cherished, Senator STONE, like all eminent and forceful Americans, was not without his share of enemies. He was at times the target of bitter criticisms. He rarely gave evidence that they disturbed him except when they brought into question the integrity of his motives. He either bore himself silently erect and serene in the little storms of party weather or countered the blows of condemnation and ridicule with thrusts of wit and ironical allusion that effectually weakened opposition. No one can say that he was ever worsted in debate or his resourceful capacity depreciated in any controversy.

Senator STONE'S main activities in the Senate were as member of two of its most important committees, Finance and Foreign Relations. As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee he held a parliamentary post for which he was peculiarly and preeminently fitted. It had of all committees the most vital relations with the great question of the world-war. When the history of that war in its domestic aspect here and its political incidents and effects shall have been truly told it will be seen, I have not the slightest doubt, that in the haste of excited judgments of the war period, Senator STONE was sometimes unjustly assailed for what was incorrectly represented as his attitude. He truly represented that large body of sane Americans who are averse to war and would endure much within honor to avoid quarrels that mean death and crippling to countless numbers of human beings. But I shall not attempt to go any further into the story of Senator STONE'S share in the final determination of the United States to enter the war. Being in, he cast his entire lot of mind and heart into the issue. The most impartial historian will do him due justice. He will be found, I am confident, to have been far more consistent and intellectually righteous than many who held high places and agreed with him in his reluctance to join the war who afterwards became the foremost zealots in its prosecution. He turned all the rare gifts of his nature to the support of his country's cause, ever with the constant prayer for victory breathing with his presence in all company.

I have said that Senator STONE in his congressional service touched no subject he did not embellish. It is a truth that will stand forth freshly with every examination of the part he bore in public discussions. His contributions more than adorned debate. They had a practical strength and an aptness of suggestion which were invaluable aids to constructive legislation. I cite a single instance of this rare equipment for the most exalted public service as afforded in the Senate. It occurred but a little while before his death. A man of comparatively frail physical structure, he was more constantly energetic and punctual at the post of duty than very many stronger men. The Senate was discussing the final shaping of the railway administration bill. Then there arose through Senator STONE'S quick apprehension of a demand of public interest sure to come with the future, and which we observe has already come in the present conjectures as to the disposition of the railroads. He interpolated an exhaustive speech on the bill by Senator POMERENE of Ohio with a question as to the interpretation of one of the concluding clauses of the bill—section 24. This was its language:

> That this article is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof.

As he put the question, Senator STONE said:

> I have an apprehension that when we come out of it we will be faced with one or two alternatives, namely, the taking over of the railroads into absolute Government ownership, or a capitalization of the railroads in order to protect the vast interests involved, and in order that these great transportation lines may be conducted with the greatest possible efficiency in the public interest.

The apt question elicited from the distinguished Ohio Senator an important response. Observing the presence in the committee handling the bill a variety of views, Mr. POMERENE said:

> The bill as presented originally provided that Government control should continue during the war and until otherwise directed. That of itself, in the judgment of some of the members of the committee, had a suggestion of continued future Government ownership. It is perfectly clear by the enactment of this law the Congress would not be committing itself to any of these policies which might have been in the minds of Senators.

And, finally, Mr. Speaker, I would not close this inadequate tribute to the worth of my great friend in his great public service without giving another instance of his lofty regard for duty. That, too, was but a short time before his voice was no longer to be heard among men. I refer to that occasion as of profound historic significance and one whose meaning is more strikingly evident at this time than at any period within our history since the founding of our Republic. It was last year, February 21. Reference having been had to the method of procedure in the Senate on the next day, with the customary reading of Washington's Farewell Address, Senator STONE objected to any other course than adjournment immediately after the reading of the address. Another Senator remarked that it was the rule for the Senate on such occasions to proceed with ordinary business after such reading.

The Missouri Senator solemnly advised the Senate that it was indulging a "poor compliment" to the greatest of all Americans, that then of all times the address should be read and pondered anew in all the matchless wisdom of its admonitions. Plainly, obviously, he referred to that part of Washington's Farewell Address in which he warned his fellow countrymen for all time against "the insidious wiles of foreign influence," advising them to keep the faith of present engagements but to enter upon no entangling alliance which would commit us to participation in the settlement of Europe's quarrels.

I believe that when the historic occasion recurs in the two Houses this month on the birthday of him who gave to his people that immortal counsel millions and millions of American people as they note the reading of his words again in Congress will stand where Senator STONE stood last year, revering Washington and still first in the hearts of his countrymen. That reminder by the Missouri Senator was a noble climax to a highly honorable and long honored career.

Mr. ESSEN. Mr. Speaker, on an occasion like this, when we come to speak a tribute to the memory of a distinguished friend such as the one in whose honor we meet to-day, words are too weak to give adequate meaning to our feelings of appreciation. The suddenness in which the earthly life of our friend was ended, the large place he had filled in the councils of the Nation, the great opportunity in public life afforded to one of his ability, all combined, make his death a distinct national loss. The people of the tenth congressional district, whom he loved to honor and to whose best interests he was so greatly devoted, showed this appreciation of his ability and public service by the splendid vote of confidence given him whenever they had a chance to show it. The people of the sovereign State of Missouri found in him a courage and capacity well calculated at times like these to defend the rights of her people, boldly and without apology, regardless of the taunts of foes or the applause of friends.

The Nation saw in him one of the defenders of her honor, whose voice was heard in unmistakable tones, as upon the floor of the Chamber of the House of Representatives he hurled defiance at German autocracy, the arch enemy of mankind, and called upon the Nation to resent the insults to her honor and fight for the preservation of her life.

Mr. MEEKER was one of the men who stood out boldly demanding the defense of our national honor at all times. It will be remembered how, when Mexican outlaws were crossing our borders and burning our property and murdering our citizens, he demanded a decisive policy. In clarion tones he denounced these insults to our sovereignty and called upon the Congress to authorize the President to employ the necessary force to compel a recognition of our honor. Those of his colleagues who sat with him in this Chamber well remember his denunciations of what appeared to be a noncommittal policy which seemed spineless at times. His powerful attacks against allowing Mexico to purchase munitions which were afterwards employed against our own people will not be forgotten.

When Germany began the submarine warfare and attacked, by torpedo, the Cushing, the Gulflight, and finally committed the open murder in the sinking of the Lusitania, Mr. MEEKER was one of the Members of Congress who openly declared it to be our duty to immediately put the Nation in order to defend itself. He persisted in the assertion that a decisive policy on the part of our Government would bring Germany to her senses. He deplored the seeming effort on the part of many which tended to convince Germany that we could not be made to fight. On the other hand, he persisted in his belief and assertion that decisive action would either prevent war or, in case it did not, the war must have been much shorter and much less destructive of life and property.

When at last the war resolution was before the Congress his was the voice that rang out in clarion notes that sounded the sense of national duty. After the declaration of war and the plan for building an army was before the country he was one of the first to espouse the selective draft as the rational method in a democratic country.

Although a strict party man and partisan in a pronounced sense, he never allowed a partisan spirit to interfere with his duty to the country. Differing widely from the President and the leaders of the majority on party policies, yet in the matters of war he was among the ranks of Republicans who pushed to the very front all war measures designed to speed up the war program. His criticism was constructive and justified by his readiness to both suggest remedies and accept them when suggested by others.

In this great war Congress, whose duties and responsibilities were greater than any Congress since the days of the great Civil War, he occupied a high rank. So far as I know he stood for every constructive measure proposed.

Mr. MEEKER did not agree with the majority of the Members upon some nonpartisan domestic questions. Whatever disagreements were experienced he always displayed a fearlessness in his attack and in his advocacy. He was found voting with the majority of the Members on many questions, but he was never afraid to be counted with the minority vote. At times when the public seemed swept off its feet with waves of enthusiasm, when it would be easy to go with the majority, he has stood like adamant for what he believed to be the correct position, though it provoked opposition and at times derision from those opposed to him.

He never believed that popularity of an issue was of itself a conclusive argument of its wisdom.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. MEEKER, my predecessor in this body, had what might be called a stormy life. He had his staunch friends and some enemies. But who has not both? He who has no friends is helpless and he who has no enemies is hopeless.

To-day we pause to note his contribution to the service of his country. It is but little we can here do, and what we say may soon be forgotten; but I wish to pay this slight tribute to his memory in the name of the people of the tenth Missouri congressional district, which he so notably represented and which I now have the honor to represent.

Could I in my stay here be as effective on the part of my legislative duty as he endeavored to be I would feel quite content.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. Speaker, Senator STONE was considerably my senior in years, but it was my privilege to know him well for about 25 years. I greatly admired his splendid ability and his many admirable qualities of mind and heart. I believe that he was as nearly unselfish as any man whom I have known and who was so long in public position.

During his active, busy life he held public office about 26 years, each commission being issued to him as the result of the will of his people expressed through the ballot.

He was prosecuting attorney of his county, Representative in Congress from his district, governor of his State, and United States Senator from Missouri, and which position he held at the time of his death.

He was politically a militant, but he always fought fairly. He never conducted a political trench or submarine warfare. He went forth to battle in the open, panoplied in what he believed was a just cause, and it was always a fight to a finish. He neither asked for nor gave quarter.

Like all such characters he had the most loyal friends and the bitterest possible enemies. He bore many scars received in battle for the principles of Democracy, to which he was thoroughly wedded. His contests were numerous, but it may be said of him that he never lost a battle. In other words, he stood as the candidate of his party many times before the people who knew him and went to his death without a single defeat. I have heard him praised and I have heard him condemned, but I never heard any man question either his courage, his loyalty to a friend, or his integrity.

He followed faithfully and unerringly the star of Democracy which Thomas Jefferson hung in the political firmament. He never apologized for his position or hesitated to announce his creed upon all proper occasions. A few years ago a friend of mine and an ardent admirer of the late Senator told me an exceedingly interesting story which illustrates the manner of man that he was:

All Missourians remember distinctly that just before the close of the Civil War all persons who were even suspected of sympathizing with the southern cause were disfranchised, and I might say, in the minds of the ultra-Unionist, to be a southern sympathizer was equivalent to being a Democrat, and under radical rule in Missouri all such were disfranchised, but about the year of 1872, in a limited way, the restrictions were removed and they were permitted to again participate in politics in Missouri. A friend told me at that time down in southwest Missouri where the feeling was extraordinarily bitter that in a county which had theretofore been Democratic he and others concluded to try to reorganize their party for the coming campaign. They conceived the idea of having an old-fashioned barbecue and announced that it was for the purpose of getting all Democrats together and have some prominent man of that political faith address them. They made the announcement but were immediately notified by the opposition that such a meeting could not be pulled off in that county. That no man could come there and make a Democratic speech and get away alive. However, the committee went on with their arrangements. I remember distinctly that he told me that they wrote Gov. Phelps, who for 18 years represented a district in Congress and resigned his seat here to take charge of a regiment in the Civil War on the side of the Union, but who, nevertheless, was an ardent Democrat at all times, and was afterwards one of Missouri's great governors, but for some reason he declined to come. They then extended an invitation to another very prominent citizen of Springfield, also a gallant Union soldier and Democrat, Capt. McAfee, but he, too, declined the invitation.

The time for their barbecue was drawing near and they had promised to have somebody there to make a speech and they felt they must make good their promise, and in their dilemma some one made the following suggestion: "I understand there is a young lawyer over here at Nevada by the name of STONE, who is a Democrat and who, I am told, makes a splendid speech. Let us invite him." It was Hobson's choice—there was nothing else to be done, so that was agreed to and the invitation was accordingly sent. There were no telephones or telegraph lines or railroads for that matter through that section of the country at that time, but they sent an invitation by mail and received a prompt reply, accepting it. The committee immediately announced that WILLIAM JOEL STONE, of Nevada, would be present and make a speech on the occasion of the barbecue. Very promptly they were waited upon by a delegation, self-appointed, perhaps, who served notice upon them that neither this man or no other man, for that matter, could make a Democratic speech on that occasion and get away alive. He told me that it was the prevailing custom at that time for men to go armed continually in that county. Human life was regarded as almost worthless. The committee finally became convinced that these "rough necks" meant just what they said, but they did not reach that conclusion until it was too late to notify this young lawyer not to come.

None of them had ever seen STONE. But they knew he would have to come across the country in a buggy. And I may say here that the place at which he was to speak was some 30 or 40 miles from where Senator STONE lived. They knew the road he would come in on, and they concluded to watch for him and meet him at the edge of the town and notify him that it would be worth his life to try to make a speech there on that day, and explain to him that he could drive in through and around the town and could reach again the road over which he had come and go back to Nevada, and that then they would announce at the proper time that the speaker for some reason did not show up. They watched for him and met him when he came to town and explained fully the situation to him. This crowd of rough necks were there, armed to the teeth and "tanked up" on native liquor, and swearing that no man could make a Democratic speech on that occasion and live. My friend said that when they explained the matter to STONE and told him that they were sorry not to have been able to get him notice not to come, but how he could get on through town and back home, inasmuch as nobody knew him, none would suspect he had ever come; but he said STONE looked at them for a moment and said, "Did you not invite me over here to make a speech to-day?" "Yes." "Well," he said, "I am here." "But," they said, "we can not afford to let you speak. These fellows swear they will kill you, and they will." He said, "Gentlemen, I was invited to come here to-day to make a Democratic speech, and," with an adjective that he usually used under such provocation, said, "I am here, and I am going to make that speech." "But," they said, "You can not afford to make it; it is too dangerous. But if you are determined to make a speech here to-day talk about something else—other than politics." He said, "I will make my own speech."

This man told me that at the proper time STONE went upon the platform and that this crowd that had said he should not speak, and who were drunk and armed to the teeth, rushed up menacingly in front of him. STONE stood and looked at them for a moment, and then proceeded to denounce them as arrant cowards; told them what he had been informed they had threatened to do, and defied them to do their worst. He said: "You have not the courage to do what you said you would. I am here to make a Democratic speech and, by the eternal, I am going to make it."

My friend told me that he had heard STONE many times since make many bitter Democratic speeches, but that he had never heard him make one quite so bitter as the one he made on this occasion. Those fellows who had said that he should not speak and live gradually slunk away, one at a time, until every one of them had gone, and when STONE had finished there was not one of them in sight.

I speak of this to show the courage of the man. He was not afraid of anything.

He grew to be wise beyond his day and generation. From the time that I first began to take an interest in politics he was my political mentor.

Shortly after he was nominated for governor of his State it was my privilege, as a young Democrat, to be one of the speakers at a banquet given in his honor in my city. From that time on, especially, I knew him well. I met him in court as opposing counsel after he retired as governor. I entered this House for the first time as a Member on the same day that he entered the Senate for the first time.

Innumerable times during these years I have gone to him for counsel and advice and I never came away empty handed. I did not at all times agree with him on all public questions, but I always greatly respected his opinions. In his death I lost a friend, our party a great leader, and his country an aggressive patriot. May his ashes rest in peace.

Mr. PURNELL. Mr. Speaker, death is a strange and mysterious thing. I have often wondered why the great unseen power that is responsible for life itself could not stay the terrible sting of death and spare the heartaches that follow in its wake. It is rarely a welcome guest—I have seen it pass, unnoticing, the house of an afflicted soul tossing upon a bed of pain praying for the relief that only death can bring. I have seen it reach its long tentacled fingers into a newly made home and take from the breast of a loving mother the joy and hope of her life. I have seen it rob the home of him to whom innocent and helpless children have looked for food, leaving them destitute and in want. I have seen it take the mother whose unselfish devotion and watchful care would have been the guiding star through life of a son and turn him into the street to fight an unequal battle with life only to lose in the end because of her loss. I have seen it take from the seats of the mighty those who could have shaped the destiny of a nation. I have seen the old, the helpless, the neglected, the life-weary pray for it and it would not come.

The death of our friend and colleague affords a most striking example of the uncertainty of life. If any one of us had scanned the roster of this House venturing to name he who would be the next to answer the final summons, I dare say the name of JACOB E. MEEKER, strong in vigorous manhood and standing at the very threshold of life, would have entered none of our minds.

To me his death was a great personal loss. When I came to Congress two years ago as a Member of this body he neglected his own duties in an endeavor to familiarize me with the innumerable details of the routine which every new Member must necessarily learn. In doing this JACOB E. MEEKER was prompted in no small degree by the recollection of our early boyhood associations, having grown up in the same county with me and within a few miles of each other. His home was my home, his country my country, his people my people, and though he went away when he grew to manhood he always regarded Fountain County, Ind., as his home. The old farm upon which he was reared, and the father and mother whose pride he was, were always there to welcome him. It was very fitting, and I am quite sure in keeping with his wishes, that he was laid to rest in the quiet country churchyard that lies within sight of his boyhood home.

JACOB MEEKER came from one of the old and honored families of our county. His father was numbered among the most influential and highly respected citizens of our Commonwealth, His dear old mother, who lives to mourn his loss, is all that the word "mother" implies. Whatever success he attained was due in a large measure to her strong impress upon him. It was not alone that we grew up together and came from the same county that he put himself out for me. It was characteristic of the man. No bigger-hearted man ever sat in this Chamber than JACOB MEEKER. He was true to his friends and loyal to every trust. He was firm in his convictions, and dared to fight for that in which he believed, even though it entailed a bitter encounter with his dearest friend. It is but fair to his memory to say, however, that the bitterness ended with the debate.

I did not always agree with him, but I never failed to admire his courage and ability. This House has lost a valuable Member, his constituents one whose constant desire was to serve them, and the country a servant who was always jealous of its honor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HENSLEY] is recognized.

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Speaker, we have met here to-day to bear our humble tribute to the many excellencies of character possessed and service rendered his country by the late Senator WILLIAM JOEL STONE during his life.

The history of Senator STONE and the facts concerning his life have been detailed by others more beautifully than I can hope to give them. As has been recited, he was born in Kentucky and reared in Missouri. He was educated in the University of Missouri, graduating from that institution, after which time he located in Nevada, Vernon County, Mo., for the practice of his profession, that of law. I desire here to say that with the great ability possessed by Senator STONE, had he continued in his profession practicing law with the same energy and continuous effort that he put forth in serving the people in public office, he would have soon been one of the very leading attorneys at the bar in his State and Nation, and he would have acquired a goodly share of this world's goods. But he chose public office instead, and he early in life was elected to the Congress of the United States. After serving here in this historic body for six years he retired voluntarily. Soon after his retirement from Congress he was nominated and elected governor of Missouri, after a very spirited fight both for the nomination and the election. As governor he never hesitated to take his stand with the people and against those desiring special favors at the hands of his administration. Assailed many times, yet undaunted, he stood as a mountain among small hills, like a great oak in the forest, giving no heed to the abuse of those who maligned him. The poisoned shafts of the slanderer fell broken at his feet. He gave the people of the State a fair and honest administration. Going out of the governor's office he resumed the practice of law, but he soon reentered public life and was elected to represent the grand and glorious State of Missouri in the Senate of the United States, in which body he was serving his third term when stricken unto death. For many years he was one of the foremost Democrats and statesmen in our country, and in every station in life to which he was called he graced it with great ability, courage, and manhood. His career was a most brilliant one.

I am glad to say that I counted Senator STONE as my friend; in fact, he was the friend of every worthy individual wherever he happened to be, as well as the friend of every worthy enterprise. He was in deed and in truth the friend of humanity, for his every act testified to the feeling that he bore toward the great body of our people. In my judgment, there never lived a man more thoroughly in love with his country and his kind than Senator STONE. Patriotic and courageous, a partisan in politics in the sense that he believed that parties were necessary for the perpetuity of our Government and our institutions, he was ready and willing at all times, if necessary, to sacrifice his very political life for his convictions. I very well recall, a good many years ago, how he took his political life in his hands when he assailed with all the vigor he possessed certain corporate interests of Missouri, because he thought they were insidiously seeking to get control of his party.

True manly courage can not exist without honor and integrity; in fact, courage is a child of honor. One can not exist without the other. There never was any inquiry as to whether he would stand by his convictions on any question, however momentous and however perilous to him. We need more of such men. That is the stuff out of which martyrs are made. Any person can go with the current, but for one to battle against the current, to go amidst the frowning, hissing, and jeering crowd who are drifting the other way it takes courage and manhood.

I recall very distinctly one occasion when I was in his office, only a few months before he was stricken down. We were discussing the course being pursued by another person in public life, and I said, "Senator, he is rendering a great service to the people, but he will never get any credit for it, because the people will not understand it." He replied, with emphasis, "My boy, it makes little difference whether the people give you credit or not; be true and render service, though they may never appreciate it. My only thought now, during this hour of my country's crisis, is to do my whole duty by my people without regard to its effect upon me." So I say, Mr. Speaker, that the people who go to make up the body of our great and glorious country lost a true and noble friend in the death of Senator STONE. They lost a friend who did not count the cost when it came to serving them. The shells of slander and abuse when bursting all around him affected his course none whatsoever. He preferred to be right to anything else. He never bid for the applause of the truculent hirelings of the special interests of the country; and if his true worth could be portrayed, his diligent efforts in behalf of the people understood, even up to the time that he was stricken while riding on a street car here in Washington, there would be erected in the minds and hearts of the great masses throughout our country a monument that would endure as long as courage, as manhood, and as patriotism is prized by man.

Senator STONE will be missed in Missouri; he will be missed in the Nation. The country sustained a loss in his death, an irreparable loss. He was one of the most human men I ever met, full of humanity, sympathy, and love. He was never so busy that he could not give one a patient hearing, and he was always ready to render helpful service to the needy one. We all lost a friend when Senator STONE died, and his family lost a patient, kind, and loving parent and companion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUBEY] is recognized.

Mr. RUBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. IGOE] is recognized.

Mr. IGOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, first, to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the death of Senator STONE and Mr. MEEKER, and at the moment I simply desire to say a few words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the death of both Senator STONE and Mr. MEEKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, soon after coming to Congress in the Sixty-fifth Congress I had the privilege of meeting the late Congressman JACOB E. MEEKER, of Missouri. He was a member of the important Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and as I was assigned to that body the opportunity to become acquainted with him was offered me. I early became impressed with his vigor, his honesty, and his integrity. He was in many ways a wonderful man. His outstanding characteristics were mental honesty and fearlessness. He never tried to deceive himself, and his absolute fearlessness and honesty were proverbial. I was attracted to him by his sound reasoning power and his industry, and it is no exaggeration to say that he was easily one of the strong men of that important committee. I did not always agree with Mr. MEEKER's views—in fact, we often disagreed—but never for a moment did I doubt his honesty and sincerity. He used force and logic rather than diplomacy and intrigue in achieving his end. When he spoke he always had a message well worth hearing, and therefore always commanded attention when he rose to address the House. A Hoosier by birth, it was natural that he should go into politics. Born on the "banks of the Wabash," he came of good, honest stock. While in attendance at his funeral, which was held at Attica, Ind., it was my proud privilege to meet his dear old mother, and after having met her I could readily understand that he had inherited from her many of his strong characteristics. She is one of that splendid type of American womanhood who stood shoulder to shoulder with their pioneer husbands and did their full share in transforming a vast empire from a wilderness into a Garden of Eden. Mr. MEEKER was a worthy son of a splendid American mother.

We miss Mr. MEEKER on the floor of this House. In his death the country lost one whom we would have looked to to help pilot the ship of state through the perilous waters we are now navigating. His wise counsel would have been of great value in these troublous times. The need for strong men with positive convictions is greater to-day than ever before in the history of the Republic. He sleeps peacefully on the "banks of the Wabash"; for him life's fitful fever is o'er, but his memory lingers. Peace to his ashes!

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BURNETT) is recognized.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my feeble tribute of respect and appreciation and friendship to the memory of Hon. JACOB E. MEEKER.

When Mr. MEEKER first entered this House he was assigned to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, of which I have the honor of being chairman. It had been the policy of both parties, without any politics entering into the personnel of that committee, to have the committee as nearly divided as possible on the question of the restriction of immigration in proportion to what had developed by different votes in the House of Representatives on that question. Mr. MEEKER no doubt was placed by his party on that committee with the belief that he reflected and represented the same views on that subject as his distinguished predecessor, Dr. Bartholdt, who had opposed the legislation which had been pending for several years for the restriction of immigration.

Mr. MEEKER entered upon the performance of his duties on that committee, and we had long and continuous hearings. At the very outset of the discussions and hearings he no doubt felt inclined, as his predecessor had been, to oppose restriction by the illiteracy test that had been pending and discussed for several years; but he announced to the committee—I remember it well—at one of its first meetings that he entered on the consideration with an open mind, desirous of arriving at what he thought would be a righteous and just conclusion, and that he would go into the investigation of the question without fear or favor, intent on reaching a conclusion that he thought would be just and fair and right.

We had many, many days of hearings. That man had an eagerness and an avidity for work that was unexcelled by any Member with whom I have been intimately associated. He listened to the statements, he listened to the testimony, he listened to the discussions; none of us knew, and he did not know, where he was finally going to land upon that question or upon which side he would cast his decision. He entered into it honestly and earnestly, desiring to reach a conclusion that would meet the approval of an honest conscience and an honest heart.

At the conclusion of those long discussions and of those long hearings before the committee, Mr. MEEKER lined up with the same views that a majority of the committee had maintained for some time. He showed in that investigation and in those discussions a courage worthy of the man. As I said, his immediate predecessor had been strenuously and earnestly opposed to the propositions involved, and had upon every occasion and at every turn of the wheel opposed and sought by honest effort to defeat the views that many of us held. I have no doubt but that at least a great number, if not a majority, of his constituency were in accord with the views that had been held by his immediate predecessor, and that very fact showed the honesty of that brave man. He went out to meet those constituents. He gave them his reasons for the faith that was in him, and he was returned to the House, I believe, twice after he had voted with the majority on that question.

I merely desired, Mr. Speaker, briefly to call attention to that as one of the numerous occasions upon which it was my privilege and pleasure to witness the courage, intellectual and moral, of that strong man. We miss his counsels on the committee now. There were many questions that we desired investigated that the full committee did not have the time to attend to, and when questions of that kind arose there was no man to whom I could more cheerfully refer for investigation and report than to our distinguished colleague who is gone. And, Mr. Speaker, when I heard of his death, cut off in the very prime of manhood, I felt that an intellectual giant had been taken from this body and from the committee of which he was a member. He fell as he had lived, discharging what he believed to be his duty. It is said that when one of Napoleon's great marshals fell on the field of duty he said to the officer whose business it was to call the roll, "Do not strike that great name from the roll, but every time when the roll call is made let an officer step two paces to the front and answer 'He fell on the field of duty.'" And so it may be said of our colleague, he fell in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty. Mr. Speaker, I thought of asking merely to extend my remarks in the RECORD, but my friendship and affection for Mr. MEEKER was so great that I felt I would not deny myself the honor and the privilege in this brief moment to add my personal tribute to the memory of a good friend and a great legislator. He was not of my political faith. I differed from some of his views very earnestly, but I always recognized that when I was opposed to the views of Mr. MEEKER that he was as honest in those views as I dared claim to be in mine. He was a foeman worthy of the steel of any man, no matter how great might be his opponent.

Mr. ROMJUE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, there has been so much said this afternoon in memory of Senator STONE of Missouri, and it has been so well said that I feel impelled not to speak at length.

When we consider the life and character of Senator WILLIAM JOEL STONE of Missouri we find ourselves attracted to those elements within him which marked him as a man, a citizen, and a statesman of unusual proportions.

In what I shall say to you this afternoon in his memory will not be said with any pretense or claim to his perfection, for he, like you and I and all of us, was human.

But on the 14th day of April last, when the last spark of life, so far as this world is concerned, expired or took its flight from his bosom, there was stilled forever upon the stage of wordly affairs a heart, a brain, a body which had throbbed and thought and worked for his fellow man.

I shall never forget the time when I first saw and heard Senator STONE. It was during his campaign for governor of Missouri. I was a boy in my teens.

A big political meeting was held in the county seat of my home county of Macon. The day was designated as the three governors' day. Gov. Horace Boies, the then Democratic governor of Iowa, was there; Hon. David R. Francis, then governor of Missouri, was there; and Senator STONE, then an aspirant for the governorship of Missouri, was in attendance.

It was a clear, bright day. The political contest between Senator STONE and Maj. William Warner was getting at fever heat.

This campaign took place at a time when partisanship ran higher than it does to-day in political contests.

It was a time when the Democrats and Republicans of Missouri followed with intense enthusiasm the leadership of their party candidates. The people were intensely interested in the issue of the campaign and in the success of their chosen party leader.

In the early forenoon thousands of people, coming for many miles, had assembled. It was unquestionably the greatest political gathering that had ever been held before or after that day in that county.

Political badgering often took place in campaigns of that time.

Senator STONE had just reached the climax in a masterful speech, enunciating and defending the principles and issues upon which his party was waging the campaign, which issues from his party's standpoint had just shortly prior in this community been assailed by his political opponent, Maj. Warner.

The meeting of the issue by Senator STONE was received with such unanimous and generous approval of the audience that it rankled in the breast of one listener, who was almost alone of his kind.

This man arose in the midst of the audience and began to announce his faith in the political party to which Senator STONE was opposed. It was apparent at once that the fellow was intoxicated for which no one was responsible except the man himself and those who had manufactured and sold the beverage to him. Addressing Senator STONE he said: "I recall from the Good Book that it is written that at a very important time and a very important place a celestial rolled 'The stone away.' On election day I propose to help Maj. Warner roll 'A Stone away.'"

Senator STONE quickly seized the situation and said: "My good friend, you will have to take more of 'Warner's Safe Cure' before you will be able to roll this Stone away." Of course the retort as might be expected under the circumstances was received by the vast audience quite naturally.

I desire to say this of Senator STONE. In his prime, when he was at that period of life when his body was much stronger than it was in the latter days of his life, I do not hesitate to say that for political vision and foresight he was not excelled anywhere throughout the entire United States. Senator STONE had a combination of combativeness and a tact for conciliation rarely found in any man. It has been told to you this afternoon how fearless Senator STONE was. Such is true, yet he was always ready to conciliate, always ready to lend his influence for the purpose of bringing factions in his party together. He was always ready to do any conciliatory act that he could do which would not abrogate principle. That he would not do. Senator STONE was more viciously fought, perhaps, than any other man in political life in Missouri within my memory.

From what you have heard of him this afternoon you will observe that Senator STONE was fearless, that he would fight, that he was courageous, that he would stand first for those things which he believed to be right, and by reason of his great political foresight he soon became what you might term the party leader in our State. Democrats from all over the State would flock to him to seek his counsel. It became apparent to the opposition party that in order that they might overcome the influence of the success of the Democratic Party in our State it was necessary to destroy Senator STONE, who in the earlier days, of course, had been our governor, and all of the metropolitan press of that State which were interested in the party which was opposed to Senator STONE began at once to turn their vituperation and attacks toward him. These were constantly directed toward him.

Senator STONE, as I have detailed, was always ready to accept the gauge of battle, and he met the issue fairly and squarely. He would not be controlled by the metropolitan press of his own party when he believed them wrong. He refused to be dictated to by them. This called upon him opposition from some of the leading papers even of his own party, but Senator STONE had that determination and that vision which is not often found in many men of public life; that is, he was not willing to subordinate his future prospects to the power of any metropolitan press in his State when they disagreed and he felt he was right. So he went out and openly defied the press of his State when they wrongly attacked him, and the people came to his rescue and the country press throughout the State came to his rescue, and they were never able to accomplish his political destruction. I was one of those who were in the funeral party, and I shall never forget when we arrived at Nevada, Mo., Senator STONE'S old home town. We stepped off the train very shortly after daylight and the people were at that time beginning to come into the town.

As I walked a few yards away from the car in which our delegation was located I observed an old gentleman, perhaps about 6 feet tall. He was dressed very plainly. He was tall and erect, and in his face you could see there was sorrow. I said to a member of the Missouri delegation who was with me, "Do you see that gentleman? Thinking of him here at this early hour in the day, would you give me an analysis of that man as you read him?" He looked at him for a moment, and he said, "I have no doubt he is one of Senator STONE'S most faithful friends. He has doubtless come many miles in order that he might be here to pay his last respects to the memory of his friend." I said to my colleague, "Let's go to him and meet him."

We did, and introduced ourselves. I asked him if he lived in that town or nearby. He said, "I live on a farm 15 miles away." I asked, "Did you come in this morning?" He said, "I did. I rose at 4 o'clock, in order that I might get in here as early as possible." "I presume," said I, "that you are a friend of Senator STONE?" He said, "I am. I voted for him the first time he ever ran for prosecuting attorney. I knew him. He lived among us. I supported him in every political campaign from that day down to his death, and had he lived to become a candidate again, I would have been found standing as loyally and faithfully by him as I ever had in the past. We people feel that we have lost our best friend. We have lost a man whom, although we might sometimes and on some matters differ with him, we have always found sincere, honest, and true to his friends."

I am sure, gentlemen, that those who were in that funeral party on that day, and who had the opportunity of seeing the vast crowd of people assembled to witness the last sad rites over the remains of Senator STONE, could reach no other conclusion than that he still lives in the hearts of Missourians and in the hearts of his friends.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to know the late Senator STONE intimately, but for years I had been an admirer of his strong and fearless personality, having read much of him in the press and in congressional proceedings, and anyone who had followed the career of that strong and forceful man can not but feel that in his death the whole Nation, as well as the State of Missouri, had lost a public servant who could be ill spared at this time. Rugged and honest, he was a type of man that is all too uncommon in these trying times. I do not believe that he ever stopped to think of personal consequences when he took up cudgels for a cause which he believed to be right. With the light of battle in his eyes he would go into the fray without hesitation and without fear, thoroughly armed with facts which were in the main uncontrovertible. I have seen him stand as a lion at bay in the Senate of the United States hurling defiance at his opponents, striking right and left without regard to anything but the cause of truth and justice. Big hearted and loyal to his friends, it was inevitable that they should be legion, and his enemies not a few. In the heat of battle he would throw aside the garb of partisanship and stand erect in the forensic arena dealing blows that struck home. He despised cant and hypocrisy; he detested falsehood and deceit. During the last few years of his life he shone with exceptional luster. He often disagreed with the lines of policy laid down by the titular head of his party, and we all recognize that it takes courage of the highest order to disagree politically with those who hold the destinies of others in the hollow of their hand. When he died the great and silent people of this country lost a stanch friend and a faithful servant.

Missouri has been singularly fortunate in her representation in the Congress of the United States. Thomas H. Benton, CHAMP CLARK and many, many others living and dead whom I might mention. All have served her faithfully and well—none more so than WILLIAM J. STONE, patriot, statesman, and friend and champion of the common people.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Senator STONE'S death occasioned the members of the Missouri delegation in Congress genuine sorrow. He was recognized as a wise counselor and sagacious leader, and was often consulted by his Democratic colleagues on questions affecting the interests of the party, of which he was one of the recognized leaders, and of the great State whose welfare and prosperity always had a large part in his thought and gave him deep concern.

In conference he was always considerate of the opinion of others and most courteous and sympathetic. He was painstaking in his efforts to get the viewpoint of his colleagues, and with rare skill composed differences of opinion and secured unity of action. He was easy of approach, truly democratic in his manners, and I believe I may say of him that he enjoyed the affectionate regard of every member in the delegation, Democrats and Republicans alike. We one and all deeply deplore his death.

Senator STONE was born in Madison County, Ky., May 7, 1848. His father, William Stone, and his mother, Mildred Phelps, were members of old Kentucky families. The Stone family lived in Virginia prior to moving to Kentucky. Senator STONE'S grandfather was one of the pioneers of Kentucky, and it is said of him that he served as the first surveyor of Madison County, and that Thomas Stone, an ancestor of the family, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a member of a well-known Virginia family.

Madison County, Ky., furnished Missouri two of her most distinguished governors, WILLIAM JOEL STONE and David Roland Francis, and many of Missouri's good citizens in all walks of life were born in Madison County, Ky., or are descendants of Madison County stock. In his early youth Senator STONE attended the common schools in his native State. At the age of 15 he moved to Columbia, Mo., and entered the State university. He studied law in the office of his brother-in-law, Col. S. Turner, then and for many years after one of the leading lawyers of central Missouri. He was admitted to the bar in 1869. Shortly thereafter he moved to Bedford, Ind., where he formed a partnership with one A. B. Carleton, but remained there only a few months, returning to Missouri in 1870 and locating at Nevada, the county seat of Vernon County. He rose rapidly in the affairs of the county and soon became one of the leading members of his community. He was prosecuting attorney of Vernon County for one term (1873–1875) and was a presidential elector on the Tilden and Hendricks ticket in 1876. That was one of the most memorable presidential campaigns following the Civil War, and many a young and spirited lawyer in Missouri got his first baptism in politics in that campaign.

Senator STONE was a Member of the Forty-ninth, Fiftieth, and Fifty-first Congresses (March 4, 1885–March 3, 1891); declining to make the race for renomination, he announced that he would be a candidate for the governorship to succeed Gov. David R. Francis.

Senator STONE'S race for governor brought him into great prominence throughout the State. He won the nomination after a memorable contest, in which Hon. Richard Dalton, of Ralls County, was his chief opponent. Much bitterness was engendered in the campaign, and the Republicans regarded the time opportune to come back into popular favor in Missouri.

The Republicans nominated Maj. William Warner, of Kansas City, as their candidate for governor. Maj. Warner was a veteran of the Civil War and a member of one of the leading law firms of Kansas City, and was regarded a fine lawyer and a public speaker of rare skill and eloquence. He had been a leader of his party in the State for many years, and had enjoyed many a political honor. He also held high rank in the Grand Army of the Republic. He was very popular with the Union veterans of the Civil War. The Republicans regarded Maj. Warner as the very strongest candidate they could name to contest with Senator STONE for the governorship of the State. Maj. Warner adopted as his slogan, "Stand up for Missouri"; this slogan was quickly taken up by the Republican leaders over the State and passed on to the rank and file, and coupled with it was the cry, "Poor old Missouri." This cry undertook to picture the plight of the State under the administrations of such distinguished Democratic governors as Silas Woodson, Charles Hardin, John S. Phelps, Thomas P. Crittenden, John S. Marmeduke, Albert Moorehouse, and David R. Francis, than whom no State in the Union ever had more able and efficient chief executives. STONE accepted the issue tendered by the Republicans and contrasted the administrations from Woodson to Francis with the Republican administrations of Governors McClurg and Fletcher. His speech in opening the campaign was a masterpiece of sarcasm and eloquence, and reviewed with cruel incisiveness the record of McClurg's and Fletcher's administrations. His speech was quickly given wide publicity throughout the State. It was a great speech. The Republicans had planned an aggressive campaign, but soon found themselves on the defensive, and continued so throughout the campaign. It is needless to say Senator STONE was triumphantly elected, along with all his associates on the State ticket.

My only purpose in calling attention to this campaign and Senator STONE's part in it is to emphasize my conviction that that was the turning point in his career. If he had proven himself commonplace or had failed in his ability to measure up to the high duties that devolved upon him as the standard bearer of the Democratic Party in that campaign, his career in all probability would have closed with his term as governor. I actively supported Senator STONE for the nomination for governor, and our acquaintance, which ripened into friendship, began in that campaign.

It is interesting to recall that a little more than a decade later Senator STONE and Maj. Warner served as colleagues in the United States Senate, Senator STONE succeeding Missouri's little giant, Senator George G. Vest, in 1903, and Maj. Warner succeeding Missouri's grand old Confederate veteran and statesman, Senator Francis M. Cockrell, in 1905. Whatever asperities the campaign of 1892 engendered when they were pitted against each other for governor had long since been forgotten. They were both chivalrous and lovable men.

Senator STONE was a leader of men. He had a great and devoted following in the State of Missouri. He held a high place in the leadership of the Democratic Party in the Nation. No man ever gave more generously of his time and money and talents to his party than did Senator STONE. The success of his party was ever a matter of the deepest concern to him. He did not seek place and power to enrich himself financially, but as an opportunity for larger service to his party and country. He believed in the principles of the Democratic Party with all the intensity of his nature and that the happiness and prosperity of the people could be best vouchsafed under a Democratic administration. He was a man of great courage. He was an honorable antagonist. He counted among his closest personal friends men with whom he differed widely in politics.

Just before the entrance of the United States into the war with Germany Senator STONE opposed the armed-neutrality bill. He was charged with filibustering to defeat it. This he denied. The criticism of his action became so bitter that the General Assembly of Missouri, the majority in both branches being Senator STONE's personal and political friends, adopted a resolution demanding support of the President. While Senator STONE was not mentioned in the resolutions by name, it was well understood at the time that they reflected the sentiments of the Democracy of Missouri and what they regarded his duty in the crisis then impending.

Senator STONE's opposition to the declaration of the war with Germany was open and fearless. Although chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations in the Senate, he declined to take charge of the war resolution as was expected of him by the administration. He transferred his leadership to Senator HITCHCOCK, of Nebraska, next ranking Democratic member on the committee. His attitude on those two resolutions was typical of his attitude toward the world war. He believed that America's participation in the war should be avoided if possible, but when the die was cast for war he accepted the decision without further question, and took his place with the supporters of the war measures and consistently maintained that attitude until death closed his eventful career.

When we reflect that under the Constitution the power to declare war is vested in the Congress of the United States and not in the Chief Executive, and the responsibility is personal to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives, we can well understand how any Senator or Representative clothed with such a tremendous responsibility might hesitate to come to a decision involving his country in a war with all its dire consequences. If Senator STONE had lived and had been a candidate for Senator in 1920 and the people of Missouri had had more time and larger opportunity to analyze his motives and understand the tremendous responsibility from which he shrank, they would have regarded his conduct in a more kindly light, and he might again have won popular favor.

The St. Louis Republic, in an editorial following the death of Senator STONE, said:

> STONE was a master of politics. No one of his generation in this State showed such consummate ability to handle men or mold opinion. He never refused a fight when he thought it necessary, and his victories were for the most part hard won in open contest. He was true to his friends, and to this fact, coupled with an uncanny knack of sizing up a situation and acting vigorously, boldly at the chosen moment, may be attributed his great success as a leader.

Senator STONE's was a long and distinguished career. He held many offices of trust and honor. His life work is ended. He will ever be classed as one of Missouri's most distinguished citizens.

Senator STONE was married to Sarah Louise Winston, April 2, 1874, and his wife and three children—Mrs. John G. Parkinson, of St. Joseph; United States Circuit Judge Kimbrough Stone, of Kansas City; and Miss Mabel Stone—survive him. His domestic life was ideal. He was loved with the deepest affection by his wife and children. To them his death is an irreparable loss.

Eloquent testimony of the high esteem in which Senator STONE was held by the people of Missouri was shown when his remains lay in state at the State capitol at Jefferson City. Rich and poor alike, among whom he had made his home for many years, and leading citizens, in official and unofficial life, from every section of the State assembled to pay an attribute of respect to his memory. His last resting place was in the cemetery at the city of Nevada, where he first entered upon the career in which he was destined to become distinguished in after years. Surrounded and mourned by the friends of his early manhood, who had watched his career with affectionate interest and pride, the mortal remains of Senator STONE were given a last resting place in Deepwood Cemetery.

The name and brilliant public career of WILLIAM JOEL STONE will adorn one of the brightest and most interesting chapters in the history of the State of Missouri.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE MARTIN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On motion of Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY, by unanimous consent,
> Ordered, That Sunday, February 2, 1919, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of Hon. CHARLES MARTIN, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] offers the following resolutions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 544.

> Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. CHARLES MARTIN, late a Member of this House from the State of Illinois.
> Resolved, That as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, and in recognition of his distinguished public career, the House, at the conclusion of the exercises of this day, shall stand adjourned.
> Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.
> Resolved, That the Clerk send a copy of these resolutions to the family of the deceased.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, many Members from Illinois who were anxious to be present and offer tributes to the late Congressman MARTIN are unavoidably absent from the city; and I ask unanimous consent that all who desire to do so may have leave to revise and extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a time-honored custom, we have come together to-day, gentlemen, to commemorate the memory of a Member of the House, who, it is true, was not known to many of you, but very well known to and most kindly remembered by the gentlemen of Illinois, especially those from the Chicago congressional districts.

On a farm near Ogdensburg, St. Lawrence County, N. Y., on the 20th day of May, 1857, was born to Ellen and Martin Martin, a son, named Charles, being the ninth of a family of 11 children. In April, 1866, his parents rented their farm and moved to Chicago, where Charles lived the rest of his life.

Unfortunately, the health of former Congressman CHARLES MARTIN, of whose career I am permitted to speak, had been failing during the last few years preceding his election to Congress and the strain connected with such a campaign sapped what strength was left in his once hardy body, so that he succumbed shortly after his inauguration in the House as Congressman from the Fourth congressional district of Illinois—the district I now have the distinguished honor to represent.

Congressman CHARLES MARTIN, as some of the members know, was a unique figure in the public life of Chicago. A man whose situation in early life did not permit the attainment of vast stores of book knowledge, yet he gained great heights in the political affairs of his State and was esteemed by all who knew him, and those who did not esteem him, feared him. He belonged to that old school, which very often falls into disfavor with those groups of people who may well be called "the dilettanti" in public reforms. He was one of that large class of self-made men, naturally talented and gifted, who bettered his natural abilities by every occasion that practical life gave him. He was educated in the greatest school of all the world—the American Democracy.

In the homely language of his constituency, CHARLES MARTIN was a two-fisted man—a man through and through. Had he been favored with opportunities for college instruction and professional knowledge, he would have taken his place beside the great lawyers, physicians, scientists, or statesmen of America, because he was a man of wonderful natural ability. But the fact that a person does not reach that zenith of public glory does not prove him less a man. Fame and national regard often come to a man not because of his interior, intimate self, but because of opportunities and occasions arising by the chance of birth or of fortune, for which he is in no way responsible; and, generally, such fame comes because of accomplishments which come through what I may be permitted to call forced instruction and education, and not because of any inherent superiority to one's fellowmen. CHARLES MARTIN'S fortitude in overcoming obstacles, his courage in adversity, his patience in reverses are matters of history in Chicago. He was made of that spirit and flesh that but yesterday shed their glory on the soldiers of the United States in the battle fields of France and in our preparations at home.

War, like death, might be called the great leveler, and under the mailed fist of Mars all must bow alike to the primal conditions. Rich and poor, great and small, must face the common enemy, undergo the same trials, tribulations, sufferings, and privations. Whether a man is well versed in the arts and sciences, or whether he is illiterate and mentally uninstructed, the manly virtues, if they are there, will crop out in the face of war; and the manly virtues make the reliable soldiers, the kind of men that Uncle Sam needs to keep his colors high on the flagpole or hoisted to the topmast. And every Member here who knew him will agree with me when I say that CHARLES MARTIN was a man through and through; a man who was not fearful of facing his enemy, nay, who rather sought him out; a man whose hand clasp made you feel the soul behind it and needed not the flattery of words to say, "I am your friend." And CHARLES MARTIN'S friendship was something to be coveted.

Therefore, having known him since my very boyhood's days, having seen him age from the stalwart leader of the fifth ward of Chicago to the mature master in local politics; having at one time fought him bitterly in campaigns wherein spirit ran high; having witnessed his many acts of kindness to his fellowmen; having associated with him, politically and otherwise, I deem it a pleasure and an honor to have this opportunity of writing in the annals of this House an expression of esteem, honor, gratitude, and respect to my departed predecessor and to the memory of my friend, Congressman CHARLES MARTIN.

Having labored faithfully for the public; having given prodigally of his time and money for the betterment of his neighbor; having passed a lifetime in the service of the people (and one must recall in this respect that he hailed from a laboring class and district of people, who when unemployed seek their first aid in the alderman), it is only fit, right, and just that his memory should be preserved in the chronicles of the Nation, and I rejoice that fate spared him until he had achieved a position to make this possible.

We all have ideals; but as a general principle lofty and inspiring ideals and devotion to those ideals generally spring from deep thought, exhaustive study, and early training. But ideals in themselves serve no purpose to humanity unless they become realized through some suitable channel. Ideals move the world, it is true; but there is in life something more demonstrative of a man's worth and love of humanity than the mere espousal of lofty thoughts of idealism. Some idealists of the past, as revealed in their works, have not lived up to their ideas in their own practical lives. Such is the inconsistency of life that even some of the foremost thinkers and intellectual giants of the past lived the life unprintable. The man who through his noble actions and good deeds, his generosity and charity, passes along life's road sowing seeds of happiness, contentment, and comfort among his fellow men, is a man whose existence is more serviceable and more beneficial to society than the idealistic theorist, blatantly proclaiming his ideas of life, and at the same time spurning the beggar by the wayside. The orator vouching for and insisting upon patriotism from the platform is not half as patriotic as the boy in khaki. In a word, the doer of goodness is better than the mere professor of goodness.

Applying this test to the man whose memory we commemorate, let me say, that CHARLES MARTIN may have been exteriorly rough and gruff, but his heart was plastic to the delicate fingers of want and need; his manners may not have been overdelicate, but neither his words nor acts ever purposely hurt a friend; he fought an opponent, politically and financially, unrelentlessly and without mercy, but he greeted him always as a man. His idealism in life was the attainment of power, but it was the power to do good; his desire was not to secure a job or obtain a position, but to so situate himself as to be able to distribute jobs, positions, and give assistance to others.

Had I the time, I would with pleasure, recite many an anecdote exemplifying and describing the sort of soul which gave light and life to those steel gray eyes which in argumentation cut like the proverbial sword. But time in its march has swept him along toward the shores of eternity, and to-day his friends at home mourn his loss, his enemies acknowledge his sterling manly qualities, his acts of goodness go on bearing fruit, and I am sure that in the great hereafter, if he sees his country in its present strife, his soul would wish to take a hand in this greatest of all fights for liberty, for we must pay him this tribute that he was 100 per cent American.

True like all those of the old school he disfavored any attempt at changing the present order of things and conditions; true the first outcrop of woman suffrage did not appeal to him, but in due time, having become convinced of the betterment of mankind derivable from such innovations, he gladly embraced them. Whenever the American people and American life were to be bettered he never was recalcitrant.

In conclusion, let me say, that I believe we should keep in mind the old adage, "If we had no defects ourselves we should not take so much pleasure in observing the failings of others." I have observed that there is sufficient good in any one of us to speak about, and I believe that we should try to avoid calling attention to whatever may be objectionable or reproachable in one's fellow man, unless we have a duty to perform in this respect. I am saying this, not because there is anything in the life of Congressman CHARLES MARTIN to be hidden, but because he was the victim of base calumny. Everyone here knows and realizes that our political contests sometimes go too far, and opponents flay and excoriate each other in ways that oftentimes leave wounds, never to be healed. So it was with CHARLES MARTIN—his political enemies spared him in no way. His name, life, family, and reputation were all the objects of attack; the press abused him and ridiculed him. But on occasions of this kind, we all say, believe, and know, that a man's political opponents do not present a fair estimate of his character and real worth as a man. And indeed, such was the case with our friend, and the words of Pope can very well be applied in reference to many an aspersion on CHARLES MARTIN'S character.

Envy will virtue like a shadow pursue
But only to prove the substance true.

We all know he was devoted to his home and to its duties and to its privileges. His wife, who survives him, was Nellie McCarthy, of Chicago, whom he married in 1877. His loved ones who mourn his death have full right and reason to be proud of his career and of his name. His funeral was attended by men from all over our State of Illinois. We were all sincere mourners at his grave. His memory will live with those who knew him as an honorable, true, and brave man, who loved his country, his family, and his fellow men.

And as I scan over his life from childhood to mature age, his public, social, and private life, as I knew him as he truly was, what his personal qualities were, and his personal abilities realized, there comes to my mind a suggestion which embodies the secret of this man's race in life:

He was a man who tried to make the best of himself; who served his country, his fellow man, and God; bold, free, and resolute in spirit; self-made in the best meaning of that much-abused expression; generous, open-hearted, and ready to make any sacrifices for his friends.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I did not have the pleasure of extended personal acquaintance with Congressman CHARLES MARTIN, which was enjoyed by my distinguished friend who has just preceded me, and that was enjoyed by some other Members of the House who will deliver addresses upon this occasion.

As has been stated by his colleague and my friend, Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY, Mr. MARTIN was born upon a farm. He was raised amid surroundings which contributed to the development of the sterling qualities of American manhood. He was fortunate in beginning life among the beauties of nature, where he was brought in close contact with those things which bring to mind not only present surroundings but possibilities for the future, and contribute to the development of those characteristics which through all the years to come serve to inspire in us the best for humanity and cause us in our lives to glorify God.

Leaving these surroundings when but a boy, his father carried him with other members of his family to the great city of the West, Chicago, where he finished what education he was permitted to obtain and entered upon the realities of life in the hustling, bustling metropolis, which gave him an opportunity to show those sterling qualities which had been imbued in his nature from the earliest moments of his life up to that good hour.

Evidently the people of Chicago realized these qualities in this good man and took cognizance of the ability which he possessed and the qualifications which they might use for their welfare and for the development of the interests of that great community and for the benefit of the people who lived there. Therefore they called him to public service comparatively early in his life, and he enjoyed their confidence and their esteem, as was evidenced by the fact that they continued him in one position or another practically all through his life, finally elevating him to a seat in the Congress of the United States of America.

Unfortunately, at the time he was elected to the Congress his health was impaired, and while he performed as best he could during the remaining days of his life, subsequent to his election, the duties that devolved upon him, and came to the city of Washington at the organization of Congress to participate in the organization by casting his vote along with the other members of his party in seeing that the organization was maintained in the House which in his judgment he believed would be for the welfare of the country, yet because of failure of health he had to return soon to his home, and did not have the opportunity to come back to Washington subsequent to that time.

In the organization of the House he was assigned to the great Committee on Agriculture, of which I have the honor myself to be a member. This was a fit recognition of his qualifications and of the ability which he had exhibited in the past. In his services on that committee as well as in the House, if his health had permitted, he would have been a power in the accomplishment of great good, I am sure, in securing legislation along lines which would have been for the welfare not only of the people of his own district but of his great city and State and also of this marvelous Republic.

He served in the city of Chicago for 16 years in the city council, being elected to his first term in 1894. He was a member of the executive committee of the county central committee for 6 years. He served as ward committeeman from the fifth ward for 12 years. His selection to these positions in which his people showed him recognition demonstrated the fact that they had absolute and unbounded confidence in him, and as he met in full measure the requirements of each position to which he was called they elevated and promoted him from time to time, until, as I said, at last, just prior to his death, in recognition of the great services which he had rendered, they elected him to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States.

These facts demonstrate that he was a man of strong character and determination; that when he took a position and made up his mind with reference to any question, either local or in a larger field, he stood for it with that unfailing determination that marked him, in deed and in truth, as has been stated by the Hon. JOHN W. RAINEY in the address he has delivered, as a man through and through, upon whom you could depend, not only when the sun was shining, but when the lightnings flashed and the thunders rolled and the darkness came. He stood like a beacon light for the principles he loved and which in his heart he believed were for the welfare of the people. He was ready to listen to suggestions and to arguments, and if convinced that he was wrong he had the manhood and the courage to acknowledge his error and correct his position.

Another chief characteristic, as I have been informed by those who knew him best, was fidelity to his friends. He was your friend, when he once became your friend, in deed and in truth, and you could depend upon him. There is nothing in all life to me more beautiful than a devoted friendship that is pure and true and tried, and which you never have any occasion to doubt or question. Among the sweetest memories of my life, going back to my boyhood days, are the recollections of the bright and beautiful friendships which I have enjoyed. It has given me great joy to have close friends; friends I love, and who love me, and of whose friendship I have an appreciation which language fails me to fully express or describe. Friendships of that kind are the bright and beacon lights along the pathway of life that help us and encourage us as we travel along through this old world, seeking as best we can to do good and to benefit our fellow men. They strengthen our faith in the sincerity of our fellows and thus give us courage and help us to be true.

I have understood that that was one of the distinctive characteristics of Congressman MARTIN. When he once gave a man his friendship and affection and vouchsafed to him his word, he stood with the strength of the mountain itself, unshakable in the realization on his part that it was right, and having announced the right, he fixed it in his affection and friendship and stood without wavering, and never gave any cause of question or doubt.

Not only have I understood that this was one of the distinctive characteristics of Mr. MARTIN, but I understand that his well-known charity was another strong characteristic. Friendship is beautiful indeed, but charity, unselfish in its nature, absolutely shines forth in the character of any man as the most beautiful gem of all.

In the community where Mr. MARTIN lived, as was suggested by the speaker who preceded me, there were a great many laboring people. Many of them had difficulties which were presented to them on frequent occasions, when they needed counsel and advice, and oftentimes needed the more substantial things of life—needed the real help that could come from a friend who was not only willing but might be able to assist them. And it is my information that there never was a time when people in distress or in need in Mr. MARTIN'S community and neighborhood and city appealed to him in vain in deserving cases, but in each and every instance his great heart welled up in responsive fervor as he granted to them the requests which they made, when within reason and within the scope of his abilities, never turning a deaf ear to any that deserved his real consideration.

This most beautiful of the characteristics of human life is but the exemplification of the life of the only perfect man who ever walked the earth, and He said that the greatest service that we might render in all the world was to respond to those that were in need. The greatest service that might be rendered is to give to those who are in need of help, and who are unable to help themselves and are unable to return to you the services which you might render them, or the benefits which you might bestow upon them; in other words, unselfish service and favors from a pure motive with no hope of return or personal reward.

In his service in his city Mr. MARTIN bestowed great benefits not only upon the city itself, but upon individual citizens; and just as people appealed to him in private life as a private citizen, he as their public official and representative was always accessible to them, and they did not hesitate at any time to apply to him when they felt like going to him, because they knew he would give them a ready and a willing response.

During his service in the city council, as I have been informed, at one time there was a very dangerous crossing at a railroad, where the street cars crossed it. It became a menace. The people had appealed in vain for relief, but had not been able to secure it.

This was in the time of the old horse cars and it was nothing unusual for a car to be struck by a railroad train once or twice a month, thereby injuring a number of people. The people appealed to CHARLES MARTIN, and his great heart responded. He took this up in the city council, and insisted that the stockyards people be compelled to elevate these tracks at a cost of $250,000 for the purpose of letting the people pass safely. This was done after a year of fighting with the stock-yard people and the railroad companies. He was the father of the track-elevation ordinance, which he succeeded in having passed in the city council after four years of strenuous fighting. He was also father of the "wheel-tax ordinance," which brought to the city nearly $900,000, and which now yields nearly $1,000,000 annually. There was a reduction plant situated in his ward, which was being run by some financiers, who were making on an average of $300,000 yearly. This reduction plant was a detriment to the people for many miles around. Mr. MARTIN, along with a number of others in that particular ward and district, got up in arms against this plant, and after two and one-half years of strenuous fighting succeeded in driving them out, and demanded that if this plant was to be maintained that it be maintained as a clean and sanitary plant and not a detriment to the people.

When these matters were brought to his attention, even though Mr. MARTIN realized that he was going against great political interests and wealth, still the welfare of the plain people appealed to him who were unable to help themselves and that was sufficient to engage his earnest attention and his best efforts and he went to work in the council and had these matters all corrected and secured lasting and permanent benefits for the people. I might mention other instances of this kind, but I presume others that are more familiar than I with local conditions and with the great services which he rendered in the development of that marvelous city will bring them to your attention.

Therefore, in conclusion, let me say I desire to pay this tribute because of the fact I believe Congressman MARTIN deserves it by reason of the fact that he stood close at all times to the people and was in deed and in truth a true Representative of those who entrusted him with their commission. He was a good citizen in life; he was a true friend; he was a faithful public official; he was a patriot, and a devoted husband and father, and therefore, in the end of his life these characteristics all combine to make a consummation of a life which is an honor to him, which is a heritage to his loved ones and to his family, which is a gratification to his friends, which is a fond remembrance to the citizens of his great city and of the community in which he lived, and which being now made of record in the annals of this House will be in days to come a fitting memorial of a true American citizen, and when it is said of a man that he is a true American citizen it is saying of him that he represents the great principles for which this marvelous Republic stands, and no greater compliment or honor can be paid. May God bless and comfort his loved ones and help them to look forward to the coming of the perfect day when we shall meet those who have gone before and await us in the city beautiful.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY took the chair.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, during the busy and active years of his career on this earth, Congressman CHARLES MARTIN participated in stirring events. He was born amid delightful surroundings in rural New York, and a man who is born upon a farm starts out in life with marked advantages of birth. In his boyhood years he was brought by his parents to the city of Chicago and he spent there all the years of his career on this earth which followed. When he reached the city of Chicago that great city had a population of less than 250,000 people, but already long parallel lines of steel connected it with the great West, and as the West grew Chicago grew. Across meridians of longitude from the East came millions of people and quickly settled up the valleys of our great, lonely, western rivers, and the West was bound always by bands of steel to the great city of the lakes.

Five years after his arrival in Chicago the greatest fire in the history of the world's cities swept out of existence 17,500 buildings. But the development of Chicago continued and in two years a miracle had happened. Every vestige of the fire had disappeared. This happened as CHARLES MARTIN advanced in years from boyhood to youth; and through all the years which followed his career was inseparably connected with the development of the great city of Chicago. He saw it grow from a city of less than 250,000 to one of the world's greatest cities, embracing within its boundaries at the time of his death 2,500,000 people. When he was elected to the city council the city had developed until it had within its boundaries over a million people. He served as a member of this important body—one of the world's most important municipal governing organizations—for the long period of sixteen years—an important service. It is an honor to belong to this great body, and it is a marked distinction indeed to have served for 16 years as a member of the Chicago city council—an honor and a distinction which comes to few men. When he died there had been added to the population of Chicago another million and a half. He helped build and develop the great city. In all of our cities and on every countryside there are men who lift and there are men who merely lean while others do the work, but in the great city of Chicago, from the years of his full manhood to the year of his death, CHARLES MARTIN was among those who helped lift, who helped do the great things that great city has accomplished.

After the fire Chicago was quickly rebuilt and in the early 80's they rebuilt the city of Chicago again. Buildings sprang into existence of a new type with broad foundations and when Congressman MARTIN's career commenced as a member of the city council the city of Chicago was engaged in a third process of rebuilding. Buildings which were erected after the fire rapidly disappeared from the downtown section of the city and buildings with foundations reaching to bed rock and rising twenty stories in the blue azure of the sky had replaced them.

Miracle after miracle in city building occurred in the city of Chicago during the active years of CHARLES MARTIN'S connection with it. While he was a member of the city council he promoted these civic improvements which made it possible for great avenues to extend for miles from the blue waters of the lakes out into the prairies of Illinois and along those avenues magnificient residences were built. He was active in his efforts to raise the railways in Chicago above the grade of the streets in order to protect the lives of the citizens of Chicago. He was bound closely by ties of love and sympathy with thousands and thousands of his fellow men. Rough, generous, kindly, brave, he will be remembered through the years to come by those who have survived him as few men are remembered.

There is no death here. The flowers which wither and die with the dying year, as the cold blasts of winter come, merely sleep through the months of cold and fog and snow until the warm breath of May brings them back to life again. The rocks, as they decay, simply sustain the mosses that grow upon them. The sun, as it sets in the western sky, merely rises to shine in splendor on other seas and on other shores. The stars, as they move in brilliant procession across the skies during the night hours and disappear beyond the western horizon, simply rise again to shine in all their beauty upon other scenes. And so, upon occasions like this, there is always left to the friends of him who has departed the consolation and the faith that what we call on this earth death is merely the passing through the portal to a world we do not understand, but to a world which we are sure is more splendid, more magnificent, than this, to a career which is longer than this, and there is left the hope that this life has been but a mere period of preparation for a newer and a fuller and a larger life which lies beyond the grave.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Representative CHARLES MARTIN Congress lost an experienced and painstaking legislator and the Democratic Party one of its most faithful and loyal supporters. He was a tireless worker and it was through his own efforts that he raised himself from humble circumstances to a seat in this body.

I knew Mr. MARTIN for many years. I first met him as a member of the city council of the city of Chicago when I was a member of that body. He was elected to represent the fifth ward, and was at that time in the employ of Swift & Co. at the Union Stock Yards as one of the reliable assistants of that firm. Having been a wage earner himself, he was at all times anxious to stand for the rights of laboring men and to work for their advancement whenever possible. His life was never an easy life; he was always doing something for his people.

As a member of the city council he was a fearless and courageous representative, never afraid to express his opinion or to say what he thought regarding matters of public interest; nor did he hesitate to vote on any question in which the general welfare of the city was concerned, or in a way which he believed would prove of benefit to his constituents. If he made up his mind as to what was right, he would act regardless of what might be said about him. He was never a "trimmer"; you could always tell where he stood. No citizen could be prouder of the progress, improvement, and growth of our city or the prosperity of its people.

He was first elected a member of the city council of Chicago in 1894 and served continuously for three terms, retiring in 1902. He was reelected in 1905 and served one term, and was again sent back to the council in 1910. He retired in 1914, but came back in 1915, and served continuously from that date until he resigned, after his election to the National House of Representatives.

During all the years of his service in the city council of Chicago he was conspicuous for his constant attendance at the meetings and for the faithful discharge of his duties to his constituents.

During the time I was a member of the board of education I never knew an alderman who worked harder to obtain convenient and suitable school accommodations for the youth of his ward. He liked children and was anxious that they receive a good education; he wanted the very best that could be provided, and he generally got what he went after; nothing else would satisfy him.

He was a man of plain and somewhat rugged exterior, but he possessed a warm, generous nature, a kindly heart, and a ready hand to help his fellow men whenever the call came to him. There was no citizen of the ward who did not feel free to call upon him at any time, day or night. He would gladly render any service he could to those who sought his help, and willingly perform a kindly and generous act for friend or foe. He made many and lasting friends throughout the city during his public service, but to him there were no friends like the old friends in the fifth ward.

Mr. MARTIN was the possessor of a native wit that made him popular among his colleagues and he enlivened many a debate among the city fathers. He made a study of municipal affairs and was a conscientious worker for the welfare of the city.

While he was a lifelong and uncompromising Democrat, he never allowed politics to supersede the interests of all the people. He was a patriot in the truest sense of the word and his ambition was to do something for his country's benefit during his life; he was influenced by no other consideration in seeking the honor of election to this honorable body. Having been reared among the people whom he so long and so faithfully served as their representative in the legislative body of the great municipality of which he was a typical son, these people respected and had confidence in him, and those who knew him well loved him best. They took delight in honoring him, as his political record amply proves, and when he asked the last and greatest honor at their hands, a membership to this great Legislative Assembly, they cheerfully gave it to him.

When we were called into special session in April, 1917, I had the pleasure of riding with him from Chicago to Washington. It was his first trip to the National Capital as a Member of Congress. I noticed then he was not in the best of health; he had not been for some time previous. In fact, he was a sick man when he ran for the office, but he felt that he was able to and he seemed confident that he would regain his health sufficiently to serve his constituency during the term for which he was elected. It was quite apparent at the time that we could not keep out of the great and terrible war in Europe much longer; in fact, it was understood then that we were called to Washington to receive a message from the President declaring war upon Germany. Mr. MARTIN said he was determined, if such was the case, to stand by the President and our Government at all hazard. He voted for the declaration of war, but was not able to remain in Washington long after because of his failing health. He hated to leave here while his country was at war, but was compelled to return home, never to come back again.

The membership of this House had no opportunity to learn of his worth as a legislator or a man. CHARLIE MARTIN was a good citizen, an uncompromising Democrat, a loyal American, and he will be missed by the people of his district, especially by those of his ward, whom he so long and faithfully served as their alderman. His name will, for many years, be associated with those whose work in the city council contributed to the fame, prosperity, and commercial greatness of Chicago. To his widow and family and those nearest and dearest to him we extend our heartfelt sympathy. In the stockyards district, where he was one of the great plain people, and always generous and benevolent to those in need of assistance, many a tear was brought to the eyes of the poor when he passed to the great beyond. They delighted to honor him as far as was in their power, and they long will mourn his loss and always keep his name in pleasant memory.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Speaker, in accordance with a time-honored custom we are met to-day to pay the last tribute of respect to one of our colleagues who has joined "the innumerable caravan that moved toward the realms of death."

It is most appropriate that the House of Representatives should perpetuate this custom, for in this era public men are subjected to so much criticism and so much that is evil is attributed to their every act that it is eminently fitting for those who served by their side in public life to testify to the good they have done and to place a wreath of honorable memory upon the name of one who is no longer here to speak for himself.

CHARLES MARTIN was only a Member of this House for a very short time before the grim reaper, Death, called him from the activities of this life to that "bourne from whence no traveler returns," but in the short time he was with us, those who had the opportunity to meet and know him found a genial and kindly personality, united to a strong and forceful character, and had he lived but a few years more he would have undoubtedly left an impressive reputation as a legislator and statesman, for he had a wide grasp of all public questions and a clear discernment of the duties and obligations of his office such as few men show in their first term.

But it was not to be, and we are reminded again that in the midst of life we should be prepared for the summons that has been prepared for all of us and that may be served at any moment.

Fortunately, as we stand beside the bier of a loved one who has gone before, we hear the gentle voice that reaches us through the centuries and bids us recall His promise in those words of never-failing cheer: "I am the Resurrection and the Life."

It is this reflection that comforts us when we contemplate the many who have left us to go to that land of shadows and find through the Valley of the Shadow of Death the way to the Realms of Everlasting Peace.

It is then, as we recall the losses we have suffered in the past, that we may say with the poet:

Life's shores are shifting
Every year,
And we are seaward drifting
Every year,
Old places, changing, fret us;
The living more forget us;
There are fewer to regret us
Every year;
But the truer life grows nigher
Every year;
Earth's hold on us grows slighter
And the heavy burden lighter
And the dawn immortal brighter,
Every year.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, like my colleagues I am here to-day to pay tribute to the memory of our departed colleague, CHARLES MARTIN, whom I have known intimately and well for over 30 years.

CHARLES MARTIN was a plain, blunt, fearless, and courageous man. I served with him for many years on the county central committee, as well as on the executive committee of the Democratic Party of Cook County, Ill., and I at all times admired and appreciated his earnest determination to aid and be of service to the party which he at all times designated the party of the people.

As has been so well stated by my colleagues, Messrs. GALLAGHER and RAINEY, he was a strong and courageous man, never hesitating to do what he believed was right. He was a strong speaker and debater, and was known to express his views in a manner that could never be misunderstood by anyone. He was indeed a born fighter for the cause of democracy and those things which he advocated and believed in. He was a unique man; he had his peculiarities, and, being human and the same as we, suffered with some imperfections. Who does not?

During his many years of service, due to his fighting proclivities, he brought upon himself many political contests. He had a large personal following and many warm friends who at all times stood loyally by him, which made it possible for him to combat strong opposition and thus show his ability to come back again and again into public life. He did a great deal for Chicago, especially in the interest of the people of his district and his ward. After many years of service in the common council it was his aim to be elected from his district as Representative in Congress, in which he was successful in 1916 in a bitter primary fight, being elected by a tremendous majority on election day. Soon after the election he was stricken by illness, from which he never recovered. Notwithstanding his serious illness, when the Sixty-fifth Congress convened, believing that his presence was necessary to bring about the reelection of a Democrat as Speaker and the organization of the House, he disregarded the advice of his physician and family, left a sanitarium, and came to the Capitol to assume his congressional duties. Here I had still better opportunity during the short space of time which it was his good fortune to serve to learn to admire his determination and his immense loyalty and love for his country, and it is to be regretted that he was not spared so that he could have demonstrated to his district and his many friends in Chicago that he was not only a capable councilman, but that he was a capable, faithful, and loyal legislator. Realizing and recognizing his physical condition, I advised, together with other colleagues, that he should not remain much longer without proper care and attention, and though he himself realized his serious condition he insisted on remaining and did remain nearly to the last, so that he could vote on some of the measures which he believed required his vote, remarking in his usual unique way, "There is not much more that I can do, so will stay as long as I can." But, notwithstanding his will power and determination, he was obliged to leave Washington shortly after his congressional duties began, never again to return. Within a few short days he departed whence no traveler returns.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the House (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) adjourned until Monday, February 3, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 3, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the God of our fathers, we worship Thee. We seek Thy guidance and blessing as we attempt the duties of this day. As Thou hast led us in times past, so we trust Thee to lead us on. By meditation upon Thy name we gain the vision of the things to be done, the balance of right and justice, the high ideals, the principles upon which we are to build our national life. Let us have Thy presence and blessing this day in the discharge of every duty. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Friday, January 31, 1919, when, on request of Mr. KING and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS (H. DOC. NO. 1754).

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules of useless papers and documents on file in the Department of the Interior having no historical value, and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House thereof.

POSTAGE TO POSTAL UNION COUNTRIES (S. DOC. NO. 366).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $250 required by the War Department for postage to postal union countries for the fiscal year 1919, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL BUILDINGS (H. DOC. NO. 1746).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a list of 156 buildings and 7 extensions of Federal buildings which have been authorized by Congress but have not so far been constructed, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Secretary of War (S. Doc. No. 368), the Secretary of the Navy (S. Doc. No. 373), the Secretary of Agriculture (S. Doc. No. 370), the Postmaster General (S. Doc. No. 367), the Attorney General (S. Doc. No. 371), the Chairman of the War Trade Board (S. Doc. No. 369), and the Chairman of the United States Shipping Board (S. Doc. No. 372), transmitting, in response to a resolution of December 23, 1918, a list showing the number of civilian employees in their respective departments of January 28 and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which, with the accompanying papers, were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

WASHINGTON GAS LIGHT CO. (H. DOC. NO. 1749).

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Missouri, ratifying the proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was ordered to be placed on the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 15018. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920; and

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Management of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. WILLIAM J. STONE, late a Senator from the State of Missouri.

The message also transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. CHARLES MARTIN, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

The message further transmitted to the Senate resolutions on the life, character, and public services of Hon. JACOB E. MEEKER, late a Representative from the State of Missouri.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 13004. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge and for the maintenance of a pontoon and pile bridge by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Co. across the Missouri River at or near Chamberlain, S. Dak., and providing additional requirements for the bridge to be constructed; and

H. R. 13143. An act extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missssippi River near and above the city of New Orleans, La., or for the construction of a tunnel or tunnels under said river in lieu of said bridge.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, petitioning Congress to pay at least six months' salary to every soldier, sailor, and marine upon his return to civil life, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, petitioning Congress to pass the woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a petition of sundry citizens of Port Huron, Mich., praying for the proposed extension of Federal control of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of the Father Mathew Total Abstinence Society, of Salem, Mass., praying for the freedom of Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the congregations of the Protestant churches of Melrose, Mass., and a petition of the congregation of the Trinitarian Congregational Church, of Northfield, Mass., praying for the establishment of a league of nations, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CALDER. I present a resolution adopted at a meeting of the New York Produce Exchange with reference to the cost of food. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At a special meeting of the board of managers of the New York Produce Exchange, held January 30, 1919, the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"Whereas it is evident that a readjustment from war conditions is inevitable, and is in fact now proceeding in industry and commerce; and

"Whereas we believe that a material reduction in cost of living is absolutely essential to the successful reorganization and adjustment of the country's economic and social life; and

"Whereas it is evident that a reduction in price of the great food staples is the first and most vital factor in bringing about lower living costs, which must take place to meet a probable reduction in wages in the manufacturing and industrial life of the country: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the policy of this exchange is against any further Government price fixing or control of foodstuffs beyond the point of a just and equitable adjustment of existing Government obligations, in which consideration should be given to the rights of all classes, both producers and consumers, and that the exchange hereby empowers its officers or other authorized representatives to assist in any necessary constructive work, legal or otherwise, to hasten the return of business to its normal channels."

Mr. MOSES. I present a resolution passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Manchester, N. H., in relation to the Government control of the telephone and telegraph systems, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution passed by the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, Manchester, N. H., January 31, 1919:

Whereas the remarkably difficult problems resulting from the war and the coming period of business readjustment render it exceedingly difficult, if not wholly impossible, for the owners of the great telephone and telegraph systems now under Federal control to successfully resume the operation of the same without remedial legislation and the provision of some reasonable period in which to allow for the necessary preparation and readjustment; and

Whereas to properly consider these problems in all their intricacies will require much more time than is available in the present short session of Congress, and unless some action is taken at this time the properties will be returned to the companies owning them upon the proclamation by the President of the ratification of peace treaties without any advance notice being given and without any period for proper and necessary readjustment, and since such a period of readjustment is of exceedingly vital importance to the business interests of the Nation: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That this organization go on record as favoring the enactment by Congress of some law which will continue the control and operation of such utilities by the Government until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon a proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Senators of this State and to the Representative in Congress of this district.

I certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the resolution as passed.

C. W. PATMAN,
Secretary Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE,
1919 SESSION.

Mr. Dilley offers the following resolution:

Whereas now that the military forces of this country and its allies are victorious retention of the Voluntary Army seems unnecessary and action should be taken to demobilize it without delay so that its soldiers and sailors may be returned to their peaceful vocations and that there be substituted a Regular Army so increased as to properly protect our interests abroad in accordance with the plans of the President and military board: And be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the house of representatives is hereby instructed to send to the President, Secretary of War, Secretary of the Navy, and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Minnesota a copy of this resolution.

W. I. NOLAN, Speaker.

Adopted January 27, 1918.
Attest:

OSCAR ARNESON, Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE,
1919 SESSION.

A concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to grant a gratuity of three months' pay to honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Whereas since the signing of the armistice the soldiers, sailors, and marines, who rendered such valiant service at home and abroad for their country in its hour of trial in the great war from which this country has emerged gloriously, are now being demobilized and discharged with greater rapidity than admits of their assimilation into the industries of civil life; and

Whereas all these valiant boys have been serving at rates of pay sufficient only for their needs from day to day, making no provision for the immediate future or for tiding them over the weeks and months of idleness which in most cases must follow the release of millions of men in a Nation whose industries are now stagnant and awaiting the readjustment from a war to a peace basis; and

Whereas unless relief is granted by appropriate legislation these boys, the pride of our country, the savior of our liberties, and the protectors of our homes and free institutions, must be called upon or allowed to suffer privations which would warrant them in reaching the conclusion that, after all, the statement is true that "Republics are ungrateful" and that protection for those valiant heroes was forthcoming so long only as their service on the firing line was needed to protect those at home in person and property: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urgently request and earnestly urge that the Congress of the United States provide at this time by suitable enactment into law that all heretofore and hereafter honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States in the great world war be granted and paid a gratuity equal to three months' pay after the date of their respective discharges at the same rate applicable to each such soldier, sailor, and marine at the date of his discharge, the same to be paid monthly through such channels as Congress may direct.

Resolved further, That this resolution, the senate concurring, be duly recorded in the records of this session, and that copies thereof be forthwith forwarded to each of the Senators in Congress from Minnesota and to each Member of the National House of Representatives from Minnesota, to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Secretaries of War and Navy of the United States.

W. I. NOLAN, Speaker.

Adopted January 29, 1919.
Attest:

OSCAR ARNESON, Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, MINNESOTA LEGISLATURE,
1919 SESSION.

Messrs. John Frisch and O. E. Hammer offer the following resolution:

Whereas a bill to increase the pensions of those who have lost limbs or have been totally disabled in the same in the military service of the United States, known as Senate bill 2130, introduced by Senator KNUTE NELSON, is now pending in our National Congress; and

Whereas we believe that the provisions of said bill will, if made a law, in a measure relieve the financial stress of those who have received permanent injuries in the wars in which this country has been engaged: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota hereby gives its indorsement to the provisions of said bill and urges all our Senators and Representatives in Congress to do all in their power to gain the enactment of the same into law.

W. I. NOLAN, Speaker.

Adopted January 27, 1919.
Attest:

OSCAR ARNESON, Chief Clerk.

Mr. NELSON. I present a telegram embodying a resolution adopted by the Legislature of Minnesota, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., February 1, 1919.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was passed by Minnesota House and Senate and signed by the governor and should have gone to the United States Senate January 23, but we have message saying that it is not yet received. May we ask you to have it read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at once? Resolution follows:

"To the United States Senate:

"Whereas nearly a half century ago the progressive spirit of American democracy decreed in the Federal Constitution that the rights of citizens of the United States to vote should not be denied by any State on account of race or color; and

"Whereas more than half of the citizens of voting age of more than two-thirds of the States of our Nation are denied the right to vote solely because they are women: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota (the Senate concurring), That we earnestly and urgently petition your honorable body to join with the House of Representatives in its action in proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing that the right of any woman to vote shall not be denied by any State solely because she is a woman.

"That a copy of this resolution with the names of those who vote for the same be forwarded to the President of the Senate and to each Senator and Representative from Minnesota."

Mrs. ANDREUS UELAND.

Mr. NELSON presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from Joseph Wilde, of Duluth, Minn., and a telegram in the nature of a petition from Charles Jones, of Duluth, Minn., praying that special clerks in the Postal Service be included in the salary increase, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Board of Trade of Duluth, Minn., praying for the return to private ownership of the telegraph and telephone systems of the country, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Council No. 397, Knights of Columbus, of St. Paul, Minn., favoring freedom for Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate joint memorial 4.

Whereas there is now pending before Congress a measure known as the educational bill, S. 4987, which is the most comprehensive and important educational bill that has ever been considered by that body; and

Whereas this bill has for its purpose the removal of illiteracy, the Americanization of immigrants, the promoting of physical and health education, the improving of facilities for the preparation of teachers, and the creation of a national department of education; and

Whereas Oregon's share of the Federal appropriation provided in this bill for the public schools amounts to $857,587.67 annually: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be memorialized and urged to use all honorable means to secure the enactment of the educational bill, S. 4987.

Adopted by the house January 28, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

Adopted by the senate January 21, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 5.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), respectfully represent this: That—

Whereas Congressman SINNOTT, of the third congressional district of the State of Oregon, has introduced a bill which is now pending in the Congress of the United States having for its purpose, among other things, the appropriating of $1,000,000,000 for reclamation and drainage of lands in the western portion of the United States; and

Whereas passage of the bill would insure Federal aid for the development of the Dechutes project, comprising an area of approximately 300,000 acres in the State of Oregon, and other projects within the State; and

Whereas any such construction and development would provide work and employment for thousands of returning soldiers and sailors: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Representative Assembly of the State of Oregon favor the passage by Congress of the said Sinnott bill, and to that end the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States from the State of Oregon are hereby urged to use their influence in behalf of the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state of the State of Oregon be directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the senate, January 22, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 20, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that house joint memorial No. 5 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 4.

Whereas the Umatilla River Irrigation League has presented plans to the United States Reclamation Service for the development of arid lands in the lower Umatilla River Basin; and

Whereas the Director of the Reclamation Service ordered a survey and investigation of said proposed irrigation project, which has been made and the plan for reclaiming said lands has been pronounced feasible, and the cost of reclamation, quality of soil, uniform topography, climatic conditions, facilities for transportation and marketing have been found highly desirable for the easy establishment of farms for soldiers; and

Whereas all that now delays construction on said project is want of Federal funds: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be memorialized to use their influence in Congress to secure the necessary appropriation; and be it further

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress urge upon Congress the immediate importance of passing the Sinnott bill calling for $1,000,000,000 for reconstruction work, which has been indorsed by Secretary of the Interior Franklin K. Lane, and that a copy of this memorial be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress and to the Director of the Reclamation Service and to the Secretary of the Interior.

Adopted by the senate January 23, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 21, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that the foregoing house joint memorial No. 4 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 6.

To the honorable Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of American in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas Crater Lake National Park, in southern Oregon, is becoming one of the great tourist attractions of the world, with a rapidly increasing list of visitors each succeeding season; and

Whereas the natural topography of the country adjacent to said park is of such nature that this park, to serve its purpose as a great natural scenic attraction and outdoor playground, should be extended to include additional territory, as provided in Senate bill No. 4283, now before Congress; and

Whereas the country so to be included within said park under the provisions of said bill is not of particular value as grazing land, timberland, or for any purposes other than the natural and proper rounding out of the said national park: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oregon (the Senate concurring), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon heartily favor the enactment by Congress of Senate bill No. 4283, and to that end the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Oregon are hereby urged to use their influence in behalf of the passage of said bill; and be it further

Resolved, That the chief clerk of the House of Representatives of the Oregon Legislative Assembly be, and hereby is, directed to transmit by mail a copy of this memorial to the President of tht Senate and the Speaker of the House of the Congress of the United States and to each of the Senators and the Representatives from the State of Oregon.

Adopted by the senate January 27, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 21, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that the foregoing house joint memorial No. 6 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Immigration and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

House joint memorial 8.

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States Senate bill 5001, introduced on October 21, 1918, by Hon. WILLIAM H. KING, which provides for the establishing in the Department of Labor of a bureau of citizenship and Americanization, for the Americanization of naturalized citizens, and for the amendment of the act of Congress approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," and which bill was referred to the Committee on Immigration; and

Whereas said Senate bill 5001 provides for the issuance of a distinctive certificate of United States citizenship to wives and children of naturalized citizens, which certificates are to be issued only after the candidates for such certificates have passed such preliminary examinations as will evidence their attachment to the principles of the Constitution of the United States and have appeared in open court and taken the oath of allegiance required by the naturalization law; and

Whereas the enactment and carrying out of the provisions of said Senate bill No. 5001 will result in arousing a higher regard and attachment to our institutions of Government, and in a stronger loyalty being shown to the United States on the part of all permanent resident foreigners, candidates for naturalization, and citizens, and will insure the maintenance of that high standard of admission to the privileges and responsibilities of American citizenship so essential to the perpetuation of our democratic form of government; and

Whereas the State of Oregon, having given to women the right to the franchise, it concerns the welfare of the State to provide intelligent exercise of that right and instruction in the rights and duties of citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved by the house, the senate concurring, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress, and the entire Congress of the United States, be, and are hereby, memorialized and requested to immediately take up and pass said Senate bill 5001.

Resolved further, That the chief clerk of the house is hereby directed to transmit certified copies of this memorial to the President of the United States Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oregon in Congress.

Adopted by the senate January 28, 1919.

W. T. VINTON,
President of the Senate.

Adopted by the house January 23, 1919.

SEYMOUR JONES,
Speaker of the House.

I hereby certify that house joint memorial 8 is a true copy as passed by the house and senate, as above indicated.

W. F. DRAGER,
Chief Clerk of the House.

Mr. PENROSE presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that the return to private ownership of telephone and telegraph lines be deferred until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon the proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LEWIS. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, asking that the woman-suffrage resolution before this body be immediately acted upon—that is, the constitutional amendment—which I ask to have appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Certificate No. 3226.

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Louis L. Emmerson, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true copy of senate joint resolution No. 7 of the Fifty-first General Assembly of the State of Illinois, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

In testimony whereof I hereto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Illinois. Done at the city of Springfield this 31st day of January, A. D. 1919.

LOUIS L. EMMERSON,
Secretary of State.

FIFTY-FIRST GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Senate joint resolution 7.

Whereas the proposed woman-suffrage amendment to the Federal Constitution has been for 40 years before the Congress of the United States and has during this session of Congress received a two-thirds vote in the House of Representatives but has been delayed in the United States Senate; and

Whereas the character and achievements of the women of the United States merit the same honorable suffrage recognition received by women in many other countries: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Illinois (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That we urge the United States Senate to immediately pass the Federal woman-suffrage amendment, so that it may be ratified by the legislatures of the 36 States, as provided by article 5 of the United States Constitution.

Adopted by the senate January 28, 1919.

JOHN G. OGLESBY,
President of Senate.
J. H. PADDOCK,
Secretary of Senate.

Concurred in by the house of representatives January 29, 1919.

Secretary of State.

FIFTY-FIRST GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

Senate joint resolution 6.

Whereas the most important problem of reconstruction is the individual readjustment in the lives of the men who willingly went forth to heroically serve our Nation and our allies in the time when free institutions and the rights of free men everywhere were threatened; and

Whereas no adequate provision is being made by the Federal Government for these returning soldiers, sailors, and marines who have made tremendous sacrifices for our country; and

Whereas there is a movement to secure national legislation guaranteeing to every soldier, sailor, and marine his pay for some sufficient period after his return to civil life, until he can obtain remunerative employment; and

Whereas other countries which have suffered more and which have expended far greater sums of money than has the United States of America, are making more ample and more just provisions for their soldiers: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Illinois (the House of Representatives concurring therein), That a memorial be sent to Congress requesting the Federal Government to pay at least six months' salary to every soldier, sailor, and marine upon his return to civil life; and be it

Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the United States Senate and to the House of Representatives and to the several Members of both bodies representing the State of Illinois, and to Hon. Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and to Hon. Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy.

Adopted by the senate January 28, 1919.

LOUIS L. EMMERSON,
Secretary of State.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New York, touching the pending water-power bill. It is short and I ask that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN SENATE,
Albany, January 27, 1919.

By Mr. Mackrell:

Whereas a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of the dams across navigable waters,' approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910," and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of the interstate and foreign commerce, passed the Senate December 14, 1917, and the House of Representatives September 5, 1918; and

Whereas Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS, Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, Hon. HENRY L. MYERS, Hon. KEY PITTMAN, Hon. KNUTE NELSON, and Hon. REED SMOOT, from the Senate, and Hon. THETUS W. SIMS, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Hon. ASBURY F. LEVER, Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, Hon. WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE, and Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, from the House of Representatives, have been appointed to confer and agree upon the terms of said bill; and

Whereas the water powers of the State are urgently needed for the promotion of industry:

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York earnestly request our Representatives in Congress and the conferees named to do all in their power to stimulate action on said bill to the end that it may be acted upon favorably: Providing, however, That the same does not in any way diminish or impair the rights of the State of New York in the ownership and control of such navigable waters.

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, our Representatives in Senate and in the House, as well as the conferees named above.

By order of the senate.

ERNEST A. FAY, Clerk.

IN ASSEMBLY, January 30, 1919.

Concurred in without amendment.

By order of the assembly.

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

Endorsed: Filed January 30, 1919.

FRANCIS M. HUGO,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Office of the Secretary of State, ss:

I have compared the preceding copy of resolution relative to regulating the construction of the dams across navigable waters and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the use of the interstate and foreign commerce with the original resolution on file in this office, and do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Given under my hand and the seal of office of the secretary of state, at the city of Albany, this 30th day of January, 1919.

[SEAL.]

C. W. TAFT,
Second Deputy Secretary of State.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to have printed in the RECORD a resolution from the president of the Wisconsin Woman Suffrage Association, reporting the action of the legislature upon a resolution regarding the enactment of the constitutional amendment now pending in the Senate. I have not yet received the resolution from the legislature, but I presume it will be forthcoming.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MILWAUKEE, WIS., February 1, 1919.

Senator ROBERT LA FOLLETTE,
The Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Resolution passed by Wisconsin Legislature January 16—senate, 24 for, 4 against; assembly, 75 for, 14 against:

"Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we indorse woman suffrage, following the platforms of the political parties of this State and favor that the Senate of the United States adopt the legislation now pending before it providing for submitting to the several States an amendment to the Federal Constitution establishing national woman suffrage. Be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution, properly signed and attested by the officers of this legislature, be forwarded to the United States Senate and a copy thereof to each United States Senator."

THEODORA W. YOUNANS,
President Wisconsin Woman Suffrage Association.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of the Rotary Club, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., praying for the change of the name of the Panama Canal to Roosevelt Canal, which was referred to the Committee on Interoceanic Canals.

He also presented a petition of the Chartiers Grange of Farmers, of Canonsburg, Pa., praying for an adequate construction of national highways, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of the Board of Trade of Philadelphia, of the Board of Trade of Monnesen, of the Chamber of Commerce of Lebanon, of the Rotary Club of Wilkes-Barre, of the Board of Trade of Lansdale, of the Rotary Club of Allentown, of the Kiwanis Club of Scranton, and of the Business Men's Association of Charleroi, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying that the return to private ownership of telegraph and telephone lines be deferred until Congress shall have studied the question and determined upon the proper and safe procedure to be thereafter followed, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 138, United Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees and Railway Shop Laborers, of York; of Local Lodge No. 632, International Association of Machinists, of Reading; of Local Lodge No. 922, Brotherhood of Railway Conductors of America, of Sunbury; and of sundry members of the American Federation of Railroad Workers of the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad Co., of Pottsville, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for Government ownership of railroads, which were referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Local Division No. 16, Ancient Order of Hibernians, of Scranton, Pa., favoring freedom for Ireland, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, petitioning Congress to pass the woman-suffrage amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Illinois, petitioning Congress to pay at least six months' salary to every soldier, sailor, and marine upon his return to civil life, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13273) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of a Bureau of War Risk Insurance in the Treasury Department," approved September 2, 1914, and an act in amendment thereto approved October 6, 1917, reported it without amendment.

CONSTRUCTION OF SHIPS.

Mr. JONES of Washington. From the Committee on Commerce I desire to present a report and I ask that it may be considered. It is the unanimous report of the committee, and it is a short bill. I think it is a matter which expresses the views of the Senate. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Commerce the bill (S. 5292) making it unnecessary to secure permits from the United States Shipping Board for the construction of ships in American shipyards for foreign account, and I submit a report (No. 680) thereon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand the chairman of the committee wishes to have the bill go to the calendar. I have no objection to it; I voted for it in committee and would like to have it passed, but in the absence of the chairman of the committee I ask that it may go to the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know that the chairman might desire to have it go to the calendar.

Mr. RANSDELL. It may be that he will withdraw his objection. I do not want to be considered as opposing it; I am in favor of it personally, I will state to the Senator; but I think the chairman wanted to have it go to the calendar.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Very well; I will just present the report and let the bill go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. RANSDELL. From the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 1597) to provide a division of tuberculosis in and an advisory council for the United States Public Health Service, and I submit a report (No. 681) thereon. I should like very much to have the bill taken up at once, if there be no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the bill go to the calendar in regular order.

Mr. RANSDELL. All right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

HOSPITALS FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, on the 28th of last month the bill (H. R. 13026) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to provide hospital and sanitarium facilities for discharged sick and disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines, after passing the House, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. On the 15th of December last a bill almost identical in terms was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine. On the 11th of December last a bill, H. R. 12917, after passing the House, was referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine. It related to the same subject as Senate bill 5202, just mentioned, and House bill 13026, just mentioned.

So there are two committees now which have the same matter before them. In addition thereto the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate, under a resolution passed some time ago, has for several weeks been investigating the question of hospital facilities. That measure is now being carefully investigated by the committee.

I will state, as chairman of the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, that I have discussed this rather troublesome problem with the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and with several members of my committee, and the consensus of opinion of them, in which I concur, is that these bills which are now before the Appropriations Committee and the Public Health Committee should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, so that after making a careful investigation they can determine whether or not additional hospital facilities are needed.

I ask that House bill 12917, referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, Senate bill 5202, referred to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine, and House bill 13026, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, be sent to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I will state that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations believes that this is a wise course, and I also believe so, after a thorough investigation.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator tell the Senate what committee in the House of Representatives had the bill?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been handling it over there, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of the Senate has been making rather an elaborate investigation. I have concluded that it is best to have them go ahead with it and determine whether or not these additional hospital facilities are needed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. KING. I was about to ask the Senator if these bills ought not to go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANSDELL. There is no military question involved. I will state that it is for soldiers and sailors who have been discharged from the military and naval service, and there is a question as to whether or not they can be taken care of in the military hospitals under proper provision or whether we must provide additional hospital facilities to take care of them after they are discharged from the Army or the Navy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know whether the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds ordinarily has jurisdiction over the hospitals and the sanitariums of the country?

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not state what is the ordinary rule. I would naturally assume that the Public Health Committee would have that jurisdiction, but I will say to the Senator that in the House of Representatives the jurisdiction was assumed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and these bills have gone through there without any objection. Careful investigations were made as to both these bills, and both passed the House on the initiative of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds of that body. Contemporaneous with that, I will say that a resolution was introduced into this body instructing our Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to make an investigation, which is absolutely essential, to determine whether or not additional hospitals are needed, and they are now making that investigation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is the reason why I am asking the Senator whether this committee has had jurisdiction over hospitals and sanitoriums in the past. I have the impression that that is not the case, that the hospitals have not been under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The action of the House is not necessarily a guide, because the jurisdiction of the committees of the Senate does not concur with the jurisdiction of the committees of the House.

Mr. RANSDELL. I can not answer the question of the Senator. I will state that one of these bills, the bill carrying an appropriation of $10,500,000 for additional hospitals, after passing the House on the 27th of last month, when it reached this body, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and not to the Committee on Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state what that appropriation was for?

Mr. RANSDELL. It was to construct hospitals for discharged soldiers and sailors and to place those hospitals in charge of the Public Health Service.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me rather strange that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds should have jurisdiction over a matter which ought to belong to the Committee on Military Affairs or to the committee having charge of Public Health and National Quarantine.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is hardly a matter that belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, I will say, because this is to take care of men who have been discharged from the Army or the Navy. As long as they remain in the Army or the Navy they are cared for by the military or naval hospitals. It is for the discharged men, I will say, that we are trying to provide. They come in under the war-risk insurance.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that we already have in this country, and have had for a great many years, hospitals in which discharged men are accepted as patients. Under whose jurisdiction are those hospitals?

Mr. RANSDELL. They are under the jurisdiction of the Public Health Service, but whether the law governing the buildings was provided by the Public Health Committee or provided by the Public Buildings Committee I can not say. I know as a general rule in the 20 years since I have been in Congress public buildings have been provided for by the Public Buildings Committees of the two Houses. This is simply a question whether we need additional buildings, and I rather think the bills ought to go to that committee.

I will say to the Senator that I try to stand up for my committee whenever I think I am right, and I would insist upon that course if I believed the bills belonged properly to the Public Health Committee, but after carefully investigating it rather seems to me, and several members of the committee concur with me in that view, as it is merely a question of buildings, that the bills should go to the Public Buildings Committee.

Mr. SWANSON. The present chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], is not present. However, I am still a member of that committee. I should like to state in this connection that the reason why I presume this matter was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was because of the fact that there are temporary buildings being constructed, and that committee, I understand, is making an investigation to see if the present buildings that have been constructed during the war period can not be utilized for this purpose. As that committee has jurisdiction over public buildings generally and the necessity for them, it seems to me a wise and sensible course to pursue to have an investigation, to see if the temporary buildings constructed during the war can not be used temporarily for hospital purposes, and not go to the great expense of constructing additional buildings.

I understand that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is now investigating the temporary buildings constructed both here and elsewhere to ascertain if those buildings can not be utilized for hospital purposes to take care of soldiers and sailors at present. It seems to me it would be a waste of money to proceed to the construction of new buildings before we ascertain whether these temporary buildings can be so used. For that purpose the question was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to ascertain the number of buildings already constructed and what use can be made of them, and to what extent they can be used for hospital purposes to take care of discharged soldiers and sailors. I understand that the committee is now making a thorough investigation, and when they have made that investigation and furnished the Senate with the information it can act intelligently with a view to the public interest.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if they find, as a result of their investigation, that these additional buildings for hospitals are needed, the whole question will then be before them; the three bills will be before them, so that they can act intelligently, and we may get the needed legislation at this session of Congress; whereas, if we stand upon the rights of the respective committees here, a great deal of delay may result and the soldiers and sailors may suffer. I think it will expedite legislation to have this done, and I hope it will be done.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice in reading the bill that it not only proposes to appropriate $10,500,000 for the building of new hospitals or sanitariums, but there is an authorization in the bill giving power to the Secretary of the Treasury "to contract with any existing hospital or sanatorium, by lease or otherwise, for the immediate use, in whole or in part, of their present facilities."

The bill goes on and states that they can transfer whatever equipment or material is in the present hospitals and sanatoriums to wherever they decide to erect this building.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that this is rather an unusual provision; and I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana if, after the discussion that took place in the House, he has formed any opinion as to what is back of this legislation; where the hospital is to be located and what is the program?

Mr. RANSDELL. To what bill does the Senator from Utah refer—to the bill proposing to appropriate $10,500,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I refer to that bill.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not know what is back of it, except that the hearings before the Public Health Committee indicated that there was a genuine need for additional hospitals; that a great many tuberculous patients had developed among the boys who had been sent to training camps; a great many of them, after being temporarily accepted, were discharged because of having tuberculosis, and there has been a very great increase of tuberculosis among the boys in the Army. The Public Health Service, having to take care of these men under the provisions of the war-risk insurance act, finds itself without sufficient hospitals, and they are asking that they be given additional hospitals so as to provide amply for these men. That is all I know about it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if I remember correctly—and I am only quoting from memory, for I have not looked the matter up lately—out of the first one million one hundred thousand and some odd soldiers who were either drafted or entered voluntarily into the Army, there were 145,000 affected by tuberculosis. Of course, they were not allowed to enter the Army. It is true that since the Army has been organized many cases of tuberculosis have developed during the service of the soldiers. I have not seen any of the figures stating how many or what the percentage is.

Mr. RANSDELL. About 22,000, I would say, were the figures given the Committee on Public Health. The men of the character of which the Senator speaks are entitled to be cared for under the provisions of their contract with the War Risk Insurance Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. I had thought about that. Mr. President, of course, I am not going into a discussion of this subject at this time, but I had been led to believe, from some statements of Members of the other House, who had made an investigation into this matter, that there is a program on foot to locate somewhere in the United States a great sanatorium, and to abolish the others which are now in existence. I am also informed that the space in existing hospitals and sanatoriums is a great deal more, and can take care of a greater number of soldiers and sailors than will the proposed new hospital, but that it is intended to abandon these hospitals and sanatoriums and to concentrate them in one place.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will state to the Senator that his information is incorrect in that respect. It is not intended to spend all of this money in one hospital; in fact, the Public Health Service is opposed to having very large hospitals. They say that such patients can be better treated in a number of smaller hospitals. They have, as I understand, now some 1,500 beds scattered around in several hospitals throughout the country. They propose in some instances to enlarge some of the hospital facilities that now exist, merely increasing the size and number of the beds, and to establish some new hospitals. They are obliged under the present law to take care of the men of the merchant marine, and they anticipate a very great increase in the merchant marine, so that perhaps, in the near future, they will have a good many more men of that kind to take care of.

Now, as to the hospital of which the Senator from Utah speaks, I will state that in one of these bills, when it was introduced in the other House, there was, I believe, a special provision to construct a hospital at Dawson Springs, Ky.; but that was in the bill carrying an appropriation for, as I recall it, about $1,500,000. That was entirely stricken out of the bill, and, as it passed the House, there is nothing of that kind in it. Probably the Public Health Service would construct a hospital at that place if it were found the best place for it. The larger bill, carrying $10,500,000, I will say, has absolutely no connection with the bill I have just mentioned, and that is the bill which the Public Health Service is so very solicitous about.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. VARDAMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield further; and if so, to whom?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will yield first to the Senator from Minnesota when the Senator from Utah has finished his question, and then I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SMOOT. I have finished.

Mr. NELSON. I want to ask this question: Is there not a pretty fair hospital arrangement at each of the cantonments we already have, and can not the hospitals in those cantonments be utilized to meet the necessities of the Government without incurring any great additional expense?

Mr. RANSDELL. That is the very question, I will state to the Senator from Minnesota, which is now being very carefully investigated by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; and it is for that purpose that I am so willing to have the jurisdiction of the matter referred to that committee, as it has the whole subject before it, and I believe is disposed to do absolutely what is right and proper in the premises.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I now yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana if he does not think it would be better, in fact if it is not necessary, to locate the hospitals where tubucular patients are to be treated at some particular place where the atmosphere and climate is peculiarly favorable to the treatment of tuberculosis? It was a theory long entertained by the physicians that the climate of New Mexico, Colorado, Texas, and other sections of greater altitude was better. I apprehend that a hospital situated in the low malarious regions would not be quite so well suited to the treatment of tubercular patients as at the places just mentioned.

Mr. RANSDELL. Responding to the question of the Senator from Mississippi, I will say that the best opinion in the medical world now is that tuberculosis can be treated about as well in one section of the country as it can be in another, and physicians do not any longer think that they are obliged to send such patients out to high altitudes in the far West, as they once used to do. I do not think that it is contemplated constructing these hospitals very far away from the centers of population.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Do they keep tubercular patients in the same hospital with those who have other diseases?

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that they try to segregate them as well as they can in the wards of the hospitals; but they do not contemplate the erection of hospitals particularly for the treatment of tuberculosis.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I think, Mr. President—though, of course, I am not a doctor——

Mr. RANSDELL. Nor am I.

Mr. VARDAMAN. But it seems to me that the treatment of tuberculosis is so different from the treatment of other diseases that it would be very much better if the tuberculosis hospital should be situated and constructed with a view especially to the treatment of that particular disease. I know that the modern treatment of tuberculosis is open air, nutritious diet, and moderate exercise. The open-air treatment is observed in influenza and many other diseases, but it is peculiarly so in tuberculosis; but it seems to me that the tubercular patients ought to be segregated and the hospitals designed and constructed with a view of so separating the patients from others, if possible, as to avoid the possibility of contagion.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator that it might be well to call attention to the obligations upon the Public Health Service? Under the law as it stands now the Public Health Service is obliged to treat the following cases:

(1) Merchant seamen.
(2) The Mississippi River Commission.
(3) The United States Coast Guard Service.
(4) The United States Lighthouse Service.
(5) The Engineer Corps of the United States Army.
(6) The United States Coast and Geodetic Survey.
(7) Civilian employees injured under the workman's compensation act.
(8) Civilian employees injured on Army transports.
(9) Cases of discharged soldiers and sailors under the war-risk insurance act of October 6, 1917.

That is quite an extensive service. The report of the House committee shows that to meet these requirements the Public Health Service has the following facilities:

Twenty-two hospitals and one sanatorium, with a total capacity of 1,556 beds. This total will be increased by 744 additional beds authorized by a provision in the urgent deficiency act approved March 28, 1918. But even when these additional beds are ready they will be inadequate to meet the needs of the Public Health Service, exclusive of the requirements of the War Risk Insurance Bureau. At the present time the Public Health Service is obliged to find accommodations for some of its charges at private hospitals.

I also quote the following from the House committee report to show the burdens and responsibilities the Public Health Service is called upon to meet:

With these inadequate facilities it is called upon to meet the following burdens and responsibilities:

War-risk insurance beneficiaries now actually under treatment	1,539
Soldiers, sailors, and marines discharged up to Nov. 1, 1918, because of tuberculosis who are entitled to treatment under the act of Oct. 6, 1917	23,000
Cases of epilepsy reported up to Dec. 1, 1918	5,220
Cases of psychoneurosis reported up to Nov. 1, 1918 (all of whom are practically recommended for discharge)	14,747
Total	42,967

Making a grand total of actual and potential beneficiaries of the War Risk Insurance Bureau of 42,967. When it is considered that this does not include the beneficiaries of the merchant marine, the United States Coast Guard Service, the Army Transport Service, and the civilian employees of the workman's compensation act, all of whom must also look for care and treatment to the Public Health Service, the need for these facilities provided by this bill must be apparent.

I think that probably it is not fully understood just what are the demands on the Public Health Service. The statement by the House committee in its report shows a need for increased facilities. The merchant marine hospitals, for instance, scattered along up and down the coast, need to be enlarged in some respects, for that service, as the Senator has suggested, has grown extensively. It would seem that unquestionably there is a great need for additional facilities for the Public Health Service.

Now, as to the Army hospitals, I think the War Department is supplied with ample hospital accommodations; but this is entirely outside of the Army. It is a matter that needs immediate attention because we can not fail to take proper care of these cases.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Florida for reading from that report. It is very interesting and indicates the gravity of the situation. There is no doubt that we have got to provide facilities in some way. Whether we will build new hospitals or utilize hospitals in the cantonments or utilize some public buildings is a matter which ought to be determined by the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. I hope it will determine the question speedily and report upon these bills, because we undoubtedly need this legislation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I happen to be a member of both committees, and I voted to report this bill because I believe that it is necessary that something be done immediately to take care of the wounded and the maimed soldiers who have become or will become public charges. The Army, through the cantonments and the rehabilitation hospitals, is taking care of the soldiers who are still in the Army; but when they are discharged from the Army, if they are maimed, if they are incapacitated, it is necessary, through the War Risk Insurance, that as civilians they be taken care of by another department. Therefore they become charges of the Public Health Service.

These men are not only tubercular patients, but they are the poor wrecks of humanity who have been sent over here maimed and incapacitated for life. Only on Saturday I heard from one of the hospital attendants, a Red Cross nurse in New York, of the case of a man who was landed in this country without his arms and legs, and they had to carry him to the hospital in a clothes basket. Turning to the woman who was helping carry that basket, he asked, "Are you from the South?" She replied, "Yes; how did you know?" He said, "By your voice; for I can not see." There is a ward in the Greenhut Hospital in New York that is closed to visitors because the men there are so maimed and wounded that they are kept from the sight of visitors. It is those men for whom we must provide.

Possibly there may be facilities in the cantonments, but the method of arriving at a proper settlement of that question is to ask the Surgeon General what hospital facilities he has that he can turn over to the Treasury Department. If the bill is referred to that committee I shall recommend that plan as a method whereby we can use the hospital facilities which we now have; but if we have no hospital facilities, if there is nothing available, we should appropriate all the money that is necessary to take care of these poor unfortunates, and there are many of them.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Louisiana, may I have the attention of the Senator from New Jersey? It may interest him for me to tell him of what was an interesting revelation to me. In company with a committee I went to the Surgeon General's office to make inquiry respecting hospital accommodations, and was pleased and equally surprised to hear him say that at Fort Myer there is such space of accommodations, to use his words, that they have many beds bidding for occupants, but for some reason or other there has not been enough demand for the use of those beds to occupy them to their capacity. If conditions be as the able Senator from New Jersey indicates they must be, it seems to me remarkable that the Surgeon General's Office here should be informed that there were not enough applicants needing hospital attention to fill the beds, which he informed me and also informed the committee are to-day vacant. Something is evidently irregular in the method of transferring information to the Surgeon General's office in connection with such matters as the Senator from New Jersey has brought to the attention of the Senate this morning.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, there may be a hospital at Fort Myer that at the present time has facilities for these wounded men, but it is a question of transportation, a question of the special attention that can be afforded. I know that at the present time the Greenhut Hospital in New York is almost overcrowded with these maimed, broken-down men.

The whole question resolves itself into a question of cooperation between these two departments—the Treasury Department and the Surgeon General's Office. Perhaps the Senator from Illinois can suggest some method whereby they can be coordinated. The Public Health Service and the Surgeon General's Office are working along parallel lines, yet they are separate departments with separate appropriations and separate organizations. The Surgeon General's department has been intrusted with the supervision of the sanitary conditions in the camps, but at the boundary line of the camp their jurisdiction stops, and the sanitary conditions in the zone outside of the camp come under the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department—a duplication which I have always considered was not only expensive but entirely unnecessary.

Mr. LEWIS. I can assure the Senator, if I may be pardoned for just a second, that the Surgeon General assured me, and assured the committee of which I was a member, that every effort is being made by the department for the very cooperation to which the Senator refers, and every attention possible that our Government can give is being given to remedy just such instances as the Senator has pointed out.

Mr. SWANSON and Mr. REED addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana will have to take charge of the floor.

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that the purpose of this reference is to let the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds ascertain from the authorities of the Soldiers' Home, of the Army and Navy hospitals, and of the public buildings that are now being constructed what buildings are immediately available for hospital purposes. This inquiry can be made more quickly and more effectively now than if it is delayed. It seems to me that the only committee for this bill to be referred to is to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which could report it back in a few days. I want to say that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], the chairman of that committee, is one of the most active and energetic Members of this body. The purpose of this reference is for that committee to investigate what buildings at present constructed and in course of construction can be availed of for that purpose, to make a report, and to have them turned over to the Public Health Service by legislation, so that the buildings can be utilized for this purpose. That is the only purpose of the reference. Buildings at present constructed that can be utilized for that purpose will give more speedy relief than the construction of new buildings.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one sentence?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I note that my colleague says that some legislation may be needed. In that connection I desire to say that the Appropriations Committee has inserted in the pending legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill a provision creating a commission to assign space in public buildings to all of the activities of the Government, so that when this matter goes to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds they can call in this commission, if the provision to which I refer is adopted—and it is so worthy that I can not see how it can fail—and this commission on public buildings and grounds can assign space. If there be any space in any public building that can be utilized for hospital purposes it need not call for legislation, but the commission on public buildings and grounds can assign to these hospital purposes such space as the Government has that is suitable for the purpose.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator from Virginia that I am not opposing the reference of this bill to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, because I believe it would be a good thing; but, if it is practical, I think that not only the Public Health Committee but also the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee should meet jointly and take up the question. Otherwise there will be apt to be conflicts.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, if the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds want the assistance of the Public Health Committee, we shall be very glad to meet with them. We have gone more or less into the merits of the general proposition, which I do not think we ought to discuss here. Everybody seems to agree that the reference should be made to the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee, and I hope that order will be made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is what was done a while ago.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5510) to provide for the construction of a public building at Duluth, Minn.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5511) for the relief of the estate of the late Capt. Belvedere Brooks; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. HOLLIS:

A bill (S. 5512) to amend the Federal farm-loan act, approved July 17, 1916; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WEEKS:

A bill (S. 5513) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Framingham, Mass., one German cannon or fieldpiece; and

A bill (S. 5514) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Waltham, Mass., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JONES of New Mexico:

A bill (S. 5515) providing for an additional judge for the district of New Mexico; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 5516) to amend an act approved March 4, 1913, entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the enlargement, extension, remodeling, or improvement of certain public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SIMMONS:

A bill (S. 5517) to amend the war-risk insurance act; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. GORE:

A bill (S. 5518) to provide that the United States shall cooperate with the States in promoting the health of the rural population of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

By Mr. POMERENE:

A bill (S. 5520) granting a pension to Mary A. Lake; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKELLAR (for Mr. SHIELDS):

A bill (S. 5521) granting a pension to Jane Roberts; and

A bill (S. 5522) granting an increase of pension to C. F. Boyer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES of Washington submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to enable the Secretary of the Interior to combat the influenza in Alaska and to afford relief to the indigent natives, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for beginning the construction of the Toppenish and Simcoe Creeks irrigation project, Yakima Indian Reservation, Wash., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ABROGATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, nearly two months ago—in fact, on December 5—the Senate adopted a resolution calling on the Secretary of State for information as to what countries had notified this country of the abrogation of treaties that they may have with the United States, and also countries with which the United States has treaties that would interfere with our passing certain legislation with reference to discriminating duties. It does not seem to me that it ought to take two months to gather the information called for by that resolution; but it has been two months since the Senate adopted the resolution and no response has been received. I submit a further resolution on the subject and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 436) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the information called for by the Senate resolution of December 5, 1918, or inform the Senate why it can not be furnished.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to inquire of the Senator whether that resolution should not be directed to the President instead of to the Secretary of State?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suppose the Secretary of State is the custodian of all these treaties.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Of course the Senator knows, however, that the Department of State is organized under a law that is entirely different from that under which any other department is organized. The President is the head of it, and I think it is for him to pass upon these matters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course the Secretary can report and state why he can not furnish this information.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 435), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas a United States merchant marine is of prime importance to this country, not only because of the commercial value in itself of the shipping industry, with shipbuilding and other dependent industries and pursuits, but also because of its influence on our foreign trade and the power of foreign shipping to discriminate against the same, if we are dependent on such shipping, and because of the immediate necessity for a merchant marine in time of national emergency, which it may not be possible to supply in time to avert grave disaster; and

Whereas the Government, as a war measure, has greatly enlarged the shipbuilding facilities and embarked on a shipbuilding program at enormous expense, and this expense should be discontinued and measures taken to make such salvage as is reasonably practicable, unless it is possible to establish a merchant marine on a sound basis which can ultimately absorb the same; and

Whereas, in the final analysis, our ability to maintain a merchant marine in foreign trade upon a sound basis depends on the difference in cost of operation in favor of foreign ships and whether such difference can be obviated or offset: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the difference in cost of operation of vessels of the United States in foreign trade as compared with those of the other principal maritime nations, as now prevailing and as likely to prevail in normal times, with the causes thereof, and to report the results to the Senate.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I desire to announce that, by authorization of the Committee on Woman Suffrage, on next Monday I shall move to take up for consideration the woman-suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I submit the conference report on the census bill, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I shall call the report up for consideration the first opportunity.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the Fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 24, 27, and 28.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 5, 9, 10, 11, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"That a census of the population, agriculture, manufactures, forestry and forest products, and mines and quarries of the United States shall be taken by the Director of the Census in the year 1920 and every 10 years thereafter. The census herein provided for shall include each State, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, and Porto Rico. A census of Guam and Samoa shall be taken in the same year by the respective governors of said islands and a census of the Panama Canal Zone by the Governor of the Canal Zone, in accordance with plans prescribed or approved by the Director of the Census."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following: "$5,000; the chief clerk and three chief statisticians for the divisions of population, manufactures, and agriculture, respectively, $4,000 each; three"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be stricken out insert the following: "for the divisions of vital statistics and statistics of cities, and the chief statistician provided for in section 3 of this act, $3,600 each"; also, on page 4, line 9, of the engrossed bill, strike out the word "and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "$3,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "subject to the approval of the United States Civil Service Commission, these"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 23, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following: "applicants claim to have"; also, on page 6, line 16, of the engrossed bill strike out the word "or" where it occurs the first time and insert the word "of"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 25, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate, insert the following:

"And provided further, That in the selection of the additional clerks and employees provided for by section 6 the Director of the Census is authorized to use, so far as practicable, the reemployment registers established by Executive order of November 29, 1918, so far as the same applies to permanent appointments by competition."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 26, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by the Senate insert the following:

"SEC. 8. That the Fourteenth Census shall be restricted to inquiries relating to population, to agriculture, to manufactures, to forestry and forest products, and to mines and quarries. The schedules relating to population shall include for each inhabitant the name, place of abode, relationship to head of family, color, sex, age, conjugal condition, place of birth, place of birth of parents, nationality or mother tongue of all persons born in foreign countries, nationality or mother tongue of parents of foreign birth, number of years in the United States, citizenship, occupation, whether or not employer or employee, whether or not engaged in agriculture, school attendance, literacy, tenure of home and the encumbrance thereon, and the name and address of each blind or deaf and dumb person.

"The schedules relating to agriculture shall include name, color, sex, and country of birth of occupant of each farm, tenure, acreage of farm, acreage of woodland, value of farm and improvements, and the encumbrance thereon, value of farm implements, number of live stock on farms, ranges, and elsewhere, and the acreage of crops and the quantities of crops and other farm products for the year ending December 31 next preceding the enumeration. Inquiries shall be made as to the quantity of land reclaimed by irrigation and drainage and the crops produced, also as to the location and character of irrigation and drainage enterprises and the capital invested in such enterprises.

"The schedules of inquiries relating to manufactures, to forestry and forest products, and to mines and quarries shall include the name and location of each establishment; character of organization, whether individual, corporate, or other form; character of business or kind of goods manufactured; amount of capital actually invested; number of proprietors, firm members, copartners and officers, and the amount of their salaries; number of employees and the amount of their wages; quantity and cost of materials used in manufactures; principal miscellaneous expenses; quantity and value of products; time in operation during the year; character and quantity of power used; and character and number of machines employed.

"The census of manufactures, of forestry and forest products, and of mines and quarries shall relate to the year ending December 31, next preceding the enumeration of population, and shall be confined to manufacturing establishments and mines and quarries which were in active operation during all or a portion of that year. The census of manufactures shall furthermore be confined to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, exclusive of the so-called neighborhood, household, and hand industries.

"Whenever he shall deem it expedient, the Director of the Census may charge the collection of these statistics upon special agents or upon detailed employees, to be employed without respect to locality.

"The number, form, and subdivision of inquiries provided for in section 8 shall be determined by the Director of the Census."

And the Senate agree to the same.

H. F. ASHURST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

W. C. HOUSTON,
J. B. ASWELL,
CHARLES A. NICHOLS,
Managers on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. R. 15018. An act making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

H. R. 15219. An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. Is there any further morning business? [A pause.] The morning business is closed. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I know it is subject to a point of order to interfere with the calendar; but the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill is on the calendar, and I think it will take a very short time to pass it. There are not many amendments. It is of great importance that it should be disposed of at an early hour; and I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the legislative bill.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he purposes to let it interfere with the Post Office bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; not unless the chairman will consent when it comes up. I think the legislative bill can be finished before 2 o'clock.

Mr. SWANSON. At 2 o'clock the Senator does not purpose to request that the consideration of the legislative bill be continued?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If we are within a few minutes of finishing it, I will ask the chairman's permission to complete it.

Mr. SWANSON. Oh, I shall not object to that; but the Senator will not interfere seriously with the Post Office appropriation bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I will not interfere seriously.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I had intended to object, as I have heretofore announced, to any interference with Calendar Monday, but on account of the very great importance of this particular bill, I shall make no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Alabama?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the Secretary may read the bill for amendments, the committee amendments to be first considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, out of deference to the wishes expressed by certain members of the Appropriations Committee, I have consented to having this matter taken up. I had intended to call up the Michigan election resolution this morning. I will not do that now, but it will be my purpose to call it up to-morrow morning at the close of morning business.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator's request contemplate that there shall be no reading of the bill at all?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the bill will be read, but the formal reading of the bill will be dispensed with, which is usually done with appropriation bills; and then the bill will be read for amendment. I ask, however, that the committee amendments be given prior consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary wil read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head "Legislative," subhead "Senate," on page 2, line 15, before the word "minute," to strike out "financial clerk"; in line 16, after "$3,600," strike out "executive clerk, and assistant financial clerk, at $2,750 each" and insert "financial clerk, $3,600; assistant financial clerk and printing clerk, at $3,000 each; executive clerk, $2,750"; in line 20, before the word "assistant," to insert "and"; in the same line, after the word "clerk," to strike out "and printing clerk"; and on page 3, line 4, after the words "in all," to strike out "$94,410" and insert "$95,760," so as to make the clause read:

Office of Secretary: Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500; assistant secretary, Henry M. Rose, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,250; minute and Journal clerk, principal clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $3,000 each; reading clerk, $3,600; financial clerk, $3,600; assistant financial clerk and printing clerk, at $3,000 each; executive clerk, $2,750; librarian, file clerk, chief bookkeeper, and assistant Journal clerk, at $2,500 each; first assistant librarian, and keeper of stationery, at $2,400 each; assistant librarian, $1,800; skilled laborer, $1,200; clerks—3 at $2,500 each, 4 at $2,220 each, 2 at $2,100 each, 1 $1,800, 2 at $1,600 each, 1 $1,440; assistant keeper of stationery, $2,000; assistant in stationery room, $1,200; messenger, $1,440; assistant messenger, $1,200; laborers—3 at $840 each, 3 at $720 each, 1 in stationery room, $720; in all $95,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 9, after the word "Committees," to strike out:

Additional accommodations for the Library of Congress—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Agriculture and Forestry—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, messenger $1,440; Appropriations—clerk $4,000, two assistant clerks at $2,500 each, two assistant clerks at $1,440 each, messenger $1,440, laborer $720; To Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Banking and Currency—clerk $3,000, assistant clerk $1,800, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Canadian Relations—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Census—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Civil Service and Retrenchment—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Claims—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,440; Coast and Insular Survey—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Coast Defenses—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Commerce—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,800, messenger $1,440; conference minority of the Senate—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,800, two messengers at $1,200 each; Conservation of National Resources—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Corporations Organized in the District of Columbia—clerk $2,200, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Cuban Relations—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,440, messenger $1,200; District of Columbia—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, messenger $1,440; Education and Labor—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,800, messenger $1,440; Engrossed Bills—clerk $2,220, assistant clerk $1,800,

And to insert——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having charge of this bill about some of these provisions as to clerks and assistant clerks.

All of the assistant clerks to the committees enumerated on pages 8 and 9 seem to draw a salary of $1,800, except in the case of four committees. These four are Indian Affairs, Manufactures, Privileges and Elections, and Public Buildings and Grounds. Those assistant clerks draw salaries of $1,500 a year.

I observe, for instance, the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The assistant clerk there draws a salary of $1,800 a year. I suppose that committee has not had a meeting for years. In the case of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which is a very busy committee, and will be busy during the next session, the assistant clerk draws a salary of $1,500 a year. In the case of the Indian Affairs Committee, which is always a busy committee, the assistant clerk draws $1,440 a year; and, as I have said, the assistant clerk of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico draws $1,800. Now, where is the fairness of that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I have not considered the matter of the discrepancy in the salary of the different clerks, to which the Senator has referred, and I do not care to go into that; but I should like to correct his remark in regard to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico itself. I am not the chairman of the committee, and I notice that the chairman is not here. I am a member of the committee, however; and I will say to the Senator that it has frequent meetings and considers a number of very important measures.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad to be advised of that, and I will withdraw my statement about it. I had understood that it had not had a meeting for some time. The Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Committee on Manufactures certainly have had as many meetings, if not more, than the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The assistant clerk of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals receives $1,800. I am simply calling attention to this for the purpose of emphasizing the fact that it is not fair that the assistant clerk doing the same amount of work for one committee as the assistant clerk of some other committee shall be paid a less salary. I do not think that can be justified.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I may say to the Senator that this amendment is what is known as the Jones amendment. It was offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] some years ago, and at various times has been considered by the Appropriations Committee.

I will state the purpose of the amendment, as I understand it. I am not the originator of it, but the purpose is, as far as possible, to equalize these salaries, except as to the big committees, like Appropriations, Finance, Naval Affairs, and Military Affairs, where it was necessary to have higher salaries and more men. But in accomplishing that result the proponent of the amendment did not make an effort to change any of the higher committees, but he attempted to put the clerks of all the smaller committees and the clerks of Senators who had no committees on the same basis.

I think if the Senator will examine the record he will find the cases he referred to carry, under the existing law, as it is written to-day, the same discrimination. As to why that discrimination should be there I do not know, because it was put in long years ago in the Senate before I came in contact with the situation.

Mr. KENYON. That is hardly an argument, however, in its favor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; the only argument for offering any change was that the committee are trying to work out a reform that would give the opportunity hereafter for the Rules Committee because we did not have jurisdiction. It was to give the Rules Committee an opportunity to dispense with a lot of committees that really do not function and at the same time to provide a sufficient clerical force for each Senator to do business. This amendment is intended in the main to relate to the minor committees and the clerks of Senators who have no committees. It was not the purpose to disturb the main committees in the bill, and with a few exceptions they have not been disturbed. The discrimination the Senator spoke of was not made by the proponents of the measure or by the committee; it was already in the law.

Mr. KENYON. I call the Senator's attention to the Philippines Committee. There the assistant clerk gets $1,800 and that committee has not had a meeting for two or three years at least unless to pass on certain nominations. Its work has not been equal to that of the Committee on Privileges and Elections and will not be.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KENYON. All these salaries ought either to be put at $1,800 or reduced to $1,500.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, I would not say that all through the bill they ought to be made that way, because some of the larger committees must have additional clerks.

Mr. KENYON. But as to committees of similar power and rank.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator the reason why the committee did not change it. It was not as he has said that there is any logic or reason for it, except we ran up against an existing condition and we did not change it. If the Senator wishes to make a change I have no desire to oppose it.

Mr. POMERENE. On line 18, page 9, I move to strike out the numeral "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800." That relates to the assistant clerk of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

If I may say just a word with regard to this matter, I know something of the work that committee has had to do in the past and something of the work it will have to do in the future. It is my experience, and I have no doubt it is the experience of other Senators, that these clerks in their offices work longer hours and work harder than do the clerks generally in the various departments, and I think it is no more than just that this salary should be increased.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Secretary to read the amendment before we consider amendments to it.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that in this amendatory list you utterly omitted, as far as I can see, the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On the face of it we have, but as a matter of fact we have not, because we have changed no committees or scrapped no committees, but we have provided that outside of the committees named in the bill in the case of every other committee that is now provided for by the rules of the Senate the clerk of the committee shall get $2,500, the assistant clerk $1,500, and the messenger $1,200. So that committee is provided for in general terms, although not named in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Minnesota will look at the top of page 10 he will find that there are 79 clerks, at $2,500 each; 79 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each; and 79 messengers, at $1,200 each, provided for. That covers all the committees not enumerated in the committee amendment, and an additional 10 committees. Those 10 committees are added to take care of the committees of Senators whose terms will expire on the 4th day of March and who will have to continue work until the reorganization of committees takes place in the next Congress. I think that 10 will cover that number and take care of it. In case all the committees not enumerated in the Senate committee amendment the clerks get $2,500, the assistant clerks $1,500, and the messengers $1,200.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill why the Census Committee was omitted from the enumeration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The clerk and assistant clerk of the Census Committee get, under the terms of the bill, more than they got under the old law.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand; but why was the omission made by the committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Because we mentioned only certain specific committees in the salary list that did not come within the general rule. The general rule provides that all clerks of committees not mentioned on this page shall get $2,500, the assistant clerks $1,500, and the messengers $1,200. At the present time the Census Committee clerk gets $2,220, and the assistant clerk $1,440, and the messenger $1,200. Under the terms of this bill the clerk will get $2,500, the assistant clerk $1,500, and the messenger, $1,200. So the Census Committee is better taken care of by this amendment than it was under the old law. It is simply not mentioned in specific terms; that is all.

The Secretary proceeded to read the amendment of the committee, and was interrupted by,

Mr. ASHURST. In reference to the committee amendment on line 23 for the Committee on Indian Affairs, the amendment provides that the clerk shall receive $2,500, the assistant clerk $1,440, and the messenger $1,440. Of course, my official duty as chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs will go into the basket on the 4th of March; I will be decapitated; and the clerk who has been employed under my suggestion will not benefit from this raise, but it is a most glaring inequality.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that that was an oversight on the part of the committee.

Mr. ASHURST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason why it was put in so was because the salary of the messenger of that committee was $1,440, instead of $1,200, as provided for the other committees, for if it had not been it would have fallen in the 79.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that there were three mistakes that we made in drawing the amendment, and when the Secretary gets through with reading it I shall offer them, and then this matter will come up.

Mr. ASHURST. I will wait then.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Really, I intended to offer the amendment the Senator suggested, making the salary of the assistant clerk $1,500, because it was a mistake. Then there was left out the assistant clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs. That was left out by inadvertance, and also a change that the House made in reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs was not called to the committee's attention.

Mr. SMOOT. Those were paid from the contingent fund of the Senate and not directly appropriated for by the House last year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The clerk informs me that they were appropriated for in the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I merely wish to emphasize the importance of the work of the assistant clerk. As I said, I will no longer be chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs after the 4th of March. Some other Senator now in the minority will be chairman. It is not fair to pay the assistant clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs $1,440 or $1,500 a year, because that committee has only three employees whereas the Committee on Public Lands has four employees. I do not wish to make any invidious distinction, but the Committee on Indian Affairs gets out an appropriation bill each year which carries eleven or twelve million dollars, and it has to do with $2,000,000,000 worth of property, embracing one hundred and fifty-odd reservations. I feet that a compensation of $1,800 for an assistant clerk of that committee is by no means too large.

The Committee on Education and Labor, presided over so well by the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], has an assistant clerk who gets $1,800, and I am sure that the work of the Committee on Indian Affairs is five times the volume of that before the Committee on Education and Labor. Yet I do not think that the assistant clerk of the Committee on Education and Labor is overpaid. In fact, he is a very competent and reliable man and earns $1,800 a year. I appeal to Senators now, though it can not affect the man whom I employed, to make the salary of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs $1,800 a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator, speaking for the committee, we will raise it to $1,500, where it belongs; but we can not do it until the Secretary concludes the reading of the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I am premature then, and I will sit down.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the words stricken out, the Committee on Appropriations report to insert, beginning at line 4, page 8:

Agriculture and Forestry—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Appropriations—clerk, $5,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $2,500 each; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; messenger, $1,440; laborer, $720. Banking and Currency—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Claims—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Commerce—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Conference Minority of the Senate—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; 2 messengers, at $1,200 each. District of Columbia—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Education and Labor—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Finance—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,600; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440; 2 experts (1 for the majority and 1 for the minority), at $2,000 each. Foreign Relations—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; messenger, $1,440. Immigration—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Indian Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,440. Interoceanic Canals—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,200. Interstate Commerce—clerk, $2,500; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; messenger, $1,440. Judiciary—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; messenger, $1,440. Manufactures—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,500; messenger, $1,440. Military Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Naval Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440. Pacific Islands and Porto Rico—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Pensions—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; 3 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; messenger, $1,440. Philippines—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Post Offices and Post Roads—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,440 each; messenger, $1,440. Printing—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440. Privileges and Elections—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,500; messenger, $1,440. Public Buildings and Grounds—clerk, $2,500, assistant clerk, $1,500; messenger, $1,440. Public Lands—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,440; messenger, $1,200. Rules—clerk, $2,720, to include full compensation for the preparation biennially of the Senate Manual, under the direction of the Committee on Rules; assistant clerk, $1,800; messenger, $1,440; in all, $194,940.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator in charge if he does not think it would be better, instead of saying 79 messengers, to say 79 assistant clerks? Scarcely a Senator uses a messenger; frequently it is a lady stenographer; and I really think that the title of assistant clerk is more appropriate than that of messenger.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator the committee did not wish to change the order of things where it did not affect the situation. I recognize the force of what the Senator says, but we have messengers, and we did not want to change it. If the Senator desires to offer the suggestion by way of an amendment, I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will do so because really they are not messengers; they are clerks. There is scarcely a Senator who uses one as a messenger, and I know the employees would rather be called clerks, because they are doing clerical work.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the Senator to allow me to offer several amendments first.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish first to ask unanimous consent that the Clerk be authorized to adjust all totals in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On page 8, line 24, I move that the salary of the assistant clerk to the Committee on Indian Affairs be made $1,500 instead of $1,440. I offer this amendment to the amendment to correct a mistake.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The committee overlooked another point. At present an assistant clerk during the period of the war, at $1,440, is provided for the Committee on Military Affairs. We were looking at the general legislation and not at the recent enactment and therefore we overlooked it. At the end of line 7, page 9, I move to insert "assistant clerk during the period of the war, $1,440."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We also, in the same way, overlooked two other amendments. The present law provides for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Naval Affairs, at $2,220, and an additional messenger, at $1,440. On page 9, line 9, I move to strike out "$1,800" and insert "$2,220," and after "$1,440," on line 9, I move to insert a semicolon and the words "messenger, at $1,440."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the end of the committee amendments to this amendment. If the Senator from Georgia desires to offer his amendment, he can do so now.

Mr. CURTIS. Do I understand that the Senator from Arizona is going to offer an amendment in line 24, page 8, to make the salary of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs $1,800?

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator in charge of the bill let me answer the question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. ASHURST. As I stated when the Senator from Kansas was out of the Chamber, the assistant clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs has been paid at the rate of $1,440 per annum, with the 10 per cent increase which all employees received for that period. It is my judgment, and I feel entirely unembarrassed in making this statement, because I will soon no longer be chairman, that if that clerk were paid $2,000 a year he would not be overpaid. In fact, $1,800 a year for that clerk is a modest salary and is not high.

I make no invidious comparison, but I wish to say that assistant clerks of other committees, which I do not think do the same amount of work, receive $1,800 a year, which is proper. Moreover, every other committee which handles an appropriation bill has an assistant clerk, who is paid $1,800. I think the record will bear me out in that statement.

I do not mean to exaggerate the importance of the committee over which I happen temporarily to be chairman, but I repeat, it handles an $11,000,000 appropriation bill every year; it has to do with $2,000,000,000 worth of property under its jurisdiction on Indian reservations; it has 153 Indian reservations, scattered in 27 or 28 States, and its volume of work is enormous, as Senators who are members of the committee will testify.

I respectfully submit that the assistant clerk of the committee ought to get $1,800 a year. I do not know who is going to get it, and I do not care, but whoever does get it, in my judgment, will earn it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I think, now that we have adopted $1,500 as the salary in these cases, he will find that the salary of the assistant clerk of that committee is on a basis with the salary fixed at $1,500 in the bill as to a good many other committees of like importance.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator from Alabama kindly tell me what other committee of "like importance" reports an appropriation bill providing for an expenditure of ten, eleven, or twelve million dollars; which has to deal with trust funds and with trust property which amount to two thousand million dollars; which has to do with questions of policy, and with very large questions of policy? I should like to know of another committee which has that much work and that much important work to do whose second man, whose assistant clerk, is only paid $1,500 per annum.

Let me repeat, here is the Committee on Public Lands, which is a very important committee, but which does not do any more work, and, in my judgment, does not do as much work, as does the Committee on Indian Affairs, and yet it has four—and it should have four—clerks, and the second clerk receives $1,800 a year. As to the Committee on Education and Labor, which is so well presided over by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], their assistant clerk——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Arizona will allow me to interrupt him, I desire to say that on a reexamination of the bill—the amendment was prepared by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], and we were not attempting to equalize the salaries of any of these main clerks—I think the Senator is correct in stating that there is no committee having an appropriation bill in charge where its second clerk gets less than $1,800 a year.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the second clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds gets $1,500 a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But among the bills reported by that committee there is no appropriation bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Quite often that committee does report appropriations.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; it is merely an authorization for appropriations.

Mr. ASHURST. I will venture the assertion that that committee does not meet once in three months; I will venture the assertion that it does not meet once in six months; and yet its second clerk gets $1,800 a year, and he should get it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say that I am not authorized by the committee to accept this amendment, and therefore I can not do it; but I am willing for the Senate to vote on it; and I am willing to admit that, outside of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which does not report general appropriation bills, the second clerks on committees reporting general appropriation bills do receive salaries not less than $1,800. So with that statement I will let the Senate decide the question.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, if in order at this time I will move an amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator can do that he will have to move that the vote whereby the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. ASHURST. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Now, if in order, I move, on line 24, page 8, after the words "assistant clerk," to strike out the numerals "$1,440" and to insert "$1,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 8, line 24, after the words "assistant clerk," it is proposed to strike out "$1,440" and to insert "$1,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has been stated that I prepared this amendment. It is true that it is known as my amendment, and yet in preparing the amendment I did not endeavor to correct all of the inequalities with reference to the clerks of committees. I tried that a few years ago and found that I could not get very far. So in the preparation of this amendment I tried to correct the inequalities in so far as I thought there was a chance to do it. I did not endeavor to correct any inequalities in the matter of the compensation of the clerks where, according to law, we have been carrying appropriations for them more than would be given by the amendment which I finally proposed.

There was a mistake, in my judgment, with reference to the assistant clerk of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I intended to make that salary $1,500, as I had done as to the others, but it has been carried all along in the laws heretofore at $1,440.

I think the Senator from Arizona is right with reference to the duties and responsibilities of the employees of the Indian Affairs Committee. While I am not a member of that committee, I have had a good deal to do with it and have been brought in contact with the work of that committee. I know that it is one of the hardest worked committees of the Senate, and I know its employees are worked all the time. So I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arizona is very fair and will correct one of the inequalities which I did not try to correct, except to place the assistant clerk on the same basis as the other assistant clerks by my amendment.

There may be other inequalities existing with reference to the clerks named in this amendment, but they are inequalities not created by my action at all, but created by the action of the Congress in heretofore providing larger compensation for the assistant clerk of one committee than for the assistant clerk of another of probably equal responsibility and equal duties.

I felt that I really ought to say this in justice to myself. As I have stated, I have not tried by my amendment now to correct all of these inequalities, as I tried that once and did not get anywhere. I found out that by trying to correct inequalities of a class I would get somewhere. I am also glad to see that the probabilities are that I will get further than I really expected to get, and that we shall on the floor of the Senate correct some more of these very glaring inequalities. I really think the amendment of the Senator from Arizona ought to be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Arizona to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I now renew my former motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 9, line 18, after the words "assistant clerk," it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$1,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. It seems to me that other inequalities in this bill ought to be corrected. Therefore, on page 9, line 7, after the words "assistant clerk," I move to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$1,800."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 10, to insert:

Clerical and other assistance to Senators: For clerical and other assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of the committees specifically provided for herein: Seventy-nine clerks at $2,500 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each; 79 messengers at $1,200 each; in all, $410,800: Provided, That such clerks, assistant clerks, and messengers shall be ex officio clerks, assistant clerks, and messengers of any committee of which their Senator is chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire, in line 5, to move that the word "messengers" be stricken out. I take it for granted that I will not be the chairman of a committee in a short time, and I know I will not need a messenger, but I will need a stenographer. I need a clerk, an assistant clerk, and a stenographer. If I offer the place to some capable young man or lady, I know the designation "stenographer" would be more agreeable than that of "messenger." It tells at least what the employee does. We have messengers in the Senate; we have our messengers at the post office; we can call messengers from the Sergeant at Arms office to do our messenger work. The force provided for in this part of the bill is really to do our office work, and there should be provided a stenographer, not a messenger. I therefore move, in line 5, to strike out the word "messengers" and insert the word "stenographers."

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator not to insist upon the word "stenographers," but that he change it to "assistant clerks."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would rather have it "assistant clerks."

Mr. SMOOT. That is the proper designation, because I know, as it developed in a discussion that we had when this matter was previously before the Senate, that there are only a few committees where the messenger is not a stenographer. We can simply strike out the word "messengers" and insert "assistant clerks."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I prefer the designation "assistant clerk," because that assistant clerk can be a stenographer and can do other work if necessary, such as that of a filing clerk. In my office I have employed, outside of the help allowed me, an assistant clerk who does filing and work of a similar character. I think the designation "assistant clerk" is a great deal better. The Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] suggested that I make it "stenographers" instead of "messengers," but "assistant clerks" covers it, and I really think it a better designation. I therefore move that the word "messengers" be stricken out and the words "assistant clerks" be inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 5, it is proposed to strike out the word "messengers" and insert in lieu thereof the words "assistant clerks."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I hope that that change will be made. We have gone on now for years with this old designation of "messenger." I do not know why it was preferred, but perhaps it was thought to be less unpopular than the other designation. However, we might as well describe these employees correctly. I think they ought to be described correctly all through these provisions of the bill. We have made provision for messengers on many committees, where they ought to be assistant clerks. That is what they are; none of them are messengers, and they ought to be described properly throughout. I do not know how they are designated in other provisions, but I think they are described wrongfully everywhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In line 7, on page 10, the word "messengers" should be stricken out and the words "assistant clerks" inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, at the beginning of line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "messengers" and insert the words "assistant clerks."

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to direct the Senator's attention to the fact that unless we say "second assistant clerks" we are going to have the appropriation of very doubtful and confused meaning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think it is necessary to insert the word "second." We very frequently in appropriation bills provide for more than one assistant clerk.

Mr. KIRBY. Unless the amendment is changed, it would read "assistant clerks, and assistant clerks."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are both assistant clerks, but at different salaries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; one would have one salary and another a different salary.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will read the bill, he will find three or four places where the words are used in the same way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, at the beginning of line 7, it is proposed to strike out the word "messengers," so as to read:

Provided, That such clerks and assistant clerks shall be ex officio clerks and assistant clerks of any committee of which their Senator is chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, before the amendment is agreed to I wish to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington object to the amendment?

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; but I want to say a word before it is adopted.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Washington is merely struggling to obtain recognition; that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I merely wish to discuss the amendment for a moment. I have no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment to the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered in order that the Senator from Washington may have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, as I have said, I have no objection to the amendment to the amendment. I think it ought to be adopted. I would have put some provision of that kind in my suggested amendment, but I was afraid I might run counter to one of the hoary customs of the Senate or of Congress and have more difficulty than would otherwise be experienced. I think in the first amendment on this subject that I proposed a few years ago I eliminated messengers. As the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said, the messengers provided for the committees—most of them, at any rate—as a matter of fact are not messengers at all; they are not used as messengers, but they are used as clerks and stenographers; and the same thing is true with reference to the clerical force of Senators who are not chairmen of committees. So that I welcome the change made. The designation "assistant clerk" is entirely satisfactory to me. It corrects another one of the inequalities that I was afraid we might not be able to have corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. STERLING addressed the Chair.

Mr. POMERENE. I was trying to offer another amendment; but if the Senator from South Dakota desires to discuss the pending matter, I will yield to him.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to know how the provision will read, beginning in line 9. It will read, as I understand, "such clerks, assistant clerks, and assistant clerks."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the committee as proposed to be amended.

The SECRETARY. As proposed to be amended, the paragraph will read:

Clerical and other assistance to Senators: For clerical and other assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of the committees specifically provided for herein: 79 clerks at $2,500 each, 79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each, 79 assistant clerks at $1,200 each; in all, $410,800: Provided, That such clerks and assistant clerks shall be ex officio clerks and assistant clerks of any committee of which their Senator is chairman.

Mr. STERLING. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio allow me?

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator is going to address himself to the pending amendment I yield to him. I was going to offer another amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to move to strike out the figures "$1,200," in line 5, and insert in lieu thereof "$1,440."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas to the committee amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. I was going to offer the same kind of an amendment, except I was going to make the amount $1,500.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Then I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. LODGE. At what point does the amendment come in?

Mr. POMERENE. I offer my amendment to come in on page 10, line 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 5, it is proposed to strike out "$1,200" and to insert "$1,500," so that it will read:

Seventy-nine assistant clerks at $1,500 each; 79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think I know something of the work which these employees have to perform. I know that in the case of a Senator from a State such as my own it is utterly impossible to do the necessary work with the limited help that is given here, and any man or woman who is capable of being a stenographer in a Senator's office earns $1,500. I do not think there should be any distinction at all as between the salaries of assistant clerks and stenographers, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if the amendment is going to be adopted, of course the other portion of the amendment should be changed. Instead of "79" it ought to read "158 assistant clerks at $1,500 each" and the remainder of the clause stricken from the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. LODGE. That will put it in proper form.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that I doubt the wisdom of giving both classes of assistant clerks exactly the same salary. There has always been a difference. So far as I am concerned, I will say to the Senator that the assistant clerk I have always used has been a man whom I employ for work in the departments. My messenger has always been a stenographer, and generally a lady stenographer, who never has to go outside of the room. When conditions require I use her for a filing clerk as well. There is quite a difference between the two employees, but under this provision they would receive the same salary, and there would be a great deal of dissatisfaction. I believe if we are going to make this change and make the salary of the second assistant clerk $1,500 then the first assistant clerk ought to receive more than $1,500, because there is an additional responsibility upon him, and he would be called upon to do more work than the other would have to do.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I recognize that there is some force in what the Senator says, but each Senator has it in his power to so classify the work of his office as to equalize the duties being performed according to the salary received. Now, I know a little about the Senator's office and the amount of work he does, and I dare say that with the $1,500 salary every clerk he has in his office will earn every dollar he or she gets. That is the way I feel about it in my office. Whether I am chairman of a committee or not is neither here nor there. I want to see these clerks reasonably well paid, and I think Senators ought to blush with shame because of the fact that they have been underpaid during the last several years.

Mr. SMOOT. All that I wanted to impress upon the Senator was that if we are going to have a $1,500 clerk instead of a $1,200 messenger, then by all means let us change the salary of $1,500 for the first one to $1,600 and have at least that much difference.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator means, make the salary of the first one $1,600?

Mr. SMOOT. The first $1,600 and the second $1,500.

Mr. POMERENE. I will accept that amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. That is what ought to be done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think that is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On lines 4 and 5 of page 10 it is proposed to change the numerals so that it will read: "79 assistant clerks at $1,600 each," striking out "$1,500" and inserting "$1,600"; "79 assistant clerks at $1,500 each," striking out "$1,200" and inserting "$1,500."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That carried both amendments—$1,600 and $1,500—did it not?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, before we leave this matter I think we ought to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the action on the former amendment, for that will have to be changed from beginning to end, not only as to the question of messengers but in many respects as to the clerks and the assistant clerks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention to the fact, too, that the gross amount there should be changed.

Mr. SMOOT. That has already been done by a motion of the chairman. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that the vote whereby the Senate agreed to the amendment to which I have just referred may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before we open that matter I should like to have the Senator present his amendment. I think we can agree by unanimous consent to what he wants without opening the whole thing again. I ask the Senator to let us go ahead with the bill, with the understanding that we will come back and take up this matter before we close. Then if he will make his suggestion I understand what he is after.

Mr. SMOOT. With that understanding, Mr. President, I will not press the matter at this time.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I move to increase the salary of the assistant clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from $1,500 to $1,800, the same as the other assistant clerks of committees.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That provision has been disposed of for the present, but as it requires some other amendments that are not ready I ask that the section may go over until we finish the bill, and we will take it up then.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be done.

Mr. FERNALD. I should like to have the action on the amendment reconsidered, because I shall be out of the city at the time, and I am afraid it will get by.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On account of the amendment to the salaries of assistant clerks the whole section will have to be changed, and when we reach it, which will be in a few hours anyway, we will make the changes to conform all along the line.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so that all of the Senators may understand the situation, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] in particular, I will state that the amendment on pages 8 and 9 has been agreed to, but it is understood that later in the consideration of the bill we will revert to it and make the changes that are absolutely necessary on account of the amendments that have already been adopted on page 10.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is, so as to make the changes necessary to make it conform to what we have already done; not opening it up generally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 12, after line 4, to strike out:

For assistance to Senators who are not chairmen of committees, as follows: Thirty clerks, at $2,000 each; 30 assistant clerks, at $1,200 each; 30 messengers, at $1,200 each; in all, $132,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 8, after the word "labor," to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$100,000," so as to make the clause read:

For miscellaneous items, exclusive of labor, $100,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator what are the miscellaneous items for which the $100,000 is sought?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that that increase is largely due to the number of funerals we have had in the Senate in the past year, and employees taken care of in the same way. There are other things involved, however.

Mr. KING. While I am on my feet, I should like to ask the Senator what provision has been made in lieu of the matter found in lines 5, 6, 7, and 8, page 12, which the committee has stricken out?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is taken care of in the other amendments back on pages 8, 9, and 10.

Mr. KING. I was out of the Chamber for the moment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On page 10 that proposition is taken care of; so that we struck out the usual provision with reference to assistant clerks to Senators, and put it back here with the general committee clerks. That is taken care of on page 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 12, on page 21.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside, and thus an opportunity will be given to continue the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill. I am compelled to attend a conference on the water-power bill at 2 o'clock, and therefore I ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there any objection?

Mr. LODGE. That is for the purpose of continuing the legislative appropriation bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that the legislative appropriation bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is before the Senate.

PEACE POLICIES.

Mr. HALE. I recall, Mr. President, that at the beginning of the war a great wave of patriotism swept over this country. Much as we dreaded war, it was felt by many of us that this patriotic spirit would do great things for our country; that made up, as we are, of a citizenship drawn from most of the other countries of the world, this spirit of patriotism brought on by the war would weld these peoples together and make good Americans of them all. To my mind this was one of the priceless advantages which I expected to see come to this country from our going into the war. Is this all to be lost?

Horace tells us.

Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori.
(It is sweet and glorious to die for one's country.)

What an odd sound that has in these days. Fifty-odd thousand American men have lost their lives in the great war—have lost their lives, we are now told, for humanity, for civilization, for the cause of the smaller nations, for world democracy—and not one, we are told, for his country. Patriotism as a virtue is relegated to the scrap heap. This, if I am not mistaken, is the message the President carries to an admiring world. The American soldier fought for no selfish purpose, for no national cause, but for abstract ideals of justice and of right for the world. For these ideals he fought, and for these ideals he died. The war is won, and the ideals for which we fought are to be realized. We alone of the nations fought for something greater and finer than for our country, and it is ours to dictate the peace terms to the world and the basis on which the world shall be run after the treaty of peace shall have been signed. True, as was shown in the debate recently, our losses in the war were less than one-twentieth of the losses of France or of Great Britain, but our aims were so much higher than the aims of the other nations that to us must it be given to be the arbitrators of the destiny of the world. And fearlessly and confidently and, I believe, in all sincerity the President goes about the mighty task.

And as in the war we fought for no selfish purpose, to avenge no wrongs done to us, to insure no special benefit to ourselves, so in the peace which is to follow the war we must have no selfish aim, must exact no special indemnity, must sacrifice any particular advantages that we as a Nation may have for the benefit of humanity in general. We have put our hands to the plow. There must be no turning back.

And yet, Mr. President, I recall that some of us in this Chamber voted to declare that a state of war existed with the Imperial German Government under the impression that the safety of this country was directly menaced by the German Empire. We believed that a victorious Germany, or even an unwhipped Germany, meant a future conflict for us, or, if not an actual conflict, at least it meant the turning of our country into an armed camp, to protect ourselves against the German menace. For no higher reason than this, I say, some of us voted for war. It seemed to us, if war with Germany was bound to come, that we were choosing a particularly opportune time to enter, when we had most of the civilized world fighting on our side, when Germany was to a considerable extent exhausted after more than two and a half years of bitter fighting with the allies. And the allies really had fought hard and well before we came into the war, even though they were fighting for no higher purpose than to preserve their own existence as nations. Later on, when we had to raise immense sums of money by taxation and by loan, some of us still clung to the same old beliefs about the purposes of the war. When we voted for the draft we felt that we were justified in forcing the young men of the country into the service because of the dire need of our country. We felt that we had the right to call on these men to sacrifice their lives for the United States of America, and for the United States of America alone. I know that I personally should not have felt justified in voting to draft these men into the Army to fight for humanity in general or for world democracy, or for any other purpose than the saving of our own country.

Mr. President, there is another class of men in this country who look at this war as some of us in the Senate have looked at it. I refer to the men in the Army and the Navy of the United States. I have talked with many officers and enlisted men who have served in this country and overseas, wounded men, men who have been crippled in their country's cause. I have yet to find one single man who claims that he was in the war to fight for any other cause than the cause of his country and to defeat the Hun. I have found no crusader spirit amongst any of the men with whom I have talked. On the contrary, I have found a strenuous objection on the part of these men to being considered crusaders. They are not the talkers. They are the men who have done the job, the men who have made possible the defeat of the central powers. All of the glory that comes to us through this war comes through their work, and their work alone. They knew for what they were fighting. They fought and they are entitled to be heard.

The issue comes squarely down to the question whether or not the people of this country went into this war and carried it through for the purposes proclaimed by the President. If the President is right, then let us make a peace that is in conformity with such humanitarian purposes, and in the future let us govern our actions toward the rest of the world in the spirit of sacrifice that these high and extremely unselfish purposes demand; but let us count the cost when we are doing so. We may have to surrender our sovereignty as a Nation; we may have to maintain armies in all parts of the world; we may have to finance and set upon their feet and sustain the less fortunate nations of the world. What does it matter? It is all in the program, and if that is what we fought for, we should be making but a poor showing as a Nation if we balked at any of these things. But is it what we fought for? On the other hand, if we fought primarily for this country and only incidentally for the rest of the world, now that we have practically accomplished our task in crushing the German menace, are we not justified in extricating ourselves in so far as it may be possible and as soon as it may be possible from the present international mix-up with the greatest possible advantage to ourselves as a Nation that is compatible with dignity and justice and a proper regard for the rights of others?

Mr. President, I do not wish to decry the work of the President of the United States. I have already given him credit for sincerity in his motives, but I believe that his ideals are not the ideals of the vast majority of the people of the United States. These ideals, it is fair to state, were expressed to the country during the progress of the war, and because they were not publicly turned down by the American people or by their Representatives in Congress the President considers that the American people are pledged to their fulfillment. Mr. President, the American people never understood the meaning or consequence of the ideals and policies of President Wilson. They were given out at a time when as Commander in Chief of the Armies of the country it was held universally to be an unpardonable sin to criticize the President of the United States. The wonderful catchwords and phrases of the President caught the ear of the people, but did not catch their understanding. That they were binding themselves to an irrevocable policy as a Nation, I venture to say, never occurred to any but the President's closest advisers. That the American people are bound by any of these statements of ideals or policy is to me inconceivable. They certainly never were bound by the vastly different declarations of the President during the weary months before we went into the war. But enough has been said about that already and far better said that I can say it. I speak of the period of the war and the period now following the war. The men now in the saddle and doing the talking in this country are not the fighting men. Fighting men are not given to much talk. It is very significant that in France, where the Army is near the seat of government, there is little theoretical talk and little time wasted over the development of impracticable ideals.

Men who have seen the realities of war get to be very practical. Nor are the men from whom we are hearing so much in this country the men who carried the country along during the war. The theorists, the idealists—the people especially who never would have had us go into the war—are now in the front line of trenches and loudly and vociferously are they contending for the millennium. But underneath all this the great still mass of the American people are awaiting their time. They are a patriotic people. They never would have consented to go to war had they not believed their country to be in danger. Once in the war, nothing could stop them from keeping on until the war was won, and by their steadfast insistence on winning the war they forced the officials of this Government, you and me and all other officials, to speed up and speed up until the work was done. This great onrushing tide was not led by us. We were carried along ahead of it. And now that the job is done and the war is won, I believe that the American people want peace, and they want it without further delay. They want their boys back in this country and they want to get back to the work that they were doing before the war. They want and they expect their representatives at the peace conference to close matters up just as quickly as can be done, and they insist that these representatives shall look after the material interests of the United States just as the material interests of the rest of the allies are being looked after by their representatives. They feel that we have fought a good fight, and they are intensely proud of the men who have done the fighting; that we should take no unfair advantage of any other nation, and that neither should we sacrifice any advantage that fairly belongs to us. Least of all do they want to give up any more than is absolutely necessary of the great natural advantages that our geographical position gives us in relation to the rest of the world. That the result of the war is a benefit to civilization they are glad and to take reasonable steps to make future wars improbable they are willing, but to have the responsibility and burden of carrying out these steps placed on their shoulders they will never stand, nor will they stand for any plan that in any way affects their sovereignty as a nation or commits them to any policy of internationalism. When all is said and done, Mr. President, the American people are for America first, and they have no desire nor intention to wander very far from the faith and teachings of their fathers.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, the deductions the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] has made with reference to the utterances preliminary to the peace conference now taking place at Versailles have led him into a vein of pessimism regarding the future of this country and the attitude which the United States would be compelled to take toward great international problems which I think is unwarranted in view of the parallels which may be found in the record of the last great peace conference which decided the fate of the world, the boundaries of contesting nationalities, and the rights of striving peoples.

I think, Mr. President, that the parallel between the preliminaries which preceded the congress at Vienna and those which preceded the congress now sitting at Versailles run both close and far. Following the downfall of Napoleon, the coalition which had brought about that happy event were loud in their declaration that they had not made war upon the French people, that they had warred only upon Napoleon and his system, just as we have been hearing that we have had no controversy and no quarrel with the German people, but that our fight was with the Hohenzollern and with autocracy.

Indeed, Mr. President, one who follows diplomatic history and who has noted the lofty declarations which were uttered during the latter period of the controversy with Napoleon will be struck by the similarity of language which is to be found between the declarations, let us say, of Alexander I of Russia, who was the proponent then of a league of nations, and the declarations of some of the proponents of a league of nations now.

For example, we find Alexander described by his closest companion, Czartoryski, who, as near as I can make out, was the Col. House of that era, as one of the group who had brought over into the nineteenth century the illusions of the eighteenth, who felt that in their own particular formula they possessed the remedy for all the ills from which mankind may suffer, that their particular panacea was a touchstone to cure all the ills of humanity, and that—to use the striking phrase of Czartoryski—a few sacramental phrases were all that were necessary to solve any problem growing out of the relations of peoples. We find that very closely paralleled here.

We find the description of Alexander paralleled further when Czartoryski said, as I recall, that the Czar was willing that everyone should be free, provided that everyone should do as he wished.

So they went to the council at Vienna in the same spirit of declaration which the Senator from Maine has described as obtaining to-day, and the sacramental phrases were even more resonant than any that have been uttered of late.

Yet, Mr. President, we find when that conference had ended there was no confederation of Europe by which the sovereignty of any peoples had been surrendered. There were no guaranties of the doctrine of nationality which worked evil to any of the nations who sat about the conference table. There was no outcome of the deliberations which tended in any way toward a condition such as the Senator from Maine seems to fear.

I do not think, Mr. President, that we need to bother ourselves greatly about the outcome of the deliberations at Versailles. It is true that Alexander had to go back to Paris in the effort to complete his work. So we learn that some of the great plenipotentiaries of to-day purpose to go back to Paris to complete their work.

It is also true, Mr. President, that Alexander had to attend five other conferences before the futility of the plan was at length made clear. I hope that no such number of conferences will attend in the train of the conference now sitting at Versailles, but I have no doubt that the outcome of the deliberations now taking place in the Hall of Mirrors will be no different in their great and ultimate result from those which took place a century ago, and when they are over, through the interposition of some agency, probably that of widespread human nature, which extends to the ruling powers as well as to the humblest of mankind, we will find, through the application of that motive power, that Versailles has saddled upon us no unusual problem and given to us no undue burden.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, before the Senator from New Hampshire entirely leaves the territory, he very happily alluded to one who might represent Alexander I at the Congress of Vienna. Will the Senator inform this body who would represent Prince Clemens Metternich and who would represent Talleyrand? Are there such characters present at this conference?

Mr. MOSES. I would be glad indeed to translate the dramatis personæ of the congress at Vienna into the terms of the conference at Versailles, but I do not think any Senator here present—certainly I do not think that the acute mind of the Senator from Illinois—requires any enlightenment from me in that regard. I think he is as quick to perceive a parallel as any Senator on the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I may say by the time the congress of Vienna really began—it occupied much time in palaver and formalities—but by the time they really began Napoleon grew restless at Elba and left the place that was assigned to him and landed on the coast of France and started a hundred-day whirlwind that dispersed the congress of Vienna. The Kaiser is in Holland in friendly surroundings; Hindenburg is at the head of the German Army. Is there any similarity between that period of the congress at Vienna and the present time? I think there is.

Mr. President, I wish to give notice—like the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], I do not think it entirely necessary—that to-morrow, if there should be a morning hour, immediately after the conclusion of that morning hour, or at such time to-morrow as I may be able to procure the floor, I will submit some remarks on superman government and self-government.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Baird	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Spencer
Beckham	Johnson, S. Dak.	New	Sterling
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Sutherland
Colt	Kellogg	Overman	Swanson
Culberson	Kenyon	Page	Thomas
Cummins	King	Pittman	Townsend
Dillingham	Kirby	Poindexter	Trammell
Fernald	La Follette	Pomerene	Underwood
Fletcher	Lenroot	Ransdell	Vardaman
France	Lewis	Shafroth	Walsh
Gay	McKellar	Sheppard	Weeks
Harding	McNary	Sherman	Wolcott
Henderson	Martin, Ky.	Smith, S. C.
Hollis	Martin, Va.	Smoot

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to announce that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS] is detained on official business.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to state that the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] on account of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, before the reading of the bill is resumed I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to propose an amendment. I make this request because it will be necessary for me to leave the Chamber very shortly for the remainder of the afternoon, and I am afraid the bill may not go over until to-morrow. If the Senator in charge of the bill has no objection, I will offer the amendment now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and the amendment proposed by him will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$3,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,600"; and on the same page, line 16, to strike out "$3,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$3,600."

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, that amendment applies to two well-known employees of the Senate, both of whom are selective—Mr. Kellar and Mr. Loeffler. Mr. Kellar has been an employee of the Senate for 39 years and Mr. Loeffler for 29 years. It is not necessary for me to say to Senators how extremely useful they are in this body. As far back as 30 years ago the salary of the Assistant Doorkeeper was practically $3,000, and by special enactment the holder of the office of Assistant Doorkeeper had an additional appropriation of $500; so that, practically speaking, the salary will only be substantially what was the salary of the position 30 years ago. The same pay should, of course, be given to the acting assistant doorkeeper. I hope the amendment may be given favorable consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts move the adoption of the amendment now?

Mr. WEEKS. I move the adoption of the amendment now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 26, line 11, after the word "thereof," to strike out "$30,000" and to insert "$35,000," so as to read:

Legislative reference: To enable the Librarian of Congress to employ competent persons to gather, classify, and make available, in translations, indexes, digests, compilations, and bulletins, and otherwise, data for or bearing upon legislation, and to render such data serviceable to Congress and committees and Members thereof, $35,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 26, line 12, by striking out the numerals "$35,000" and inserting "$45,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to explain the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I merely want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that I am in accord with the idea; that this is a very useful function of the Government and a very useful practice; but they themselves asked for but $40,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I was about to explain the particular purpose for which I move the amendment. It is true that they asked for only $40,000 for general purposes. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and I, in a conference had with them some time ago, inquired as to the feasibility of furnishing to each Senator and Member of the House a daily digest of bills reported by the various committees to the respective Houses. They stated that they could do that, and would be glad to do it, under the authority now existing, for an additional sum of $10,000 per year. It is true it was not estimated for or recommended, although they will be very glad to do this work if Congress desires it to be done.

The situation now is in both Houses, and it always has been so, that a very few industrious Members in either House make their own digest of bills and are prepared, as to the minor bills especially, as they come up, to intelligently discuss them. There are very few who do so in the Senate. There is especially the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], who does that kind of work, performing a most valuable service for the country, and there are a few Members in the other House, as the Senator from Alabama well knows, who do likewise. But each Member of either House ought to be able to get information in the way of a digest of bills that are reported, that are upon the calendar, and that will come up for consideration. It ought not to be necessary for 96 Members of the Senate and 433 Members of the other House independently to do this work when it could be done for all of them. If this appropriation is increased by $10,000, we are assured by the Reference Bureau that they will undertake this work and furnish each Senator and each Member of the other House a digest of the bills reported by the various committees of the Senate and of the House. It would be extremely valuable, and it would save to the country, in my judgment, many times its cost. Each Member could have that information, for, as the situation now is, busy as Senators are, they can not undertake to go through all of these bills and make the digest that is necessary to be made if they are to have the memoranda ready for reference when the bills come up for consideration.

It is a small appropriation, but it will bring in value many times what it will cost, and will enable every Member of both the House and the Senate to make a very much more intelligent consideration of bills that come before the two Houses. I sincerely hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Wisconsin forgets the fact that the work, if pursued, however, would involve a very large expenditure for printing each day the reports which are to be submitted.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it would involve a very small expenditure; in fact, they discussed as to whether or not they might not make mimeographic copies. At most it would only require 400 or 500 copies a day; and the number of bills reported each day would be comparatively small. It would be merely a digest. I have some sample digests here, covering one sheet of a very long bill. It will enable a Member at a glance to understand what was intended by the bill and how it proposed to change existing law, while now, under the present system, one has to wade through long reports; and, even then, it is sometimes very difficult to understand exactly what is proposed to be accomplished by the bill. Here we should have experts to do the work. The cost for printing would be a very small matter. I have an estimate of the detailed cost here of doing the work, and it can be done for $10,000 per year.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. KING. Of course, if the bills upon which they submit reports were to be taken up and considered on the day on which the reports were submitted, then I can see that the suggestion of the Senator would be perhaps quite important and that the work would be of considerable benefit to the Senate; but bills after they are reported may not be reached for consideration for weeks and possibly months. As the Senator knows, the daily reports by these experts when a bill was reached would not be available, but would be lost or misplaced. If Senators were interested at all in bills they would not be satisfied with the description of the bill or the analysis of the bill made by somebody else. If they have enough interest in a bill to be present and listen to the debate and participate in it, of necessity they will themselves be compelled to make an examination and analysis of the bills.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Utah is not quite correct in saying this work would be of no value. I know it had been my own practice in the other House for a great many years, and it is my practice now, to myself prepare a digest of the bills as to which I think I shall want to participate in the discussion of; I have one on my desk now, and I have no doubt that other Senators pursue the same practice. It involves a tremendous amount of work upon the part of a Senator, which ought to be accomplished by one man for all of us, and it could be. It would not be lost. Every Senator would have his file of digests of bills ready in his desk to turn to on the moment. Very many of these bills do come up upon a moment's notice, where one's recollection is gone unless a digest is prepared. A Senator could in a moment turn to that digest and know what that bill sought to accomplish.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator explain precisely by what amount his amendment proposes to increase the appropriation?

Mr. LENROOT. My amendment proposes to increase the appropriation by $10,000. If this increase is made, the Legislative Reference Bureau agrees that, under the authority which now exists, they will furnish each Member of the House and Senate a daily digest and analysis of bills that have been reported and placed on the calendar in both Houses. That would enable a Senator to keep that daily digest here in his desk and turn to it in a moment whenever a bill came up.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I merely want to make a suggestion that it would be a very easy matter to have the file preserved here on our desks by the Senate force just exactly as the files of reports and bills are now preserved for us.

Mr. LENROOT. That would be very easy.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And it would be right at hand for us whenever the bills came up. I think it is a very important provision which the junior Senator from Wisconsin has suggested.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have had quite an experience personally with this kind of work for the last 12 years, at least. There is not a bill introduced in the Senate or in the House that is not placed upon my desk the following morning, and there is hardly an evening when Congress is in session that I do not scan those bills. Of course 90 per cent of them take no time at all, because one who is familiar with the work of Congress readily recognizes the earmarks on them and they are brushed aside. But what the Senator has said applies to the other 10 per cent of the bills introduced. It takes a very great deal of time to prepare a digest of all those bills; in fact, Mr. President, of late I have waited until a bill was reported and went to the calendar before preparing a digest of it. I have been compelled to do that on account of lack of time. But as soon as a bill reaches the calendar, then I think that every Senator ought to know just exactly what the bill is; and the only way he can know is by making a digest, examining it, and ascertaining its scope, object, and purposes. If this work could be accomplished without being made too voluminous—in other words, if judgment is used by those who will prepare the digest, so that only such matters will be brought to the attention of Senators as are likely to be acted upon—I think it would be an immense advantage to every Senator; but I hope, and I simply say now by way of caution, that if this work is undertaken, those who carry it on will not make it so cumbersome and so voluminous that a great deal of its value will be lost. I am positive, however, that if the work is done properly it will be a wonderful advantage to every Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say that I have had the Legislative Reference Bureau make me a number of sample digests, and they have boiled the matter down to the very limit, so that it is not voluminous. Furthermore, I am very sure that on the suggestion of individual Senators at any time, if the bureau does exceed what is thought to be a proper limit, the digest can very easily be brought within a proper scope.

I wish to say in explanation to the Senator from Alabama who is in charge of the bill, that the Senator from Maine and I expected to bring this matter before the committee, and the Senator from Maine did speak to the Senator from Virginia with reference to it; but we did not know the bill was going to be reported so soon, and so we did not bring it before the committee, although we fully intended doing so before the bill was reported.

It is a small increase, but one that I feel very sure will be one of the best expenditures in the interest of the saving of time of Senators and economy to the Government that we could make.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am not prepared to accept the amendment, because I have not the authority of the committee. I will say personally that I believe the Legislative Reference Bureau is doing an excellent work. I think any work that brings information to Senators and Members of the House is useful if it has been properly digested and prepared. So I do not propose to resist the amendment. We may have some difficulty in getting it adopted in conference; but, of course, I will represent the Senate's viewpoint. I repeat that I have no personal objection to the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from the law librarian, together with an estimate of the cost of the proposed digest.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS,
LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE SERVICE,
Washington, January 18, 1919.

DEAR SENATOR: Referring to the matter of a daily digest of bills reported from committees, which you and Senator LENROOT suggested that the Legislative Reference Service should undertake:

I have made a careful estimate of the work which would be involved and the additional appropriation which would be required to enable us to employ the additional help necessary to turn out this digest promptly each day throughout the session. I have regarded the last month of the short session of the Sixty-fourth Congress as representing the amount of work which we should have to be prepared to handle. The inclosed table gives statistics of the public bills and resolutions (general and local) reported during that period.

Detailed estimates of the additional legislative reference appropriation required are given on a separate sheet. In explanation I may note—

1. That the supervision of the work will add materially to the responsibilities of our chief indexer, Mr. McClenon, who is in charge of the American Law Section, and this should be recognized by the provision of additional compensation.

2. That the digesting should be done by persons who have had a legal education and who are familiar with the work of indexing and digesting. While a great many of the bills are quite simple, there are others that require very careful study by a lawyer to determine just what the legal effect of their provisions is likely to be.

3. If the law clerks are to work efficiently and get out the material promptly they must be properly supported by stenographic assistance.

4. A messenger will be required to procure the bills from the Printing Office in advance of the regular distribution and advance copies from the committees, and also to deliver to the printer the copy and proofs of the digests prepared. (The ordinary methods of distribution do not bring the bills to us at the present time until two or three days after report.)

We have prepared sample digests (also inclosed) for the few bills that were reported on January 15 and 16, 1919, to try out the work and elicit from you any suggestions for improvement, either as to form or substance. I may note that we have not duplicated information which is presented in good form in the report on the bill.

Very truly, yours,

J. DAVID THOMPSON,
Law Librarian.

Hon. FREDERICK HALE,
125 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

One typist, at $960	960
One messenger, at $840	840
Total	10,000

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 29, after line 10, to insert:

For temporary services of additional employees when found necessary, at the discretion of the superintendent, in the operations of the Library Building and Grounds, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the top of page 30.

Mr. KIRBY. I move to amend line 2, on page 30, by striking out the figures "$2,250" and inserting "$3,000." I will say, Mr. President, that the Superintendent of the Botanic Garden——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an agreement to conclude committee amendments first, and the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas will not be in order until after the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. KIRBY. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Bureau of Efficiency," in the item of appropriation to enable the Bureau of Efficiency, authorized by the urgent deficiency appropriation act approved February 28, 1917, to establish and maintain a system of efficiency ratings, etc., on page 32, line 10, before the word "persons," to strike out "nine" and insert "eighteen," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That not more than 18 persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation in excess of $3,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," on page 34, line 15, after the word "each," to insert "ten at $3,500 each," so as to read:

officers to aid in important drafting work—5 at $4,500 each, 10 at $3,500 each, etc.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator having this bill in charge what are the duties of the employees referred to in lines 14, 15, and 16, page 34—

Officers to aid in important drafting work—5 at $4,500 each, 10 at $3,500 each, 14 at $3,000 each, 17 at $2,500 each, to be appointed by the Secretary.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, the Acting Secretary of State appeared before the committee. He said that these men were compelled to draft papers, all kinds of papers that come before the State Department for consideration relative to our Diplomatic and Consular Service, and coming in contact with men in the chancelleries of Europe of long experience and high pay, men trained for that purpose; and he insisted that he could not get competent men to handle this branch of the service for less pay. Although he urgently requested an additional force to that which we have granted, we finally came to the conclusion that they were entitled to 10 men, especially under existing circumstances. Although the war is over and direct war expenditures are being cut down, the Senator must bear in mind that with the conclusion of the war, the organization of new nations, the thousand and one questions that must arise between our allies and the countries with which we have been at war during the past few years, the labors of the State Department have enormously increased.

I can not go into all the details in reference to that, because they have not been given to me, but it is apparent that that condition exists. These additional clerks, the only change we have made there, have been estimated for, and the department has estimated for a considerably increased force more than that; so I think that under existing circumstances their request should be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 35, line 8, after the words "Under Secretary," to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500"; and in line 17, after the words "in all," to strike out "$529,840" and insert "$565,340," so as to read:

private secretary to the Under Secretary, $2,500; clerk to the Secretary, $1,800; clerks—27 of class 4, 30 of class 3, 40 of class 2, 63 of class 1 (3 of whom shall be telegraph operators), 40 at $1,000 each, 10 at $900 each; lithographer, $1,400; chief messenger, $1,000; 8 messengers; 27 assistant messengers; 4 messenger boys at $420 each; packer, $720; 7 laborers; 4 telephone switchboard operators; chauffeur, $1,080; 10 charwomen; in all, $565,340.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 19, after the words "Department of State," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$200,000"; in line 21, after the word "That," to strike out "no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless"; and in line 26, after the word "positions," to strike out "appropriated for herein," so as to make the clause read:

For temporary employees in the Department of State, $200,000: Provided, That not more than eight persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum: Provided, That all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator if there ought not to be a limitation as to the maximum amount which may be paid to any employee out of the $200,000 additional appropriation provided for in the paragraph now under consideration?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was interrupted, Mr. President, and did not catch the paragraph to which the Senator refers. I shall be glad if he will call my attention to it.

Mr. KING. On page 35, lines 19, 20, and 21, there is a provision that—not more than eight persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum.

Is there any limitation upon the amount which may be paid those eight persons? Could they not be paid $10,000 each?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I think they could; but I think it is proposed to pay these men somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000. It is impossible, however, to put a maximum limitation on it; and, of course, the limitation in the paragraph is in the total expenditure. To accomplish the result referred to, if the State Department went out and deliberately paid $10,000 each to eight men, it would so consume the bulk of the appropriation that it could not function very well.

Mr. KING. Obviously, that is true; but I thought perhaps the department had in mind the character of the work which was to be performed and the personnel that would be employed under this provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They have, and they had a hearing before the committee; and my recollection is that they stated that they expected to get these men at salaries ranging from four to five thousand dollars.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator advise us what the duties of these positions are that call for salaries which are in excess of that allowed; for instance, the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and many of the very important officials of the Government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They would not be in excess of that. I do not remember about the Interior Department, but my recollection is that the Assistant Secretary of State gets $7,500.

Mr. KING. I had reference to some other departments, where the assistant secretaries receive very small compensation. For instance, the Assistant to the Secretary of the Interior receives only $2,750.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The position of assistant sometimes is a very important position and sometimes it is merely a clerical position. These temporary employees of the State Department have been working out—the work was organized before the war, but it has largely increased since the war—definite information in regard to our trade and contact in a commercial way with the foreign nations. They have a very complete bureau organized; and my recollection is that the testimony showed that the President, out of the fund provided to him for emergencies, largely increased the appropriation last year for this specific work, because of the urgent need of the information coming to the department. It was for that reason that after consideration we increased the appropriation, not to the full extent the department asked, but we gave them an increase of $75,000.

Mr. KING. There is an appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But this is not in excess of what they had last year. The House held the appropriation down to $125,000. The Senate increased it $75,000, but after going into it carefully and after a full hearing on the subject.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not there is any duplication between the work contemplated to be performed by the employees provided for in the paragraph under discussion, and that performed by employees of the Commerce Department?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My recollection is that the State Department claims that there is not; but my own judgment is that there must of necessity be some duplication, though it is not direct duplication.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator, if he will pardon me, that complaints have been made to me that there has been, and still is, a great deal of duplication between work performed by men operating under the control of the State Department and those who are operating under the Department of Commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, as long as we keep the Consular Service in the State Department and then try to have the Department of Commerce function along commercial lines, I do not see how you are going to prevent certain classes of duplication, because both are working along the same line. I want to say further, however, that probably in the past the commerce of our country has suffered—I do not mean in the immediate past, but before some organization was created, both in the State Department and in the Department of Commerce, looking to the expansion of our foreign trade, and to obtaining information for the great business interests of the country that are looking to foreign trade. I do not think there was any condition in the whole governmental machinery that needed readjustment more than this does. We sat down and complained that our neighbors, foreign nations, advanced their foreign trade to a far greater extent than American trade; and in the end we find that so far as our Government was concerned, except in the recent past, along certain lines there were no facilities granted to our citizens for the expansion of trade.

It is true that we had a Consular Service; but until recently the Consular Service was not expected to function along these lines or to keep in constant contact with foreign trade. I know that there were some consular offices that furnished very remarkable reports in the past. On the other hand, many of them accomplished nothing more than drawing their salaries. It has only been within the last decade that any real effort has been made to establish American banks in foreign countries; it has only been within the last decade that any effort has been made to increase our merchant marine; and I can practically say the same thing in reference to the work of our Consular and Diplomatic Service along the line of investigating the fields of commerce in foreign countries and advising the American producer and the American manufacturer as to his opportunities to do business abroad.

We may not be developing along any one of these three lines as rapidly as we ought to; but unless we can have banks in foreign countries, unless we can have a merchant marine that is commanded by ourselves and not by our trade adversaries, and unless we can have men trained in commercial lines, men of ability, men of experience, who can investigate the foreign trade field and report back to the manufacturer and producer in America as to what opportunities he may find abroad and assist him in finding them, our foreign commerce will not expand; and along certain lines it must expand, or we will have idle factories and idle furnaces in the near future.

Take the iron and steel industry. Everyone knows that the expansion of the iron and steel industry in America has far exceeded the American demand. Take the cotton industry. The cotton industry must find foreign fields, or it will have surplus cotton upon its hands that it can not dispose of in America. The appropriation of which the Senator speaks, and other appropriations along that line, are for the purpose of helping a development in that foreign field. As to how far it is accomplishing the result, I can not say. I know it has done some good. As to whether it has produced all the good and efficient results that should be produced in order to warrant the expenditure of the money, I can not say; but I think it would be very unwise for the Congress to cut down the effort in that direction to expand our foreign commerce.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator does not misapprehend the inquiry which I made, or at least the object and purpose of it. I agree most heartily with what the Senator has said; and while perhaps I may be regarded as a good deal of a crank upon appropriations and my appeals here for economy may have produced some irritation, I do plead guilty to a desire to be liberal and generous with appropriations for the purpose of extending our foreign trade and commerce.

What I inquired of the Senator about was this: In the investigations which I have made I have discovered that there has been considerable duplication; that the Commerce Department and the State Department have been running along, in some instances, on parallel lines; and frequently those lines would merge together and confusion would result. I think there ought to be more coordination. I do not venture an opinion as to whether or not the appropriations for the extension of our foreign trade, for obtaining information necessary to enable us to extend our trade and commerce, ought to be under the State Department or under the Department of Commerce; but certainly it is manifest to anyone who thinks for a moment that it is unwise to have a duplication of work, to have two departments that are running along parallel lines. There ought to be coordination; and the complaints that have been made to me, and the investigations which I have made, confirm the view that there has been too much of duplication between the two departments.

It is obvious, in view of the efforts which are being made by Germany, or will be made by Germany, and which are now being made by Great Britain and France and other nations, that there will be great rivalry for the trade of the world. If the American people do not exert themselves, and, indeed, assert themselves, they are going to lose much of the trade that they have had in the past, and they will fail to gain much that they might obtain in the future. We ought to take lessons from the work of Germany in the past in the extension of her trade and commerce; and I would be willing to have very liberal appropriations made in order to develop our trade and commerce, and to bring us into contact with those nations of the world that will need the products of mine and field and farm in this country.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, last year there was an appropriation of $200,000 for temporary employees in the Department of State. This year there was an estimate sent in for $500,000. The House granted $125,000. The Senate amended that by striking out $125,000 and inserting $200,000. These are not all the temporary employees that the State Department wants, by any manner of means, nor do I think these employees will be used for the purpose stated by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I had a confidential paper that I showed to the Senator which was sent to us, and that part of them will be used along the line I indicated, as shown in that paper.

Mr. SMOOT. I have the number, and I can state to the Senator just the number, if necessary; but not many of them will be paid from this fund. I am safe in saying, however, that if this amount of $200,000 is not sufficient, the State Department will go this year to the same fund to which they went last year, and secure money in order to hire the number of employees they want.

I think the Senate ought to know that the different departments of our Government made certain representations to Congress last year for appropriations, and Congress refused to give what was asked; but it develops now that where a refusal was made they went to the President of the United States, and asked him to give them money out of the fund that was given him as a confidential fund, and secured appropriations for the purpose of running the different departments of the Government. I know that that has happened, not only in the State Department, but in the Department of Justice, in the Department of Commerce, in the Bureau of Naturalization, and in the Department of Labor. I requested the other day that there be sent to the committee a list of all of the appropriations made from the fund of the President, showing to what departments it had been given, and the amount. Up to the present time it has been passed on from one to another, and I have come to the conclusion that we are not going to get the information. I do not know that it would do any good if we had the information; but I wanted to know how much further this thing could be carried on, and how much there was left in the fund, so that we could arrange our appropriations accordingly.

I do not think that is the proper thing to do. I think all the money that is appropriated for the departments of this Government ought to be appropriated in the regular appropriation bills, and I think the Congress ought to know the amount that is appropriated. They are responsible for the maintenance of the departments as far as appropriations are concerned, and I believe that whenever a representation is made by the head of a department, and then Congress refuses to make an appropriation for it, there ought to be no other place where they could go and secure the money to carry on what they thought they ought to have.

Mr. President, I believe that this item of $200,000 is really necessary. I voted for this increase, and I simply wanted to say what I have said so that Congress may know what has taken place in the past. I can not say how much it has been. I know that the testimony showed that in the Department of Commerce, in one particular instance, there was $100,000, and in the Bureau of Naturalization there was $100,000, and in some of the other departments there was even more, and even in the Child Labor Bureau—although this fund of $100,000,000 was given for war purposes—there has been an increase; I do not know how much. I have been unable to learn. In the home gardening there was also an appropriation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator whether it would not be a very wise and prudent thing to offer an amendment to this bill that no amount whatever shall be received or expended by the department other than that which is appropriated in this bill? And would it not be a wise idea to pass a Federal statute making it an offense or prohibiting the reception of money from some other fund not contemplated when the appropriation was made and expending it in a department or in a bureau for which an appropriation was made after due consideration by Congress?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that there is a statute already preventing any department of our Government from creating a deficit, and yet there is not a department of the Government but that does it every year, and sometimes the deficit is greater than the original appropriation; and as long as Congress recognizes this violation of the statute and pays no particular attention to it, it is going on. It will never cease.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I rose merely to ask a question of the Senator from Utah, but I will ask it of the Senator from Alabama. In response to a question put by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], I think the Senator from Alabama stated that the $200,000 for which there is no specification was to be used for the expansion of our foreign trade.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In part.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know for what else it may be used, but that seems to be its chief purpose. The Department of State has its consular agents. They may be effective; they may be ineffective; but two or three years ago we adopted the policy of doing through the Department of Commerce this work that was not fully done through the consular agents. That was our policy, deliberately adopted.

I find, turning to the appropriations made for the Department of Commerce, that the appropriations for the identical purpose amounted in the aggregate to $690,000. I find that there is a lump appropriation of $325,000, which may be expended for any purpose in connection with the promotion of the commercial interest of the United States. Then, there is an appropriation of $100,000, made with the especial object of increasing our trade with South and Central America; an appropriation of $100,000 for the development of our commerce in the Orient; and an appropriation of $165,000, which is again entirely indefinite, and may be applied, I presume, to the whole field.

Is there any showing before the Committee on Appropriations that we need more than $690,000 for the maintenance in these various portions of the earth of a sufficient force to keep us well advised with regard to commerce and the opportunities which may exist for American business men to enlarge or increase their trade abroad? I can not, for the life of me, understand how they could spend more than $690,000 for such a purpose, and spend it economically and wisely. I am inclined to think that $200,000 is just thrown away and will serve no useful purpose if it is intended simply to get reports with regard to our foreign commerce.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not care to go into the matter fully, Mr. President, but I have no doubt that, with the information the Senator from Iowa has, he is perfectly sincere in making his statement, and yet I do not believe that we could get along without a reasonable amount of this work being done. I will say that right at this hour I am not fully informed as to the individual work these agents in the Commerce Department have been doing, but that they have been doing a vast deal of work in investigating foreign trade, in publishing documents, which were brought to the attention of American manufacturers, indicating where the opportunities were for future development to take place, is undoubtedly true. On the other hand, I wish to say that our great foreign competitors in industrial lines are spending a great deal more money than we are along this line of development as a Government.

In reference to this particular $200,000 the attention of the State Department last year was called to the strategic position of raw material as it affected war conditions, as to where raw material in various lines of industry relating to war and its work could be had, as to the channels of trade in which they were ordinarily moving, and as to the opportunities and necessities for diverting that raw material from our enemies. Having been called to the attention of our Government, it was necessary for them to make a very thorough investigation, which they did. That investigation has not fully been completed. So far as its functioning on the war side of the problem that probably is unnecessary, but so far as the peace aspect of that investigation is concerned it is just as important to-day as it was a year ago when it was begun.

I am sure it is not necessary for me to extend my remarks by amplifying the importance of our Government, and through our Government our business fabric, being informed as to where the raw materials of industry lie and in what channels of the trade they move. That is one of the things being worked out by this appropriation.

There is another proposition of great importance that was before the State Department, and that is the collective buying for foreign nations. Most of the principal European nations have arranged for collective action by their buyers or importers, each individual line of trade to supersede the competitive purchasing formerly practiced. This puts the American exporter at a fatal disadvantage. I am sure the Senator can realize that. In France a special system of consorting has been built up during the war, and in each line of trade a French comptoir purchases all goods imported into France, seriously affecting certain lines of American trade. The foreign trade adviser's office have been forced to study the facts with regard to lines of trade involved in relation to efforts upon the national interests which would result from the making of forcible diplomatic representations to France along these lines. Actual trade figures are procured from the Department of Commerce, but they must be analyzed painstakingly by the same officers who have the current diplomatic situation in mind, namely, the officers of the Department of State.

Collective selling on the part of our foreign competitors is requiring organization in this country to meet conditions we have to meet in the competitive markets of the earth, and that can only be done through the diplomatic channel, with this specific information with reference to trade conditions brought to their attention.

I will state another question which the State Department has studied, and I am not going into details with reference to it, although I have the papers in my hand; but for certain reasons it may not be well to put them in the RECORD. It is the question of foreign governmental monopoly that is seriously affecting our trade, and is not merely a matter of commerce, to be treated along commercial lines; but as it is a governmental monopoly it must of necessity be treated through diplomatic channels. Those questions are being investigated. Part of this money has to be spent for that purpose. It is of great importance to our business interests that these questions should be understood and that our citizens should be advised how to meet them.

There is another question wherein this money has been spent in the past, and to some extent may be expended in the future. Growing out of the war it was necessary for our South American neighbors to make certain great foreign loans. The European trade markets were closed. The banking circles of Europe which had been supplying them with loans in the past were no longer able to do it, growing out of war conditions. They had to appeal to our country. It was a new line of business for our banking public. They required certain detailed information, and they had to acquire it through diplomatic channels. Part of this money was used in that line. I am not sure that it will be required in the future, but probably some of it will in the immediate future.

The international cable situation is another problem that has to be studied by the State Department. Part of the money in the past has been used for that purpose, and a reasonable amount of money provided in this bill will be used to study out the problems of the American control of the cable system. American-owned cable systems are at present vitally deficient from the standpoint of giving us independent communication with other countries. The Central and South American Telegraph Co. has asked the department's assistance with regard to extending its cable connections from Buenos Aires northward to Rio de Janeiro. Certain other interests are asking aid in the establishment of a system linking Cuba and Porto Rico to Key West. The Western Union Telegraph Co. is requesting aid to install a cable direct from New York to Rio de Janeiro.

In connection with these requests it now develops that no armored or deep-sea cable is manufactured in the United States and that we are dependent upon England for every foot of cable we may wish to lay. England has very naturally refused at this time to permit the sale of any of this cable to American interests. It is necessary to make certain investigations looking to the question of either securing the cable that we need to lay in the interest of our commerce or to advise American manufacturers upon what terms and conditions they can go into the manufacture of cables themselves.

These are some of the questions. There are a number of others I might go into. The committee has not ill-advisedly or without thought or consideration asked for this increased appropriation. I am thoroughly satisfied that if we have erred at all we have erred upon the side of economy, and that every dollar we have increased this appropriation should remain in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator is a little in error wherein he says that out of this $200,000 those investigations shall be made. The investigations are to be made by the 10 employees, at $2,500, for whom we have provided in the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is mistaken about that. I took this matter up personally with these gentlemen, besides doing so in the committee, and I can assure the Senator of the purpose. Of course, the work of these 10 employees may be along that line to some extent, but along this particular line the 10 employees could not cover it. I call the Senator's attention to this fact. He simply has not carefully looked at the papers in his hand. In this organization they have had, and expect to continue, a divisional organization. Among others, there is Latin America, with a chief of division; a South American section with an assistant, and another assistant to cover the countries of Argentina, Paraguay, Brazil, and Uruguay; and a second assistant to cover Chile, Bolivia, and Ecuador. Then there is another division for the Caribbean section with an assistant, Colombia, Panama, Venezuela, Guiana, and Costa Rica are to have an assistant, with a second assistant under that division to Nicaragua, Guatemala, Salvador, and Honduras. Then there is another assistant to cover Cuba, the Dominican Republic, Haiti, and the West Indies. There is another section, the Mexican section, with three assistants. Then there is the same kind of an organization for western Europe, with equally as large a number of employees; one for the Near East, another for the Far East; one for Russia; certain assistants in the foreign intelligence office, and certain other assistants for passport control, trade adviser, research and diplomatic lines. I will not take up the time of the Senate to read them all, but that is the line of organizations to carry out this work.

Mr. SMOOT. That organization is taken care of through appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, I will say to the Senator, and of this $200,000 that is here for temporary employees of the State Department some may be used, of course, for this purpose, but the reason given why they wanted the 10 employees extra above what the House allowed them was that these were the special employees who were desired to make an investigation of the radio system.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not like to dispute the question with the Senator, but the Senator is misinformed. I know what I am talking about. The papers that I hold in my hand were brought to my desk by the gentlemen interested in this request for an increased appropriation, and I know; I am not guessing at it; I am not misinformed about it. I have made the statement, based upon information that was furnished me by the men at the head of this proposition. Their work was largely done on an appropriation given them by the President from his special fund last year, and when they asked for this increase and asked for more than we had given them they brought these papers to me that I hold in my hand, from which I made the statement, for the purpose of obtaining this specific appropriation. So there is no doubt about it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I accept implicitly the statement made by the Senator from Alabama; I think it is correct; but the argument founded upon it, so far as this appropriation is concerned, is very fallacious. I am not speaking about what the State Department ought to have to carry on its diplomatic affairs. I assume that the real function of the State Department is to deal with foreign Governments in some way or other.

If our appropriation for the office of the State Department is not sufficient to enable it to employ the proper number and kind of persons to carry on its correspondence and its intercourse with foreign countries, I, for one, am very willing to increase that number; but we are in very great danger of injuring rather than assisting our foreign trade, in a proper sense of that word, by the complications which may arise between the State Department and the Department of Commerce with regard to business.

I will say, as I said before, in my opinion the State Department ought to have nothing to do with business except as it merges itself into our relations with foreign Governments. The Senator from Alabama says that we ought to have some way of meeting foreign competition, as in collective buying and collective selling.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said to get the information by which we could know what we are doing. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Congress of the United States has acted upon that matter. It has passed a law which has for its especial purpose the consolidation and combination which in the judgment of Congress was thought necessary to enable that competition to be met in a successful way. The administration, so far as it is to be administered, of that law, is committed to the Federal Trade Commission, not to the Department of State.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, I think he is making a mistake in that proposition. It was before I came to the Senate and when I was a Representative in another body that the matter came to my attention. There was an effort made by the House within my recollection to cut out of the State Department this entire organization in reference to foreign commerce, limiting it to the functions of the Department of Commerce. My recollection is that under that House amendment the opposition to it came from the Senate. I recall now having talked the matter over with one or two distinguished Senators at that time whose names I do not care to call, and the two organizations were kept in the bill due to the opposition in the Senate. They have been there all the time.

Of course, I am free to say that growing out of the war conditions the functions of this bureau in the State Department were vastly increased; but the germ was there, and as long as it is the policy of the Government and the law that we shall maintain these organizations in both departments, the committee carrying appropriations for the supply of sufficient money to function on is not here to determine what shall be the policy of the Government when you fixed that by statutory law. Of course, we may have some limitation in determining how far they shall function and how far they shall draw in by either extending or limiting their appropriation, but the policy has already been fixed by the Government and it is a governmental policy now.

Mr. CUMMINS. The policy has never been established except through appropriations, and it is to be continued through appropriations. This is the time and this is the place to change the policy if we desire to have it changed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I agree with him that usually the extent of the functions, and to some extent the functions themselves, have been established by appropriation bills. But the Senator calls my attention to the fact, and it is a fact, that the Congress itself by a statutory law established this bureau in the Department of Commerce in relation to our foreign-trade matters, not by an appropriation bill but by law itself, in establishing that bureau, a brand new bureau, within the last decade.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Up to that time these functions had been entirely occupied by the Department of State. When Congress performed that legislative act it did not cut off those functions, it left them to survive, and they are right at the present time performing a most valuable and a most necessary function for the benefit of American business.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as its value in time of war, I express no opinion, for I am not familiar with what it has done during the war, and I am very willing, indeed I would be anxious, to continue every appropriate intervention on the part of our Government, not in private business but so far as private business required us to deal with a foreign government. But beyond that I do not think the State Department ought to go. That is a view which I have held for a long time, and I have tried to express it whenever the opportunity or occasion presents itself.

I know the futility of opposing this appropriation, and I am simply recording my own opinion with regard to it, that in so far as this appropriation is used to expand our business, to secure for the people of this country more foreign trade, it will be either a purely duplicated service or it will be of no value whatsoever. That is not saying that the suggestions of the Senator from Alabama are not well founded with regard to those cases in which we must deal as a Nation with foreign powers. I want that power fully sustained, and I want it amply sustained, but I have had rather a close observation of the workings of the Department of Commerce with regard to our foreign trade. I think the work of that department has been exceedingly valuable. I think it has covered the whole field. It does not confine itself to work in the United States, to the translation of foreign documents that may give information about trade. The employeees of the Department of Commerce travel all over the world making a personal investigation at every point at which it is possible or thought possible that commerce may be enlarged. I do not know that all the reports are published, but they are very generally published, and they contain information of the most valuable character. They maintain just such a bureau of information as was suggested by the Senator from Alabama, namely, when they see an opportunity in some foreign country for an American business man to sell goods or engage there in business of his own they promptly make it known and get in correspondence with those who are likely to embrace an opportunity of that kind.

I do not disparage that kind of work. I think it is exceedingly helpful and ought to be continued, but I think that when we try to duplicate it in so far as it is duplicated—I have no expert knowledge upon that subject and I do not know what the State Department is doing——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I said to the Senator candidly that I thought there was duplication there, although it is claimed there is not; but I am not prepared to say how far it is duplicated.

Mr. CUMMINS. What I would like to do, and I hope it may be done, because I do not expect to defeat this appropriation, is to call the attention of the Senate and the country and especially of the Committee on Appropriations to this view, that in the future the work of the State Department ought to be limited, no matter how much it costs, to our diplomatic intercourse with foreign nations and our ordinary Consular Service which is of a commercial character, but it is not particularly intended to extend or increase our foreign commerce.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I do not quite understand just where the line should be drawn as to the activities of the consular and diplomatic representatives. If a consular agent is in a section of the world where there is business and where there is an opportunity for the expansion of American trade and commerce, and if he is charged with the responsibility of obtaining figures as to the trade and commerce of that particular section, I can not just see why he ought not to aid in a legitimate way American manufacturers who seek to vend their wares in the district in which he is located.

Mr. CUMMINS. Undoubtedly such a consular agent should do that, and unquestionably many of them do that, but that is not the primary purpose of appointing consular agents; it is secondary. Many of them are skillful in that direction and make valuable reports, of which the business men of the United States have sought to take advantage, and do take advantage, but in so far as the consular agent can perform this work it ought to be continued by the consular agent, and there is ample appropriation in the bill far the continuance of the consular agent and for his work. I am only speaking of that special, that extraordinary work, which seems in a sense to be a direct subsidy to private business that is performed by the Department of Commerce and that is to be performed again under this appropriation by the Department of State by an investigator who goes all over the world, who studies the subject, and who reaches a conclusion with regard to what can be done by American men of business and how they must go about doing it.

There was a time when that was not considered a part of the public business, and a good many of us were rather reluctant to see the Government go into the subsidizing policy; but we have gone into it so largely and so generously that I am perfectly willing to see it continued, for I really think it can accomplish some good. The Government of the United States is doing for a great many people precisely what our great corporations do for themselves. There is no department of the Government, either in the office of the Secretary of State or in the office of the Secretary of Commerce, that approaches in point of ability, in point of comprehensiveness, the efficiency attained by the United States Steel Corporation and its various organizations, which maintains a bureau of this kind, and its agents are in every part of the world for the sole purpose of helping the sale of steel products abroad.

I was formerly of the opinion that that kind of work could be well left to the individual initiative and enterprise of business men, but the gradual drift toward governmental function has led me at least to tolerate the assumption of that work upon the part of the Government. I am very frank in saying that I believe the present Department of Commerce has done wonderfully well in exploiting our opportunities abroad. It was under the influence of that department that Congress passed the law which to some extent mitigated the rigidity or the severity of the antitrust law, and permits, under certain circumstances, combinations among our business men for foreign trade.

What I am objecting to is that we are spending all the money that can be profitably spent through the Department of Commerce in uncovering the opportunities which may exist and in tendering to our business men the suggestions which may arise from investigation. What the State Department spends in that particular of the $200,000 here appropriated, in my judgment, is just so much absolutely wasted. That is not saying that in these matters concerning ocean cables and other things that require diplomatic intervention between two governments the State Department is sufficiently equipped; but if it is not it ought to come frankly forward and secure appropriations for the maintenance of employees who are to do that work. It ought not to come and secure an appropriation the expenditure of which is not in any way directed by Congress, leaving the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to explain how it will be spent, but without binding in any way the State Department to expend the money for that purpose or in that way. It is precisely like all these lump-sum appropriations.

The great scandal of the work of Congress is the lump-sum appropriation, where we give general authority to withdraw money from the Treasury without indicating by whom it shall be spent or for what it shall be spent or even what shall be accomplished by the expenditure. We shall never resume—I will not say "resume," for I do not know that we have ever occupied the right position with regard to that matter—but we shall never even approach our much-desired economy in public affairs until Congress does direct the purposes for which money shall be spent.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am very glad to hear the Senator make those remarks. I wish more Senators would study this question and make similar remarks about this matter. We had before the war came on about gotten rid of lump-sum appropriations. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and I have been fighting lump-sum appropriations for years and years. We hoped to get rid of them, and we had about done so when the war came on, and now we have them galore. The object is to get rid of them, and I am glad to hear stated the position taken by the Senator from Iowa upon that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have always taken that position, and I hope I may always be consistent enough to maintain it.

I should like to see an appropriation bill that would enable the Members of the Senate and the Members of the other House to exercise their own judgment with regard to the purpose for which money should be expended and with regard to the amount that should be expended for such a purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to call the Senator's attention to the fact that this bill itself is trying to remedy that evil. It is practically impossible for an appropriation committee, when it has before it a bill embracing a large field of expenditure which requires the organization of bureaus and divisions of the Government, to sit down at the time of the organization and work out how many chiefs of bureaus or divisions or clerks are needed. But we have provided in this bill for a commission, to be composed of Members of the two Houses of Congress, to work out a reclassification of all salaries. That is the only way it can be done. It is impossible to do it on an appropriation bill. A reorganization may grow out of the work of this commission that will accomplish the result to which the Senator from Iowa points, but it is the only way it can be done. If the Appropriations Committee had to sit down and study every detail in connection with every new bureau that is created under a lump-sum provision—how many clerks there should be of class 1 and class 2 and class 3, and how many chiefs of divisions there should be—we should never be able to report the appropriation bills within the long session, and certainly not within the short session of Congress.

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, it would be possible even now in this appropriation bill to point out the purposes for which the money is to be expended, even if it could not be declared how many employees should be in a new bureau or what salaries they should receive.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I spent about 20 minutes endeavoring to point out the purposes for which the appropriation was intended, and I am sorry the Senator from Iowa did not understand me.

Mr. CUMMINS. I understood perfectly; the Senator from Alabama was exceedingly clear about that, but what the Senator has said does not bind the State Department in any particular.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course not, but nothing else would bind the State Department except the direct organization of these bureaus. As I say, it is impossible for us to do it in this way, but if the amendment to which I have referred in the last part of the bill is adopted we are going to give Congress a chance to appoint a commission to work out that very reform.

BOLSHEVIST PROPAGANDA IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I feel it my duty to call the attention of the Senate to an occurrence of yesterday, a comparatively full report of which appears in this morning's Washington Post, beginning on page 3, and continued on page 10. The headlines are:

Urge "red" America—Bolshevik speakers stir huge audience at Poli's Theater—City's radicals in throngs—Representative MASON charges plot to keep Slav funds in United States—Speaks from box after Albert Rhys Williams and others laud soviets and tell of spreading propaganda in United States—"Suff" pickets take up collections—Adopt Johnson resolution now in Senate.

From this article, Mr. President, it appears that under the shadow of the Capitol and in the center of the Nation's activities a meeting largely attended was yesterday held which applauded propaganda hostile to the Constitution and institutions of the United States and addresses advocating the overthrow of both.

I am not permitted under the rules of the Senate to more than refer to the fact that a Member of the House figured conspicuously in this remarkable gathering. I may emphasize the fact, however, that five of the suffragette pickets were in that audience, and one of them, Mrs. Ida M. Waters, assisted in taking up a collection to pay for the rent of the theater. Their presence was not surprising, for they seek notoriety wherever possible, and always clamoring for their rights under a Constitution they despise when corrected for their indiscretions.

Mr. President, for one I protest against assemblages which, under the guise of free speech, advocate what is virtually treason to the Nation. If I occupy a street corner and counsel my auditors to go to the White House and murder the President, or to the Willard Hotel and kill the proprietor, or to the Capital and murder a Senator or a Representative, the police very properly interfere, I am apprehended, and subjected to punishment; but if I counsel a campaign of universal murder and destruction, including the overthrow of the Government, I can rely upon my constitutional right to free speech and go unscathed.

I contend, Mr. President, that one is just as criminal as the other; and unless the people of this country—the plain, law-abiding, middle-class people—realize, and realize very soon, the fact that there is a conspiracy, usually secret, but frequently open, working for the overthrow of the Government of the United States and to erect upon its ruins a so-called government of murderers, anarchists, thieves, and criminals, with here and there some honest but deluded individual among them, the avalanche may be upon them in the near future. This is a serious situation. The people by and large should realize it and take the proper steps to protect themselves and their Government from sinister consequences.

I do not wish to indulge in undue forebodings; but when I realize that there is an organization in this country, as well as in others, comprised in small part, as all such organizations are, of good men and of good women and of good-meaning men and good-meaning women, but officered and controlled by criminals at heart and traitors in fact as well as in law, and that the movement of death and destruction which they preach and advocate is spreading, I want to be able to say hereafter that I did not remain silent when Bolshevist meetings are held within hailing distance of the Capitol.

I think it is safe to say that every murderer, every criminal, every man who hopes or expects to prosper or to benefit politically or materially, or both, by the overthrow of the social state by violence and massacre, by the ravishing of women and the destruction of property, by robbery, arson, and all the other social crimes known to the calendar, are enthusiastic members of this so-called organization. And now in the capital of the country this movement raises its voice, utters its treasons, counsels the overthrow of the Government, and lauds to the skies the substitution of social and political aggregations, the experiments in which in unhappy Russia have simply been appalling.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 14078) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not wish to take more than a moment of the time of the Senate in relation to this increase from $125,000 to $200,000 and the purposes for which it was granted.

I have here a statement—I do not know whether or not it is the same statement referred to by the Senator from Alabama, but it is a confidential statement from the State Department. I have no right whatever to put it in the RECORD, nor do I believe that it would be a proper thing to do, for it has specific reference to certain work that would be undertaken in case the full $500,000 were appropriated. Perhaps I may refer to some of the objects of investigation intended to be made by the representatives of the State Department in case the full appropriation asked for is made. I will call the attention of the Senate to a few of them, as follows: Foreign governmental monopolies; loans to Latin America; British trade aggression; foreign customs; difficulties of American exporters; Chinese railway and other loans; Japanese questions; and other loans to various countries. These questions were to be fully gone into by employees to be paid out of the appropriation under discussion. I think I am well within bounds when I state that the particular question referred to, namely, radio communication between North America and South America, requires special men to undertake the investigation, and we allowed 10 experts at $3,500 each to assist in this work.

They asked for an increased number of drafting officers to aid in important drafting work and to act as chiefs of divisions or upon work connected with foreign relations. They asked for 16 drafting officers at $4,500, 25 at $4,000, 32 at $3,500, 20 at $3,000, 15 at $2,500. Of assistant solicitors they asked for 3 at $3,500, 3 at $3,000, 2 at $2,500, and of law clerks they asked for 1 at $2,500, 2 at $2,250, and 3 at $2,200. The House granted, of the drafting officers, 36 out of the 108 asked for; it granted 7 of the assistant solicitors, and 6 of the law clerks. Then they asked, Mr. President, for $500,000 for temporary employees outside of those I have just mentioned.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us how many of those have been perpetuated in the bill or at least indorsed by the Senate committee?

Mr. SMOOT. Thirty-six of the drafting officers, 7 of the assistant solicitors, and 6 law clerks have been provided by the Senate committee; but the request was for 108 drafting officers, 8 assistant solicitors, and 6 law clerks, all of whom are to be located here in the District of Columbia. Every one wants our foreign commerce to increase and appropriates money for the purpose of assisting our manufacturers. Our manufacturers in this country may send samples of goods made for the American market and quote prices that perhaps would compete with the prices of other countries, but we are never going to sell goods in foreign lands to any extent until the goods are put up in the way the foreign countries want them. We can not convert them to our way of thinking as to the size of the packages or the manner in which they are to be distributed. They decide that question for themselves.

The reason Germany was so successful in the past in controlling the trade of South America and other countries of the world her commercial attachés went to the different countries, visited the merchants of those countries, and asked, "How do you want your goods put up? We will put them up in any way that you desire; we will place upon them any marks that you desire, or furnish you any colors your people wish." That done, it was easy for the German commercial attachés to secure orders from those countries. On the other hand, in the past we have gone to the foreign merchant, and said, "This is the way we make the goods, and this the way we pack them in the United States; they are to be shipped as we direct and the terms are as we dictate, and if you want to buy them on those terms and conditions well and good." All that has got to be changed before our commerce with foreign countries increases to any great extent, as we all hope it will.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have passed over the provision that we are now considering. I desire to submit at least one, and possibly two amendments to it. I have not had opportunity to formulate them. The discussion has revealed to me a condition which I think calls for an amendment.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, does not the Senator think we ought to have more Senators present when a matter of this importance is being considered? There are only a few Senators in the Chamber, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Calder	Jones, Wash.	Moses	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Kellogg	New	Smoot
Colt	Kenyon	Nugent	Spencer
Curtis	King	Overman	Sterling
Dillingham	Kirby	Page	Swanson
Fernald	La Follette	Penrose	Thomas
Fletcher	Lenroot	Poindexter	Thompson
Hale	Lewis	Pollock	Trammell
Harding	Lodge	Pomerene	Underwood
Henderson	McKellar	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Hollis	McNary	Shafroth	Warren
Johnson, Cal.	Martin, Ky.	Sheppard	Wolcott
Jones, N. Mex.	Martin, Va.	Sherman

Mr. McKELLAR. I announce the absence of the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] on account of illness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] on official business.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is necessarily detained by illness.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] on official business.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] on account of official business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this morning, after the Senate had agreed to certain amendments to the provision as to clerical and other assistants to Senators—the provision which is found at the top of page 10 of the bill—it became necessary to change the amendment preceding that, found on pages 8 and 9 of the bill, referring to the different committees named in that amendment. It was passed over, with the understanding that as soon as that amendment was finally perfected to conform to the amendment on page 10 a reconsideration of that amendment would be had.

I now move that the vote by which the amendment on pages 8 and 9 of the bill was adopted may be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Now, as a substitute for the committee amendment, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to substitute for the language proposed to be inserted by the committee the following:

Agriculture and Forestry—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Appropriations—clerk, $5,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $2,500 each; three assistant clerks, at $1,500 each; laborer, $720. Banking and Currency—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; two assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Claims—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Commerce—clerk $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Conference minority of the Senate—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $1,800; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500. District of Columbia—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Education and Labor—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Finance—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,600; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each; 2 experts (1 for the majority and 1 for the minority), at $2,000 each. Foreign Relations—clerk, $3,000; assistant clerk, $2,220; assistant clerk, $1,500. Immigration—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Indian Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Interoceanic Canals—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Interstate Commerce—clerk, $2,500; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; assistant clerk, $1,500. Judiciary—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,800 each; assistant clerk, $1,500. Manufactures—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Military Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each; assistant clerk during the period of the war, $1,500. Naval Affairs—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,220; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Pacific Islands and Porto Rico—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Pensions—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; 4 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Philippines—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Post Offices and Post Roads—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $2,000; 3 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Printing—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Privileges and Elections—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500. Public Buildings and Grounds—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,600; assistant clerk, $1,500. Public Lands—clerk, $2,500; assistant clerk, $1,800; 2 assistant clerks, at $1,500 each. Rules—clerk, $2,720, to include full compensation for the preparation biennially of the Senate Manual, under the direction of the Committee on Rules; assistant clerk, $1,800; assistant clerk, $1,500; in all, $203,260.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, that simply conforms to the action taken by the Senate in the case of the clerical and other assistants to Senators not holding chairmanships of other committees not enumerated in this bill; also to Senators who, when in the minority, are not entitled to a committee chairmanship, but are entitled to two clerks.

I think myself that the Senators are going to be criticized for these increases. I have already heard some rumblings of it in the hallways; but that is what was decided by the Senate, and as long as it has been decided, of course, this amendment ought to be agreed to, in order to conform to the action of the Senate shortly after 12 o'clock to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). The Chair understands that this is offered as a substitute for the committee amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. As a substitute for the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Utah for the committee amendment.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the adoption of the substitute in lieu of the House provision.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to move an amendment to make the Vice President's force conform to what has been done in reference to that of Senators. I ask consent to take up page 2, and move this amendment: On page 2, line 8, strike out the words "messenger, $1,440," and make it read "clerk, $1,600."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Also, strike out the word "telegraph," before the word "page," in line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand, there was a request made by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], my colleague, to pass over the amendment on line 19, page 35.

Mr. KING. No, Mr. President. I did make such a request that it be passed over, and the acting chairman of the committee has assented to the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let the Chair understand: Was the order that the entire paragraph be passed over?

Mr. KING. It is the entire paragraph for the reason that I want to submit two amendments to the paragraph.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the Senator desire to delay the adoption of this portion of the paragraph that relates to drafted men taking back their positions in the Government employ?

Mr. KING. Oh, no.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then the Senator's request relates to the amendment in line 19?

Mr. KING. Yes; and then I shall offer a further amendment prohibiting the use by this department of money from any other source than that carried in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. That can be done at any time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the request of the Senator relates only to the amendment on line 19?

Mr. KING. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that has been declared, by a previous occupant of the chair, agreed to.

Mr. KING. If that was done, it was prematurely done.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator from Utah that if it has been agreed to, of course he will have an opportunity to ask for a vote in the Senate; but I will not raise an objection to it if he desires to call it up.

Mr. KING. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I should like the amendment to the other section of the paragraph to be passed over.

Mr LODGE. Mr. President, I do not understand that the next amendment has been disposed of, at lines 21 and 22.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that it was declared agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I was about to leave the Senate Chamber, and I asked that that might be passed over until I returned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator is here now.

Mr. LODGE. I am perfectly willing to go on now; I only wanted to be heard in regard to it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to its being taken up again.

Mr. LODGE. I was not aware that we had gone beyond the amendment in line 19.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will state to the Senator, in reference to that amendment, that the situation is this: The House inserted a proviso that came from the floor of the House, I understand, as follows:

Provided, That no part of any appropriation herein shall be used unless all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions appropriated for herein, if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

As the House provision stood, it limited that paragraph entirely to cases within this bill; and the very next bill that came to the Appropriations Committee had a similar provision. The committee did not see any reason why we should take this matter in detail and attempt to legislate in reference to each separate bill; but we thought it was wiser and better to make the provision apply to all of the employees of the Government who have left positions in the Government employ and gone to the front as soldiers, whether volunteers or drafted men, providing that the positions should be open to them when they came back. So, in order to accomplish that, we struck out certain words of the House provision and left it so that it will read as follows:

Provided, That all former Government employees who have been drafted or enlisted in the military service of the United States in the war with Germany shall be reinstated on application to their former positions if they have received an honorable discharge and are qualified to perform the duties of the position.

In other words, when they went to war, the statement was made to these young men by the heads of various executive bureaus that if they volunteered and went into the war their places would be kept open for them. It seems that there may have been one or two instances where some difficulties have arisen. So far as I am concerned, I think the Government should keep its pledge; that it owes it to these men who have left governmental positions, now that the war is over, when they come out of the Army to reinstate them. That is all that this provision carries. That is the purpose of it, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. LODGE. I am in sympathy with the provision, and I think that pledge ought to be kept; but striking out those words leaves it——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It makes it universal, instead of limiting it to this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I thought it was limited even more narrowly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, no. The purpose of striking out these words is to make this clause universal and make it apply to the entire Federal service; and that is what ought to be done.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If you leave in those words you limit it merely to the clerks who are employed under the legislative bill. If you strike them out the provision will be applicable to all the clerks that are employed under the legisative bill, the sundry civil bill, the deficiency bill, and every other function of the Government.

Mr. LODGE. I think it is wise to make it universal in its application. My point is a slightly different one, and that is that under the House language the departments are compelled to take these soldiers back. If you leave that out, it seems to me to be left very much at the discretion of the department.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This language is not changed in any way except the limitation that was put in here, probably on the part of whoever offered it in the House, to make the provision in order. The House provision was a limitation on the appropriation, on the expenditure of the money.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And unless it was done by unanimous consent, the proponent of the measure in the House could not have put it in this bill except by offering it in that form.

Mr. LODGE. No; I understand that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The committee, though, makes it a universal law. I think that is all that is necessary. If the Senator desires to put more teeth in it, he can add a provision that any head of a department or other governmental officer who refuses to comply shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and punished; but I do not think that will be necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I just want to suggest that if the language were left as the House put it, none of this money could be expended until they are sure that every soldier who will be discharged will be reinstated.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, that is very undesirable.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; as the Senator says, that would be undesirable.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, the language of the bill as the Senate has it is mandatory, and that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it will be, and therefore the committee did not propose any punitive features to it.

Mr. LODGE. I agree with the Senator about its universal application. I think that ought to be. I only wanted to make sure that it would be carried out, and if the Senator thinks mandatory terms are sufficient I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I really do not think there will be much trouble in the executive departments anywhere; but a case might arise where, by reason of some employee being in, they would attempt to put the soldier somewhere else. With this provision in the bill, however, it is mandatory, and the Government head of a bureau or of a division or of a department can not refuse to reinstate the soldier if he is in such condition that he can do the work.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the only fear I had in regard to this provision was that being a proviso it might apply only to the appropriation of the $200,000. I think it would be very much safer to strike out the word "Provided" and make a new section of the wording as the committee reported it, and then there would be no question at all about it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. LODGE. In that connection I want to say that when I read it first it seemed to me to apply only to the $200,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the fear I have had all the time.

Mr. LODGE. And I think there is a possibility of doubt about that. I think it would be well if it could be placed somewhere else in the bill, so that it will be clearly applicable to all cases.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask that the word "Provided" be stricken out, and that a new paragraph be inserted at that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the colon and insert a period, and strike out the word "Provided" and the comma following and begin a new paragraph with the word "That."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment on lines 21 and 22 was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will continue the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 36, line 3, after the word "act," to insert "except the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service," so as to make the clause read:

No money appropriated by any other act, except the act making appropriations for the Diplomatic and Consular Service, shall be used during the fiscal year 1920 for employment and payment of personal service in the Department of State in the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 10, on page 40, the last paragraph read being as follows:

Arlington Building and annex, Vermont Avenue and H Street: For the following employees for the operation of the buildings: Assistant superintendent, $2,000; chief engineer, $1,400; 2 assistant engineers, at $1,200 each; 6 firemen; 13 elevator conductors, at $720 each; 2 oilers at $900 each; electrician, $1,400; 2 wiremen at $1,200 each; plumber, $1,200; plumbers' helper, $1,000; painter, $1,200; 2 carpenters, at $1,200 each; janitor, $1,200; assistant janitor, $1,000; 25 male laborers, at $660 each (4 to attend toilets and 2 to relieve elevator conductors when required); 3 female laborers, at $660 each; captain of the watch, $1,400; 3 lieutenants of the watch, at $900 each; 26 watchmen; head of char force, $840; 3 assistant heads of char force, at $720 each; 190 charwomen; in all, $122,980: Provided, That this appropriation shall be used for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Arlington Building and annex only for housing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance: Provided further, That any space in said building and annex not needed for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance may be assigned by the Secretary of the Treasury for the use of other offices of the Treasury Department.

Mr. SMOOT. I had not noticed that provision before, but if we adopt the amendment providing for a commission to look into the rent of the different buildings for the Government, will not this conflict with the authority provided for in that amendment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As far as I am concerned, though I can not speak for the committee, I am willing to have it go out. I think there is logic in what the Senator says in connection with it, and I am willing to have it go out.

Mr. SMOOT. And then go into conference?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And let it go to conference.

Mr. SMOOT. It does seem to me if the amendment found in the bill is passed it certainly will conflict with this provision.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the Senator, we have a specific provision here for a legislative commission to assign space and room, and there is no reason why we should legislate on this subject if we are going to turn it over to the commission. I ask unanimous consent that the proviso be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. As long as it is going into conference, the best way would be to strike out both provisos after the numerals "$122,980."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Because the first proviso states that this appropriation shall be used for the care, maintenance, and protection of the Arlington annex building only for housing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. The commission may decide to put that bureau in an entirely different building.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think both provisos had best go out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out the two provisos, beginning on page 40, line 3, down to and including line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Alabama. I understand that the bill provides for an increase for the general employees of $240 a year and for the War Risk Insurance Bureau employees of $120. My question is, In what part of the bill is that provision?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the very last part of the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. So that the question, whatever merit there may be in it, may be considered when we reach the last part of the bill?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Oh, yes. I will not stop now to explain it, but I shall be very glad, when we reach the proposition, to explain on what the action of the committee was founded.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," at the top of page 42, to strike out:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the provisions of the act of March 23, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 241), when instituting inquiry into the solvency of bonding companies doing business with the Government, $5,000; the expense of each examination to be reimbursed by the bonding company examined.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to page 44, line 6, the last clause read being as follows:

Bureau of War Risk Insurance: For expenses of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as authorized by law: For salaries of the director and commissioners, and of such deputies, assistants, accountants, experts, clerks, and other employees in the District of Columbia, as the Secretary of the Treasury may deem necessary, $9,509,630.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask why that is left a lump appropriation of over $9,000,000. Why is it left to the Secretary of the Treasury to establish all those salaries?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator, when the War Risk Insurance Bureau was organized it was organized practically overnight. It was a very large organization that brought into its policyholders some two million men almost instantly—that is, within a few days—and there was no opportunity at that time, and has not been since that time, to work out a detailed organization. As a matter of fact we could not do it now, but we have in the bill a provision providing for a commission to investigate all the bureaus, divisions, and departments and fix a basis of salary and employment. It was perfectly impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to stop to do the work, but realizing the importance of what the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, not only in reference to the War Risk Bureau but in reference to a number of new bureaus that have been created under a lump-sum appropriation, and in reference to a number of old bureaus and departments that have lump-sum appropriations and where the statutory rolls are a misfit at this time, the committee has reported in the last pages of this bill a provision for the creation of a commission—three Senators to be appointed by the Vice President, three Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House—who shall take up the matter and endeavor to work out an entire reorganization of the departments.

Of course, that is not fully an answer to the Senator's question why it has not been done in this instance, but so far as the Senate Committee on Appropriations is concerned, if we had attempted to take the 11,000 clerks and work out a complete organization for them between now and the 4th of March—we got this bill about a week ago—and put them all on a statutory salary we would have had to scrap everything else we were doing practically, because it would have taken our entire time.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that, Mr. President. I desired to call attention to it because I think this lump-sum system is a very bad one. I think it is all wrong. I believe we ought to have the system that was pursued for many, many years in all the departments. This does not settle even, I think, the salary of the commissioner. There is over $9,000,000 appropriated to be spent and allotted as the Secretary of the Treasury sees fit, and another million dollars that the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] calls my attention to. I do not think that is a sound or economical way of appropriating money. I am glad the Senator has a scheme for dealing with all these lump-sum appropriations. I have not read the amendment yet, but I hope some provision has been made for immediate action on it; I mean immediate on the part of the commission.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It provides for the commission to go to work at once. It is to be composed of Members of the Senate and the House. We could hardly put in a provision requiring it, but we must assume that the men appointed from this body and the House of Representatives will take immediate action.

Mr. LODGE. I hope they will before we come around to any more appropriation bills, for I think appropriating nine or ten million dollars to be spent in this very loose way is wrong in principle. I believe it is a very bad system.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to call the attention of the Senator to the hearings by the subcommittee upon this bill, on page 152. He will find a complete statement in the record as to the number of employees in the War Risk Bureau, the exact salaries that have been paid, and all the information in reference to them at this time. Of course, it can be changed by Executive order. I ask, in connection with what I have said, that this schedule be printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

NOTE.—Average yearly salary, $1,102.25.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this lump sum is not abused like other lump-sum appropriations found in this and other bills. There are 5,335 employees of the War Risk Bureau whose salary grade is $1,100. It costs the Government for that one grade of clerks alone $5,868,500. That is a great part of the lump sum of $9,000,000 appropriated.

All that the Senator from Massachusetts has said about lump-sum appropriations I fully indorse. I not only think it is a bad practice, but I think it is a wicked and extravagant practice. Before the war we had most of the lump-sum appropriations eliminated from our appropriation bills; but I am afraid it is going to take quite a number of years to get rid of them again. However, I do believe the commission which will be appointed if the House agrees to the Senate provision ought to begin immediately upon the work and force every bureau and every division and every department of the Government to inform the Committees on Appropriations of the House and Senate just how many clerks they want and just what salaries they are going to pay them.

Mr. LODGE. I am glad the Senator feels that way. It seems to me that it ought to be attended to and attended to at once, that they all ought to be eliminated from the law, and that wherever possible it ought to be done now.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I wish to occupy the time of the Senate for just a moment. It will be impossible to complete this bill to-night.

I have had called to my attention a matter dealing with a bureau of the Treasury Department, the War Risk Bureau, that I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate now because it may perhaps lead to a remedy of a situation existing there.

I have a letter from a soldier, or a man who was recently a soldier, living in New York City, who was discharged from the Army August 28. At the time of his enlistment he allotted $15 of his pay to his wife. He had a minor child, and his wife's allotment therefore was $40. It appears that regardless of the fact that he has been discharged from the Army his wife is still receiving the $40 allotment. I have here the checks for September, October, November, December, and January, and I shall at the request of the soldier's family return the checks to the Treasury Department and urge that hereafter greater care be taken in paying these allotments months after a soldier has actually left the Army.

Differing from this situation, I have a letter here from a citizen of the city of New York. This lady writes me:

Hon. WILLIAM M. CALDER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am the mother of Arthur Sweetbaum, a private in Company G, Fourth United States Infantry. He was wounded in action on October 7, 1918, and was treated in various hospitals in France until he finally arrived in Convalescent Hospital No. 5.

On December 10, 1918, he was sent to St. Nazaire, preparatory to shipment home. This morning we received a letter from him, stating that the records in his case have either been lost or mislaid, and that he has no idea when he will get home, in spite of the fact that he is still suffering from the wound he received in his arm. This is not an isolated case, as you will find upon investigation that there are about 2,000 similar cases at St. Nazaire—that is, of cases where no records can be located.

He has not been paid any money by the Government for services abroad for the past seven months—

Mr. President, in one case we find a wounded soldier without pay for seven months, and in another we find the wife of a soldier who has been out of the Army for five months receiving her allotment of $40 every month, despite the fact that her husband is not now in the service—

He had collected some souvenirs while at the front, and he was compelled to dispose of them in order to secure a few cents for himself. The Christmas package and numerous other packages and letters sent to him have never reached him. Why, even a United States money order did not reach him. We are having returned to us letters that we sent to him in September, 1918, with the indorsement that he was wounded. In this morning's letter he states, "For God's sake, don't send me anything here, as I don't receive a thing."

I emphasize the above, as I have just received (at 6.30 p. m.) another letter sent to my son by a friend of his, and dated September 30, 1918, and also indorsed "Wounded 5/11/18 C. P. O. Tours."

The thorough incompetence of some officials in the War Department is enough to drive one insane. It appears that once a man is wounded he loses all rights; he is left to shift for himself; he is hemmed in with a lot of red tape, and no attempt is made to get him his salary or mail.

In the name of a native-born American, wounded in action in defense of his country's honor, I appeal to you to help me get my son back to the United States.

I assure you that I will greatly appreciate anything you will do for me. Thanking you in advance, I am,

Yours, truly, (Mrs.) GUSSIE SWEETBAUM.

Mr. President, it is not my custom to bring matters of this kind to the attention of the Senate; I usually take them up with the War Department in an effort to have them straightened out there; but the fact that such gross neglect can exist, that the families of some soldiers receive their allotments after the soldiers have left the service, while in other cases soldiers wounded in action can not be sent home because their papers have been mislaid and can not get their pay for seven months warrants me in bringing up the subject here, in the hope that men will not be paid after they have left the service and that men will be paid who have been wounded in action.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 3, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Oh Thou, who art from everlasting to everlasting, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, help us to subject ourselves to Thy will, since Thy laws are inexorable. It is writ: Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.

For he that soweth to his flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting.

May we sow good seeds, that our harvest may be abundant in the Spirit. For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journals of the proceedings of Saturday, February 1, and Sunday, February 2, were read and approved.

THE IMMIGRATION BILL.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleagues, Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. POWERS, of the Committee on Immigration, be allowed to file minority views during to-day on the bill H. R. 15302 in the nature of a dissent from the four-year proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that his colleagues, Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. POWERS, be allowed to file minority views during the day on the bill H. R. 15302, the immigration bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 5279. An act to authorize the resumption of voluntary enlistment in the Regular Army, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. OLLIE M. JAMES, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Senator from Kentucky.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

Also:

Resolved, That the Senate assembles as a mark of respect to the memory of Hon. WILLIAM JOEL STONE, late a Senator from the State of Missouri, in pursuance of an order heretofore made, to enable his associates to pay proper tribute to his high character and distinguished public services.

Resolved, That the Senate again expresses its profound sorrow at the death of the late Senator from Missouri.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8828. An act increasing the limit of cost for the acquisition of a public-building site at Yonkers, N. Y.

EDITORIAL IN WASHINGTON POST.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial which appeared in the Washington Post this morning be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks to have read an editorial in this morning's Post. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER and Mr. WALSH objected.

Mr. SIEGEL. I make the point of order that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, at the request of a number of gentlemen on both sides of the House, I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair was waiting for. [Laughter.]

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15462, the Military Academy bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remind the House that two hours is set aside to-day for the consideration of the Military Academy bill.

Mr. GARNER. From this moment?

Mr. MANN. No; from the meeting of the House.

Mr. GARNER. From the time that we go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole can decide that. [Laughter.]

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SABATH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fifteen enlisted musicians, at $51 each per month, $9,180.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask that the Clerk read an important editorial in this morning's Washington Post in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

EXPLANATIONS IN ORDER.

There are a lot of things that happened in this war which remain to be explained. Perhaps we shall have to wait until the peace treaty is signed and the whole business closed up formally, but eventually they will have to be explained. The public will insistently demand an explanation, and the returning soldiers will see to it that this demand is complied with.

Is it true that Gen. Enoch H. Crowder, Provost Marshal General, who worked out the selective-service plan and successfully executed it, was reprimanded by Gen. March, Chief of Staff, for giving his views to a congressional committee? It has been so reported, and the report even goes so far as to aver that the reprimand has been written into Gen. Crowder's Army record. Nothing official has been announced about it, and Gen. Crowder, being a true soldier, has kept his lips sealed. The people would like to know the truth about it.

Why was Gen. W. L. Sibert, who commanded the first contingent of the American Army sent abroad, relieved of his command and sent home before our forces became involved in the fighting? Gen. Sibert was picked to lead the advance guard of the Yanks. He put them through their training period in France, and there was every reason to expect that he would command the first American Army of the expeditionary forces, with the rank of lieutenant general. Suddenly it was learned that he was on his way back, and upon reaching the United States he was given charge of the Chemical Warfare Service, a highly important assignment, but far from the ultimate goal of a soldier's ambition. Sibert, being a true soldier, has kept silent, but the public would like to know why he was sent back.

Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards went to France in command of the Twenty-sixth Division, composed of the New England National Guard. He led his troops through the hard fighting along the Meuse, where they sustained heavy losses, but made a splendid record, which added luster to the fame of the American forces. Suddenly, and without apparent reason, Gen. Edwards was relieved of his command and sent back to the United States. No reason has been given, and Gen. Edwards, being a true soldier has said nothing. The people are curious to know why.

It has been charged upon the floor of the Senate that replacements in the Twenty-eighth Division, composed of the Pennsylvania National Guard, were made from men who had had no training, many of them never even having fired a rifle. This division sustained heavy losses in the Argonne fight, the untrained soldiers being mowed down by the hundreds. Returning officers of the division corroborate the charge. Is it true? And if so, who was to blame for it?

Responsible officers assert that the Thirty-fifth Division, composed of the National Guard of Missouri and Kansas, after six days of continuous, grueling fighting in the Argonne Forest, tottered back to the rest billets, completely exhausted, to be met by an inspection officer, who stepped out of a limousine and cast his professional eye over the division, which had just emerged from an inferno. This officer's report is on file in the archives of the American Army, it is said. It criticizes the Thirty-fifth Division unmercifully for its dirty uniforms and lax discipline, complaining there was too much familiarity between officers and men. Imagine a command being submitted to inspection under such circumstances! The public would like to know the details of this incident.

These are a few matters, selected at random, which require explanation. There are many others, possibly the great majority, susceptible of explanation, but all containing mysterious features, which the people will insist upon having made plain. Army officials are clothed with great power and a wide range of authority during war, but in the end they must give an accounting to the people for its use, just as financial officers must render a stewardship of funds intrusted to them. They must stand ready at the proper time to justify their official acts, for that time is certain to come.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, I have a resolution which I am introducing to-day calling for the appointment of a select committee of eight to be appointed by the Speaker to investigate all the charges made on the floor of this House regarding conditions in the Army at home and abroad. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIEGEL. The resolution which I have introduced reads as follows:

House resolution 545.

Whereas it has been announced in the press that no record of at least 10,000 men who went abroad with the Army of the United States can now be found, and that their names do not appear either in the casualty lists or otherwise accounted for, although the armistice was signed nearly three months ago; and

Whereas serious charges affecting the Military Establishment of the United States and the integrity and honor of a number of its high officers have been made on the floor of this House during the past two weeks, and statements have appeared in the public press affecting the standing of a general who helped to make the draft a success; and

Whereas numerous complaints have been made of the manner in which mail is now being delivered to men in the military service abroad, and there has been a constant flow of criticisms and complaints about the manner in which allotments made by soldiers are being paid to their relatives and the same kind of complaint of the manner in which salaries are being paid to soldiers; and

Whereas a large number of complaints of the manner in which discharges from the Army are now being effected with the constant refusal of superior officers to obey the orders issued by the War Department have been disclosed on the floor of this House; and

Whereas the said statements and alleged conditions seriously affect the morale of the United States Army: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of eight Members of the House, who have been elected to the Sixty-sixth Congress, to be evenly divided between both leading political parties, and that said committee be instructed to inquire into all the charges which have heretofore been made upon the floor of this House affecting the United States Army, whether at home or abroad; of complaints regarding the reporting of casualties amongst our troops; the delivery of mail abroad; the manner and methods adopted for demobilization of the Army of the United States; the manner and methods of which payments of allotments and salaries have been made; and all complaints regarding treatment being accorded to our troops on transports and hospitals, and for such purposes it shall have power to send for persons and papers and force their appearance before said committee, and to administer oaths and shall have the right to make a report at any time.

Under the rules of the House it must go to the Rules Committee. The statements made on the floor of this House by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. GALLIVAN, by the gentleman from Connecticut, Col. TILSON, by the gentlemen from Illinois, Messrs. MANN, GRAHAM, and DENISON, and numerous other Members of the House, regardless of party affiliations, make it the paramount duty of the House of Representatives to stop talking and take some action, as in the end the American people will be the final judges of what should have been done by their Representatives at a time when such serious allegations have disturbed the homes of thousands and brought untold sufferings in the minds of many thousands more. It is a call to duty that can not be evaded.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one sergeant, senior grade, $900: Provided, That the enlisted man on duty in the office of the disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, performing the duty of sergeant, senior grade, shall have the rank, pay, and allowances and retirement of that grade, as is now or may hereafter be allowed quartermaster sergeants, senior grade, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph just read, and I would like to ask what is the occasion of having to provide this legislation?

Mr. DENT. The gentleman means to provide homes?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. DENT. The explanation is given on page 25 of the hearings:

This is for the purpose of placing the enlisted man on duty in the office of the disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, on the same basis as quartermaster sergeant, senior grade, Quartermaster Corps of the Army. Items along similar lines have been approved by Congress for enlisted men on duty in the office of the commandant of cadets and at headquarters, United States Military Academy. The enlisted man performing the duties of sergeant, senior grade, in the office of the disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, should be permanently attached to the Military Academy, and it is urgently recommended that this item be approved.

This man, besides doing the ordinary work of a quartermaster sergeant, senior grade, is now doing the additional work of a first sergeant of the Quartermaster Corps and the first sergeant of the Motor Transport Corps, and he is in a very responsible position as assistant to the chief clerk of the office, and he is now, during the absence of the chief clerk on account of sickness, acting as chief clerk. It is very necessary that he should be a permanent employee of the Military Academy to that extent, and this increase is very little over what he draws as a sergeant, first class, of the Quartermaster Corps.

Mr. WALSH. That is the explanation given the committee?

Mr. DENT. That is the explanation given to the committee.

Mr. WALSH. That Congress has heretofore provided for similar items and therefore should provide for this one?

Mr. KAHN. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. It seems that this man is doing the ordinary work of a quartermaster sergeant of the senior grade and also additional work of a sergeant, Quartermaster Corps. He is doing the work of two men, and for that reason the superintendent of the academy suggests that he be given this extra allowance.

Mr. DENT. In addition to that he is assisting the chief clerk of the academy.

Mr. WALSH. What is the extra allowance?

Mr. DENT. The total amount would be $900.

Mr. WALSH. What about the retirement? That is a new feature. What additional privileges are conferred by the retirement privileges of that grade?

Mr. DENT. It would raise his pay to $75, and he would get the retirement pay of a quartermaster sergeant.

Mr. WALSH. This man is detailed permanently to the Military Academy at West Point?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. And he has been there during the past two years?

Mr. DENT. I do not remember how long he has been there.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon that proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is made against the proviso, and I am inclined to think that it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of civilians: For pay of one teacher of music, $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the item just read. I wish to inquire whether the committee in recommending the increases of salary to these instructors took into consideration the flat increase that is going to be voted to all persons in the Government service?

Mr. DENT. The committee did take that into consideration and declined to give increases asked for at the academy upon that account. They asked for many increases of all these civilians, and the committee refused to grant them, on the ground of the general provision of the Appropriations Committee in the legislative bill, believing that that would take care of them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here we have an increase of $300 in the compensation of this teacher of music. If this is granted, this employee will receive $540 increase for his services in a single year, or $420 when you consider that he received $120 this past year.

Mr. DENT. He would not be taken care of under that general provision. That was the explanation they make of that.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. He is not a civil-service employee; he does not come under that general provision for increases.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman certain that that provision does not extend to civilian employees carried in this bill? I hardly think the limitation upon the legislative bill excludes the civilian employees at the Military Academy. I will read the only exceptions which are noted in the law:

The provisions of this section shall not apply to the following: Employees paid from the postal revenues and sums which may be advanced from the Treasury to meet deficiencies in the postal revenues; employees of the Panama Canal on the Canal Zone; employees of the Alaskan Engineering Commission in Alaska; employees paid from lump-sum appropriations in bureaus, divisions, commissions, or any other governmental agencies or employments created by law since January 1, 1916; employees whose duties require only a portion of their time, except charwomen, who shall be included; employees whose services are utilized for brief periods at intervals; persons employed by or through corporations, firms, or individuals acting for or on behalf of or as agents of the United States or any department or independent establishment of the Government of the United States in connection with construction work or the operation of plants; employees who receive a part of their pay from any outside sources under cooperative arrangements with the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia; employees who serve voluntarily or receive only a nominal compensation, and employees who may be provided with special allowances because of their service in foreign countries. The provisions of this section shall not apply to employees of the railroads taken over by the United States, and nothing contained herein shall be deemed a recognition of the employees of such railroads as employees of the United States.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Does that act start off, in the first place, by limiting the ones to receive that increase to those who are employed under the civil service?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. It starts out in this way:

That all civilian employees of the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia, who receive a total of compensation at the rate of $2,500 per annum or less, except as otherwise provided in this section, shall receive—

And so forth.

Those who are provided for otherwise are those that I have read in the paragraph following the first paragraph of the provision.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I know the general understanding or information upon which we proceeded seems to have been that he was not included among those who would get that increase.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] suggests that this increase applies only to employees in the District. I wish to correct him in that, because it applies to every person in the Government service except those I have named.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am of the opinion that these employees get the benefit of the increases whether they are civil-service employees or not, and for the information of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the other members of the committee I wish to read a few sentences from the hearings on page 35.

On page 35, in discussing certain civil employees, Col. Timberlake said:

Col. TIMBERLAKE. They live at Highland Falls, and some of them live at Newburgh, or wherever they can rent a house in the vicinity of West Point. Those men who live at Highland Falls and at Newburgh, besides paying their regular living expenses, have to pay also railroad commutation.

Mr. GORDON. Does the increase of $120 a year, which was given to Government employees last year, apply to these employees?

Col. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir; that has applied to them, and if that amount of increase is going to be permanent they would not need the increases asked for in this item.

On that theory we cut out all increases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DENT. May I ask the gentleman from Wisconsin where he gets the impression that this is an increase?

Mr. STAFFORD. I was under the impression that this teacher of music received $1,700 last year.

Mr. DENT. No; I think the gentleman is mistaken. This is the same amount, apparently, from the way it is printed in the bill, that we have been carrying from year to year.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I am in error——

Mr. MANN. One thousand seven hundred dollars was the amount carried in the current law.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois says that is the amount carried in the current law. Has the gentleman from Alabama the current law before him, so as to confirm my impression?

Mr. DENT. I thought I had it here.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Illinois confirms my notation that it is $1,700.

Mr. TILSON. It is evident there is a mistake in the committee print of the bill, in which all changes were supposed to be printed in italics. In this case it does not seem to be printed in italics.

Mr. MANN. The current law provides for an appropriation of $1,700, with a proviso, and among other things in the proviso is that the teacher of music shall receive the pay and have the rank of a first lieutenant not mounted, and the appropriation is $1,700 with this proviso. How they get the money I do not pretend to say, but that is the language of the law.

Mr. KAHN. A first lieutenant's pay is $2,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not desirous of reducing the pay of any employee of the Government——

Mr. DENT. Somebody has misplaced the copy of my bill here, and I have sent for another——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, as the individual is now receiving $2,000 and $120, as I take it he will under this provision receive $2,000 and the $240.

Mr. MANN. I suppose, if he gets the pay and rank of a first lieutenant, that would exclude him from the $240, but I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. If that provision is carried in the existing bill, he was excluded from the $120 allowance last year.

Mr. MANN. Whether that is supposed to be permanent law or not I do not know.

Mr. STAFFORD. He would not be then a civilian employee.

Mr. KAHN. If it is permanent law.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why not make the salary $1,800, and he will have the $240 additional?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move to make it $1,800.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 12, strike out "$2,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,800."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The discussion indicates some confusion because the committee print of this appropriation bill has failed to carry a certain paragraph in italics. Not having the committee print, I can hardly follow it. I have asked two members of the committee what the item was, and they could not indicate.

Mr. KAHN. It is page 11, line 12.

Mr. MANN. All I have is the ordinary print, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, the gentleman from Illinois is following the bill line by line, of course, as he always does.

But I am not concerned as to the particular item but rather in regard to the building program at West Point. Consideration of the bill will run along in the regular way, with reservations of points of order here and there, and will pass, it being a little appropriation bill of only two million and some odd thousands of dollars, including $800,000, or thereabouts, for enlarging the buildings at West Point to take care of the enlarged classes. As appropriations go nowadays, that does not seem to be a very large sum; yet it is one item in the lot which are running to staggering totals. Can not the brakes be put on somewhere?

I had hoped that the Committee on Military Affairs would see that if its extension was necessary because of enlarged classes at West Point Military Academy the work could be authorized at one of the recently built military posts. For instance, at Camp Humphreys, just below the city of Washington, great sums have been expended to hard surface roads, put in permanent waterworks, sewerage, a splendid hospital, good barracks, good offices and quarters, might very well be utilized for some years. In fact, I have been informed that some of the West Point classes are now there, and I had hoped that they would continue that until the situation at West Point is normal again.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is not the gentleman mistaken about the permanent nature of the barracks down there?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, I should say they were permanent enough. There are some that would only last a few years, but might last 10 years if they were reroofed.

Mr. ANTHONY. If we had asked the department for an estimate of cost of construction for suitable buildings to house another West Point there, they would probably estimate about another $10,000,000. Would the gentleman be in favor of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No, indeed; I would not. Neither am I in favor of providing such elaborate accommodations for those who are training Army officers, the enlarged West Point classes, while we have this equipment, which will last a good many years.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. One of the tests of experience shows that to have a school of any kind you should try to have it under one roof, even if you have only one good teacher. What is the idea of scattering this thing from one side of the continent to the other?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If we could afford the appropriation, I think is would be a fine thing in a country as wide as the United States to have a West Point on the Pacific coast.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Then what will be the national standard for either West Point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It will be greatly improved and greatly ahead of the present standard, in my opinion.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Which one?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not care to carry on an argument. For a western West Point all that I have said concerning Camp Humphreys, Va., could be said for Camp Lewis, at Tacoma. Either place could be used for training the excess of West Point classes. But West Point wants improvement as a result of the war. It demands and is being given nearly a million. Who can count the millions it is proposed for the Government to spend? It is a hundred million here and a hundred million there—yes; ten million here and five million there. The Mississippi waterways ask for $4,000,000, and every proposal everywhere calls for money in proportion. Grant one-thousandth part of the demands and Congress will have to pass a tax measure every six months and authorize bond issues monthly. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of two expert assistant civilian instructors in military gymnastics, fencing, boxing, wrestling, and swimming, $4,000: Provided, that these civilian instructors employed in the department of modern languages and the department of tactics shall be entitled to public quarters and to the same allowances with respect to fuel and light as those of a first lieutenant when occupying public quarters.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

When I first examined this item I thought that the salary of $4,000 was pretty large, to say the least, and wondered what these experts in wrestling did to earn the money. But on reflection I have concluded there was one way in which they might earn it. If they would take up the matter of trying to find out the whereabouts of some of our wounded soldiers and wrestle with the War Department in the way every Member of Congress is compelled to do I am satisfied they could earn twice the amount called for here. So far as the fencing part of it is concerned, which is also spoken of in this paragraph, they would not be able to teach the War Department anything, I am sure, because they are adepts at warding off any question that is propounded to them. And when it comes to "passing the buck" whatever that phrase may mean; I am not sufficiently acquainted with the technique of the game to understand—the War Department is certainly an adept, because they turn the matter over, as has been suggested heretofore, to the Red Cross, and the Red Cross is not permitted to give Congressmen any information. After much delay we find out indirectly that the Red Cross has no information, so we have got nowhere. This matter with reference to finding out something about the wounded has passed the stage of protest. It ought to reach that of action. It is something that can not be explained or excused—that the War Department, with several cables at its command, can not find out anything with reference to these wounded men. Apparently, so far as the wounded men are concerned, they might just as well have been dropped off the face of the earth so far as the department is able to tell where they are, get any mail to them, or ascertain about their condition. We can not find out anything. They tell us, when they cable in extreme cases, that it will be 10 days before we can get an answer. We can find out all about the decorations of some woman's dress at the functions that have been going on over there in Europe on the very next day, but we can not find out anything about these wounded men for 10 days at most, even if we find out anything at all. And in nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of a thousand we do not find out anything at all.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The Government has control of these cables, has it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. It is apparent, then, that in the demonstration of Government control it is giving preference to reports of these diamond decorations at fancy receptions, and one thing and another, over the lists of wounded? Is that the conclusion?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not see how we can come to any other conclusion, the Government being in full control of these cables. What else is to be concluded? They give the color of the roses in the hair of some lady, full description of her dress, and with whom she rode. We get all such news the next day; but when it comes to anything in reference to these wounded men, when do you get it? I have had inquiries in there for a month and have not received a single scrap of information as to where these wounded men are and what condition they are in, while their anxious parents are fairly burning their hearts out by not knowing whether their boys are dead or alive.

I say that we ought not longer to put up with this condition. The War Department ought to be called upon, by a resolution or otherwise, to get busy with reference to these matters and use the power and control it has over these cables to let us know something about where these boys are. They are either dead or alive, on this side of the water or on the other. There is some place in which they might be located if there was any system or any sense in the manner in which they are conducting this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one assistant chief engineer of same, $1,100.

Mr. LITLLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, I have discovered some practical use for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is so often discredited as useless by rival sheets. On the 29th of January I read to the House some excerpts from the Official Bulletin issued by the Great Lakes Training Station of Illinois, and called the attention of the House to an order issued by a Capt. Scales and a Lieut. Commander Roberts, which stated that if any Congressman interfered in a man's behalf he would be involved in great trouble. I also called attention to an editorial in the Official Bulletin, which is published under the official supervision of those officers, stating that a great many of the young men at the Great Lakes station are a pack of scoundrels, liars, quitters, and falsifiers; that they had such a number of alleged sick grandmothers that the Persian pox must be sweeping the Middle West. I spoke of that in what I hoped would be in a helpful way. Referring to those officers in the gentlest manner possible, my urbane and tremulous remarks were published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD January 29. I ask unanimous consent now that the Clerk read a dispatch which I find in the Kansas City Times of February 1.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

GREAT LAKES, ILL., January 31.

An official order will be published in the next Monday's Great Lakes Bulletin allowing all men under training at the station to be released or discharged, according to a statement issued by Lieut. Commander Chester S. Roberts.

Mr. LITTLE. Now, gentlemen of the House, the criticisms of the lack of utility of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I think, are forever disposed of. The RECORD has not lived in vain, according to this statement in the Kansas City Times from one of the officers at the Great Lakes, to whose order and bulletin editorial I took such decided exception on this floor January 29, when I demanded their court-martial. They say that the boys in training there are to be discharged and released without further delay. [Applause.] I am reminded of the classical religious couplet:

Sound the loud timbrel o'er Egypt's dark sea;
Jehovah has triumphed, our people are free.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, in connection with the gentleman's remarks, I got a letter the other day in reference to the case of a young man, highly respectable, and of high character, belonging to one of the best families. He made an application for discharge and stated the facts in regard to his father's situation, his father having had a fall and having broken his leg and got crippled; and when the young man made the statement to his immediate officer he was told that he was a blank liar, adding some language that was not fit to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; that he was nothing but a dead beat, and would not be discharged. I do not know who that particular officer was, but I propose to find out.

Mr. LITTLE. If the gentleman will ascertain the name of the officer in question, I will join him in an earnest effort to see that he is placed in a proper place for a man of his character. I am now investigating a major who should be court-martialed for telling a soldier he would suffer if any more "damned civilians" interfered.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The dispatch only applies to the Navy, does it not?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes. The Great Lakes is purely a naval station, but Congress has just as much authority over the Army as over the Navy.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Does the gentleman know whether the War Department contemplates a similar order to discharge men?

Mr. LITTLE. I think if the Committee on Military Affairs will follow my suggestion of Saturday and request that the War Department institute courts-martial against the officers whose names have been mentioned here, it will terminate this series of insults against the American taxpayers and their Representatives in Congress. The facts were brought out in recent debates.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If the Military Affairs Committee did not know it is their business, they know it now, do they not?

Mr. LITTLE. They surely do if I have had the honor of their attention during the debate on this West Point bill. The chairman [Mr. DENT] inquired several times during Saturday's debate what remedy anyone had to offer, and with great regret I see in the RECORD I did not yield to him.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. I assume, from what the gentleman has just said, that the statements put in the RECORD a few days ago tended to help get these young men out of the Navy. If that is true, I want to congratulate the gentleman from Kansas, and I hope he will put further statements in the RECORD; and inasmuch as the Committee on Military Affairs of the House is powerless to get these men out the efforts of the gentleman from Kansas will be greatly appreciated, I assure him, by the members of the Committee on Military Affairs if he will only get the boys out.

Mr. LITTLE. The gentleman from Illinois kindly suggests that perhaps the speech I made on Wednesday, January 29, tended to help get these young men out of the Navy, as indicated by the statement made within two days thereafter that those in training on account of the war would be immediately discharged from the Great Lakes Naval Station. As you know, a few days ago the Navy was kind but firm in the conviction that it was going to do just as it pleased about it, especially without regard to any suggestions from Congressmen who happened to be familiar with the facts in regard to any particular application for discharge. I regret to say the Navy was more firm than it was kind. This dispatch from the Great Lakes indicates that it suddenly became more kind than it is firm on this question.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES] informs me that on the first or second day after my feeble protest against the Great Lakes order and my affable suggestion that the captain there be court-martialed, he was informed over the telephone by the department that it was preparing an order that all young men in the training schools, training camps, Naval Reserves, and in the Regular Navy who enlisted for the war only would be discharged on application without delay, which would evidently explain the prompt announcement from the Great Lakes. As a friend of the American Navy, I sincerely trust that he was correctly informed and that we shall never hear again that the men Congress employs to attend to any particular duty have become too big to listen to a Member of Congress just the same as they would to any other American citizen. As this speech of January 29 was, I believe, the first suggestion on this floor that anybody in the Navy should be court-martialed for insulting Congress and the American taxpayers, it does seem likely that the assumption of the gentleman from Illinois that this speech raised the fog that confused the naval authorities as to just where they stood. He kindly congratulates me and expresses the wish that I should put further statements in the RECORD containing similar information.

As a number of the Members of this House have requested me to spread on the RECORD certain correspondence I have had with officers in the Navy and Navy Department, I am doing so under permission to extend. I have had considerable correspondence with these officers with regard to discharges of men who went in for the war only and ought to be at home. Some of them have shown an excellent understanding of the situation, and some evidently had no comprehension of the rights of civilians. With some of them you could be very reasonable and with others you had to be very frank. On reading these letters you can reach a conclusion as to whether the letters helped produce the result. My idea has been that a frank and reasonable presentation of the facts would help them to grasp the situation, and I have written accordingly.

First, I lay before the House a letter which is very frank, concerning the discharge of William Jones, a farmer boy from Johnson County, Kans., and I would just as leave make the fight upon the rights of Bill Jones as anybody in the United States:

JANUARY 23, 1919.

DEAR SIR: I don't believe you quite get the idea. What I want to know is whether you are going to discharge this man on his application and how soon you are going to do it. As long as the war is on the people of this country were willing to sacrifice their sons for their country in the Army and Navy. The minute the war is over the taxpayers and working people of this country immediately become by far the most important factor of the country, and they expect the Army and Navy to interfere just as little as possible with the business of this country which supports the Army and Navy. Perfunctory information of this character is just what makes it so hard for friends of the Navy in Congress to secure for it in times of peace the support it ought to have. The people of this country pay taxes to build these ships and pay your salary, and what we want now is that you shall respond by respecting the necessities of the farmers of the State of Kansas, instead of writing perfunctory letters of the character you send to me. Jones's people need him on the farm, and if you need him in any particularly important way, say so, and then Congress will decide whether the farm or you needs him the worst by appropriate legislation, if it becomes necessary.

I trust you will attend to this matter without further delay and make it easier for Members of the Congress of the United States to explain to the people, who pay the taxes, why, after the war is over, the sons they really need in the field are held for some probably purely formal duty. In times of war the captain of the Navy is an important factor in this Government. In times of peace he is a very simple cog in the machinery, and I do hope you will not insist that this be made any plainer. I don't know this boy and I don't know whether he has made application. All I know about it is that intelligent men at home wired me that the conditions are such there that he ought to be there at once. Storms were sweeping the prairies and his labor is absolutely necessary on the farm to protect the stock, and you write me that "his application will be given due weight and consideration with the Navy Department's circular letter and addenda." What the farmer needs, captain, is not perfunctory information of this kind, but the boy at home to work on the farm. If you have any duty for him more important let us know what it is. For some time I was in command of a regiment at the Presidio and in the Philippines, and I am not at all unfamiliar with the conditions that surround you.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. LITTLE.

The captain replied that he had transmitted my letter to the Secretary of the Navy, so we may reason that the letter of the date of January 23 may have been taken into consideration in conjunction with the speech of January 29.

The second letter, you will see, is of the very reasonable class. If the one appears at the first glance to be an imitation of a war club, you will see that the second, of January 27, is very much of an olive branch, and the officer writes me that he has transmitted this to the Secretary of the Navy. So we may argue from the premise that this following letter is also within the cognizance of the department when it reaches a final conclusion of which the gentleman from Michigan speaks:

JANUARY 27, 1919.

DEAR SIR: With the very kindly continued appreciation of your equitable methods, I write to call your attention to a very general complaint from our country about the methods employed at the Great Lakes, in Chicago, of holding men. They are mostly young men who were sent there to be taught, and many of them just sent there last November, when it was supposed the war was going on, possibly. In other places I find men are frequently discharged immediately and sent home, without ever really completing the mustering in, while up there somebody is holding them and having them shovel coal. They are doing work for a dollar a day that other men in Chicago are getting $5 and $6 a day for. The Government of the United States has plenty of money appropriated by Congress to hire this work done by men in Chicago whose families need the support. Many of these boys are school boys, only taken out of their schools last fall because it was supposed the Nation actually needed their services. If this fellow up there fools around a little longer, he will cause every one of them to lose a year's education, by making it impossible for them to get back into school, so as to go on with the year's work. This matter is getting serious, and there are a large number of very fine citizens who are becoming very indignant. Such arbitrary and inexcusable methods as this man up there is using, make it very difficult for those in Congress who wish to see proper support given the armed forces of the Nation to explain to the people at home. When this war was on, our people sacrificed everything to win, and now, when the war is over and they need the boys at home and in school, some muttonhead at Chicago, dressed in a little brief authority, just to exercise a little arbitrary power, refuses to let them return to school or let them out. Now, that we have ended the war, the farmers' interests and the interests of this country and the education of our children are much more important than shoveling a little coal up in Chicago. You have heretofore shown such a thorough appreciation of the best way in which to reconcile the conflicting interests that I write you simply in the hope that you can suggest some method of relieving that situation without any delay.

I have the honor to remain.

Most sincerely, yours,

E. C. LITTLE.

The unfortunate position taken by many officers has made the agitation for the discharge of men who are needed more at home than at some training station absolutely necessary. If the information at hand is accurate, the end sought has been reached. To have been of any material assistance in accomplishing this result is very satisfactory. At the close of the Civil War men were discharged and the swords beaten into pruning hooks without wearing them out over bone heads who thought they were more important than fighting soldiers on the firing line. Such an Army and such a Navy, such military preparations as are essential to the safety of the Republic, will be provided at the proper time and in the proper way by the Congress of the United States without too much advice from men who have no loftier idea of the duties of a soldier than to take pride in wearing bright shoulder straps and jingling spurs, safely at home on the streets of the great cities. As the great Shakespeare said three centuries ago:

> Now great wars are stopped, Peace lives again;
> That she may long live here, God say amen.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of three assistant engineers of same, $3,600.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to inquire what is intended by the transposition of some of this engineer force. I have not been able to find it in the hearings or in the index. But you have there three assistant engineers and three oilers, apparently, in place of three engineers last year.

Mr. DENT. It is explained on page 38. I read from the hearings:

This position was combined from two positions two years ago, saving the Government $1,800. His is a most important position, and the man now filling it is very competent and has been offered $250 per month by outside companies. It would be almost impossible to fill this combined position by any other one man. It is in the interests of the Government and economy to hold him. He is worth any two men I have ever seen.

The CHAIRMAN. It was formerly $2,400 for a chief engineer and $1,800 for an assistant chief engineer, and we abolished the assistant?

Col. TIMBERLAKE. It was $1,800 for a heating and ventilating engineer.

The CHAIRMAN. That was abolished?

Col. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir.

That is because the positions were combined two years ago.

Mr. WALSH. Well, you combine the position of chief engineer of the power plant with an engineer of heating and ventilating. I was inquiring about this shift of assistant engineers and three oilers. You increase the number of employees and eliminate apparently three engineers.

Mr. DENT. Col. Timberlake says:

In our original estimates we asked for the pay of one assistant chief engineer of the power plant, $1,560 instead of $1,100; for the pay of three assistant engineers we asked $4,500 instead of $3,600; and for the pay of eight firemen we asked $7,720 instead of $6,240. That pay of the eight firemen is divided in this way: For pay of one boiler-house foreman, $1,100; for pay of two stoker firemen, $2,000; for pay of two firemen, $1,920; and for pay of three firemen, $2,700. This does not increase the number of men, but gives them a different grade of pay, depending on the work they do in the plant.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the colonel apparently does not answer the question that I have raised. He is talking about the raises to these different firemen. The academy never before had oilers, as I understand. They were not carried. They previously had only one assistant engineer and three engineers.

Now, they have combined the position of engineer, and provide three assistant engineers, and also three oilers for the power plant. Is it possible that they have increased their heating or power plant facilities there and require additional employees?

Mr. DENT. I do not understand that there are any additional employees. There was a provision in the bill last year for the pay of three oilers at the power plant, $1,440.

Mr. WALSH. Two oilers, $1,440, and three engineers for the power plant, $3,600.

Mr. DENT. The general reason that was given to the committee by Col. Tillman, the superintendent, and Col. Timberlake, the quartermaster, was that especially for these expert mechanical positions the academy had had great difficulty in securing men competent to serve.

Mr. WALSH. The bill last year carried two oilers at $1,440, and this year it carries three oilers at $1,440. Evidently it is not going to be very difficult to get oilers, if they can get three this year for the same pay that they gave two last year. Evidently they are not worrying much about that. I was inquiring what was the occasion for this shift. Is it because of the enlargement or the increase in the facilities?

Mr. DENT. No; it is not on account of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. I will withdraw the point of order as to line 9.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of three oilers for power plant, $1,440.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. DENT. I move to amend that item, in line 11, page 13, by striking out "three" and inserting "two."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 13, line 11, strike out the word "three" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel and apparatus, namely: Coal, wood, charcoal, stoves, grates, heaters, furnaces, ranges and fixtures, fire bricks, clay, sand, and for repairs of steam-heating and coal-conveying apparatus, grates, stoves, heaters, ranges, furnaces, and mica, and repair, improvement, and maintenance of power plant, $70,000: Provided, That $5,000 of this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. There is an increase in this item of $10,000. What is the necessity for having $5,000 immediately available? Are they short of coal?

Mr. DENT. Yes; that is my recollection of the matter, that it is a fuel proposition. At the middle of page 45 of the hearings Col. Timberlake says:

You increased it $10,000. It had been $40,000, and as soon as prices go down, if I am at the academy, that appropriation will go down, too.

The CHAIRMAN. You are asking for an increase of $5,000 for the item "For fuel, cadets' mess hall, shops, and laundry."

Mr. WALSH. The increase is $10,000.

Mr. DENT. Yes. At the top of page 45 Col. Timberlake says:

This increase is due to the increased cost of coal. We also ask that $5,000 of that be made immediately available.

I was calculating when I was at West Point the first part of this month the difference in the cost of coal this year and last year and what we will need to July 1, and I calculated that that difference is over $10,000; that is, that the cost will be $10,000 more than during the last fiscal year. I am asking for an increase of $10,000, but $5,000 of that only is to apply to this year. We want to make the amount $70,000 all together, with $5,000 immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. He is not going to buy $70,000 worth of coal. The $5,000 that he wants immediately available apparently is not for coal, but for something else. It may be for repairs. He is talking about the cost of material, the increase in 15 or 20 years. He says that if he is at the academy as soon as prices go down this item will go down, too. Unless he is an exceptionally young man, he probably will not be there when prices go down, and so the appropriation will continue to be as large as it is now.

Mr. DENT. He further says in explanation of the increased cost of coal and the amount of coal, that it is due to the new laundry, which is bigger than the old laundry and requires a good deal more coal. That is the explanation he gives of it.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suppose the sums appropriated in this bill, both as salaries for services and for materials purchased, are promptly paid by the Government. In that respect, if the War Department does so, it does very differently from what it does in reference to paying the men in the Army. I have here a letter from a young man, John L. Russell, Company B, One hundred and thirtieth United States Infantry, Thirty-third Division, American Expeditionary Forces. I will read only a part of it, and think it will be interesting. It is written from St. Aignan, France, to his mother:

(On active service with the American Expeditionary Forces.)

ST. AIGNAN, FRANCE, January 10, 1919.

Mrs. GEORGE RUSSELL:

DEAR MOTHER: * * * I have been here a month now, and I suppose I will be here another one before I get away from here. This is the worst place I ever struck since I have been in France. I have worn the same shirt for three months, and the suit of underwear I have on I have worn ever since I have been here, and when I was at the hospital I had to wear a suit for nearly two months. It seems funny that the Army can't furnish us a place for cleaning up our clothes or else give us clean ones in exchange.

I never thought anything of it when we were up to the lines, because then it was out of the question to keep clean, but I don't see any excuse for letting men lay around so dirty as they do. * * *

I was reading a story in the Saturday Evening Post the other day written by some war correspondent. It sure was some story and sounded nice to read of all right, but I have never seen anything near like it anywhere I have been. * * *

I haven't been paid for six and one-half months, but I am almost glad of that, for if I had been paid up every month as we were supposed to be, I would have spent it as fast as I got it, but, as it is now, whenever I get it I will have it.

* * * * * * *

Your son,

JOHN L. RUSSELL,
Company B, One hundred and thirtieth United States Infantry,
Thirty-third Division, American Expeditionary Forces.

He has not been paid for more than six months, notwithstanding the Secretary's letter, which I read in the House Saturday, in which he stated that the men were paid promptly, all of them. On Saturday I read a telegram from the father of a boy who had had 21 letters returned to him, the father, which letters had been sent to the boy and undelivered. I had asked the War Department to find out something about it. They have sent a letter over to France to find out, but the psychological effect was that while I referred to the matter Saturday, this morning I found out where the young man is, through the father and not through the War Department. The War Department, if I do not call their attention to it—and I will, but even in spite of that—will probably be investigating this young man for the next three months, long after he will have been discharged, probably. He has not been paid for five or six months. He has had 24 letters sent to him which were returned. He had drafts sent to him which were returned. He had London drafts sent to him which were lost. He had parcel-post packages sent to him which were lost. He had a draft sent to him from this country which was lost. The postscript to this letter which I have just read is as follows:

P. S.—I never did get that money draft you said you sent, and I don't suppose I ever will. The last mail I got from you was about two weeks before I left the hospital. The rest I probably never will get, so you will be wasting your time writing to me.

Certainly, he will not. Utterly inefficient in delivering the mail or keeping the record of where men are who have gone to the hospitals. There never in all history has been a civilized nation so careless of its men in hospitals after wounds in the service as is the present Army department of our Government, and I regret to say it. [Applause.]

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, many complaints have been made on the floor of the House of irregularities and injustices in the Military Establishment that are due either to intentional acts or dereliction on the part of some military officer. I do not pretend to say that every complaint made is a just one. I do not know; but I do know, from the correspondence I am receiving, that many things are being done that should not be done, and many things are being omitted that should be done.

Now, Congress can not get anywhere by calling attention to these things alone. The responsibility must be placed somewhere, and I think it is time for Congress to begin to act as well as talk.

There was read from page 2248 of the RECORD on Saturday last an order issued by Maj. Gen. Buck, of Camp MacArthur, forbidding officers to sit in an assembly or at social functions where enlisted men are present; also prohibiting enlisted men from attending functions where officers are invited. The American people do not approve of that sort of an order. The General Staff of the Army doubtless does approve it. So, how are we going to remedy a situation like that? Let us see if there is some remedy that the Congress of the United States can apply. Congress appropriates the money for the payment of the Army. Would not it be possible for the Congress, in the next Army appropriation bill, to write into that bill a provision that no part of the funds herein appropriated shall apply in payment of the salary or compensation of the officer who promulgated that order? It would evidently be in order under the Holman rule, because it would be a limitation on the appropriation.

Congress, in my opinion, has a right to dismiss that gentleman from the service by refusing to pay his salary, and will not the people of the United States condemn us if we fail to take such action? I believe that they will, and properly so?

I serve notice now that when the next appropriation bill for the support of the Military Establishment is brought to the floor of the House I will offer an amendment of that character. I want to say to you gentlemen on both sides of this aisle who condemn that sort of business in the cloak room and on the floor of the House and before your constituents at home that you will be called upon to vote on that amendment. I shall first offer it in committee, and, if it is rejected by the committee, I shall carry my fight to the floor of the House, and I shall make this fight, gentlemen, in good faith. I make it because I believe that that practice in the Army is wrong. I shall make it because I believe if the Congress, even in one instance, refuses to appropriate money for the payment of the salary of the officer who issued such an order it would have a most splendid effect toward democratizing the Army; and I hope the House will support the amendment when it comes to the floor of the House, as it will if I am here when the bill is considered.

Mr. GORDON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I will.

Mr. GORDON. The gentleman has already stated that the General Staff is in favor of it. The Chief of Staff is the military adviser to the President. Of course, we have no jurisdiction over the Chief of Staff. I suppose we could refuse the money to pay the General Staff, but it has gone into an order, and how can you blame the major general by depriving him of his pay while carrying out the orders of his superior, the General Staff.

Mr. FIELDS. To be frank with the gentleman, I would apply it to any officer in the Army, from the Chief of Staff down, for the man that would issue such an order is not fit to fill any position in the Army of a democratic nation. I do not know where the order originated or who is responsible for it, but the man who will issue an order of that kind is not fit to serve in the Army of the United States. I hope that the Congress will begin to take action now toward the elimination of that sort of doctrine.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. It seems that there is a difference of opinion between two members of the Committee on Military Affairs. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], as I understood him, at least, left the inference in my mind that the Chief of Staff had issued an order of this kind. Now the gentleman from Kentucky comes along and says he does not know where the order originated. I would like to know whether the General Staff issued any such order. Let us have the exact facts.

Mr. FIELDS. I have not the fact as to whether the General Staff issued the order, but it is time for Congress to begin to find out and act upon its own responsibility in order to eliminate these practices that are absolutely repugnant to the American people.

Mr. GARNER. Could not the gentleman or the gentleman's committee find out those facts?

Mr. FIELDS. I think it could, and I for one will do my best to ascertain the facts and to place the responsibility where it belongs. As one Member of the American Congress, I say it is time for such practices as that in the Army of the United States to be stopped.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

Mr. HOWARD. Make it five minutes. This is an interesting subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] throws the responsibility back onto the Military Committee. I noticed on Saturday last that when some attack was made or something disparaging was said of the Military Committee, it was received with applause. In that connection I want to call the attention of the committee to a few things that have occurred in the past. When the war started the Committee on Military Affairs attempted to exercise some independent judgment and place safeguards around the rights of the people, and in many instances the committee was repudiated and spanked to a fare-you-well by the House. I hope that in the future when the committee, after it has gone into these matters in detail, brings them to the attention of the House it may have the support of those Members of the House who are now so anxious that these wrongs be remedied.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage and telegrams (increase of $500 submitted), $1,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 6, the words "(increase of $500 submitted)."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: Page 17, line 6, strike out the words "(increase of $500 submitted)."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of one automobile of the Ford type, $300.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. What is the necessity for advertising Henry Ford in this item? There must be some real reason for it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. They did not want to put Edsel's name, probably.

Mr. DENT. That is because that is the kind of a car they want to buy.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is not the purchase but the maintenance.

Mr. DENT. Then it is the kind they have.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman think that the maintenance would go awry if he did not describe it as the Ford type?

Mr. DENT. No; I do not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the words "of the Ford type."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 4, strike out the words "of the Ford type."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For general repairs to cadet camp, repairs to camp grounds, toilets, and supplying of tent floors, and camp furniture to equip the new addition—authorized for the fiscal year 1919—to the old cadet encampment, $10,000.

Provided, That $5,000 of this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT], as a matter of form, that the proviso which appears at the top of page 20 ought to be a part of the paragraph which appears at the bottom of page 19.

Mr. DENT. That is correct, and I move to amend by striking out the period, after the figure "10,000," on page 19, line 26, and by inserting in lieu thereof a colon, to be followed by the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 26, after the "$10,000" strike out the period and insert a colon and the proviso at the top of page 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For department of natural and experimental philosophy: Additions to apparatus to illustrate the principles, acoustics, optics, and astronomy; books of reference, scientific periodicals, textbooks, stationery, materials, and repairs; and for repairs to the observatory buildings and repairs to clocks, and for contingent expenses not otherwise provided for, $2,350.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The language in line 17 is "additions to apparatus to illustrate the principles." Is there not an omission there? Should not that be "principles of mechanics"?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, on page 21, line 17, after the word "principles," I move to amend by inserting the words "of mechanics." That is the way the bill read last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 21, line 17, after the word "principles," insert the words "of mechanics."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase and maintenance of one automobile of the Ford type, $710.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] desire to offer an amendment here, as he did before?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, then I move to strike out the words "of the Ford type."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 25, line 2, strike out the words "of the Ford type."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, personally I think the whole paragraph should be eliminated. We all know that the War Department has adopted for use in the Army during the war the Dodge car as a pleasure car for use of officers. There are plenty of those cars available, and all that will be required would be to provide for the transportation of one of these cars to West Point.

Mr. DYER. I would not favor striking out the whole paragraph without investigation.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. McKENZIE. If I might say to my friend from Missouri [Mr. DYER], the testimony before the committee was that they wanted a Ford car for certain specific purposes.

Mr. DYER. They can buy a Ford car if they want to, or buy any kind.

Mr. McKENZIE. The committee felt that it was a wise thing to limit the amount to the price of a Ford car.

Mr. DYER. They can purchase other cars for that amount just as well as they can the Ford. I have no desire to limit them to the type of car that they shall purchase.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commercial periodicals, stationery, office furniture and supplies, adding machine, and for binding orders, circulars, etc., for the office of the treasurer, United States Military Academy, $710.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he intends to try to finish this bill to-day? An item that is very important will be soon reached. There are three members of the committee who are absent to-day, and it is a very unfortunate thing that they are not here. I wired to Mr. MORIN on Saturday to be here this morning. I just received a telegram from him a few moments ago saying that he had just received my telegram. I presume that this is an example of bureau efficiency. Under the circumstances I think we ought to have an understanding that we will pass the item to which I refer until to-morrow morning.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, under the rule that we are proceeding under this bill is to be considered for two hours. There is some difference of opinion as to whether the time expires at 1 o'clock or quarter past 1, as we did not begin the consideration until a quarter past 11. I intend to consume all of that time. I do not know whether we can pass the bill or not.

I would like at least to get down to the building proposition that I know the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DENT. At least that we should read that far.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Would it not be fair simply to say we would not consider that building proposition to-day?

Mr. DENT. Well, if we can dispose of it——

Mr. McKENZIE. Undoubtedly there will be a point of order made to the proposition which the gentleman from Iowa has in mind, and why would it not be well to go right along, and if we can get to that part of the bill and a point of order should be made and sustained, why, of course, it is immaterial whether our friends are here or not, but if the point of order is overruled, why then we can talk about postponing the consideration to a later period.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, but perhaps those gentlemen like to discuss the point of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not understand they are parliamentary sharks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the repair and maintenance of the cadet boathouse and the purchase and maintenance of boats and canoes for the instruction of cadets in rowing; for extra pay of one engineer soldier in charge of boathouse, at 35 cents per day, $750.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee how much of this small appropriation is expected to be devoted to repairs and also for the purchase of new canoes.

Mr. DENT. I do not think this is itemized. That amount does not appear to be itemized in the hearing, and how much is for the boathouse and how much for the purchase of boats and canoes I do not know, but it is the same item in the same amount.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is not that item just to repair the boathouse, where the foundation or underpinning was damaged by the ice?

Mr. DENT. Yes; but I do not know how much is going to be expended on repairs and how much on boats. He did not make a distinction between the two. It is only $750.

Mr. TILSON. He did not mention the purchase of any new canoes or boats, as I remember, and I got the impression that the bulk was for repairs caused by an ice jam.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs to cadet barracks: For repairing and renewing plastering, painting, and calcimining, repairs to woodwork, reflooring, rearranging rooms, increasing sinks, baths, and other incidental repairs to the building, $15,000

Provided, That this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the proviso should be part of the preceding paragraph and not a separate paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct, and I move to amend by striking out of line 21, page 30, the period after the figures "$15,000" and inserting a semicolon, making the proviso part of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 30, line 21, after "$15,000" strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available."

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs of boilers, engines, dynamos, motors, refrigerating and other machinery in the cadet mess, and the replacement of same, to be expended without advertising, $6,500.

Provided, That this appropriation be, and the same is hereby, made immediately available.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the proviso be considered part of this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

[After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one 10-ton, 3-wheel road roller, $3,500.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether he has any information as to whether the War Department through its activities in furnishing our cantonments and camps has not some of these road rollers?

Mr. DENT. That question, to my recollection, was asked in the hearings before the committee and the officers of the academy were unable to furnish the information and it was not pursued. I think the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] can give the gentleman some information.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, in the case of the road roller, they have an old one which they desire to put in with the company for a new one, and they thought they could get some substantial allowance for the old roller.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is entirely practicable for the War Department to transfer any one of a number of surface rollers they must have on hand as is provided in the following paragraph in the case of a tractor. Why should not you also provide for the transfer of a road roller?

Mr. ANTHONY. Because it is an old roller on hand and they desired to put it in with the company and realize some value on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; but we are just purchasing a new article, some of which we may have on hand and for which we may have no use, and we are out the difference in the price of the exchange.

Mr. ANTHONY. In the case of a road roller the difference is only——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think that it is a matter worthy of some consideration, and I make the point of order that it is not authorized by law.

Mr. ANTHONY. Why not substitute a paragraph offering the transfer of a road roller from the War Department?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that is a very good suggestion, to have it included in the following paragraph.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin move to strike out all of line 19 and insert in lieu thereof a provision directing the Secretary of War to transfer one of these road rollers?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think that can be embodied in the following paragraph, where there is authority to transfer a tractor.

Mr. DENT. Just add "roller" after the word "tractor."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this is the place in the bill where the building program should come in, and I again ask the chairman of the committee if he will not consent to let that item go over until to-morrow? There should be a full membership here. This is a very important part of the bill. Even if the point of order is made it should be reserved, and it would take some time to explain the matter to the membership of this House, and under no circumstances could we finish in the time agreed upon.

It is but fair to members of the visiting board, who understood when they left town that this bill would not be considered in the House, but was to be considered again in the committee to-morrow before being presented to the House. Those Members can not be here. And in the interest of fair play, I ask that it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. DENT. I will state to the gentleman I do not think this is the place in which he wants to offer the amendment. Why not let us read the building program we did agree to and get that out of the way? And then the time is about up for the consideration of this bill, and I think we can take care of the gentleman. But I would like to straighten out this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is authorized to direct the Ordnance Department to transfer, without charge, to the Quartermaster of the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., one Holt 10-ton artillery tractor, caterpillar type, such tractor to be used by the Quartermaster Corps for all kinds of tractor uses: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall cause the work herein provided for to be done and performed under the direction and supervision of the superintendent of the United States Military Academy: Provided further, That the Secretary of War is authorized to detail Col. E. J. Timberlake as quartermaster, disbursing, and constructing officer at the United States Military Academy for such period of time as he deems fit notwithstanding the provisions of existing law relating to the detail of officers: Provided, That the following amounts: $7,777 for grading and granolithic paving in area of south cadet barracks; $25,000 for construction of an east wing to the present Artillery gun shed, similar to the west wing; $40,000 for construction of an addition to the south wing of the present Artillery stable to accommodate 72 additional animals; $40,000 for construction of wings to the present Artillery barracks to accommodate 63 additional men; $40,000 for construction of wings to the present Cavalry barracks to accommodate 70 men; $500,000 for enlarging the Military Academy to accommodate the authorized number of cadets: Construction of cadet barracks and headquarters, to be located at the south of the area of the old or south barracks; $60,000 for 8 sets married officers' quarters; $60,000 for 20 sets bachelor quarters; $40,000 for automatic stokers; in all, $812,777; appropriated in House bill No. 11185 for fiscal year 1919, shall remain available until expended: Provided, That for the purpose of accounting only, all funds hereinbefore appropriated under the titles "Current and ordinary expenses," "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," and "Buildings and grounds" shall be disbursed and accounted for by the disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, as "Maintenance, United States Military Adademy," and for the purpose shall constitute one fund: And provided, That hereafter, when any machinery, apparatus, implements, supplies, or materials which have been heretofore or may hereafter be purchased or acquired from appropriations made for the support of the United States Military Academy are no longer needed or are no longer serviceable, they may be sold in such manner as the superintendent may direct and the proceeds placed to the credit of the appropriation from which originally purchased or acquired, and shall remain available for expenditure throughout the fiscal year in which derived.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. There are so many independent propositions involved in this paragraph that have no relation to one another that I think it might require some time to consider them seriatim.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will permit, the long number of items, commencing with $7,777 for grading and granolithic paving in area of south cadet barracks, are items that were authorized in the last bill and were largely suspended or incompleted because of the inability to get labor or to get material. And the object of this item in this appropriation bill is to continue the money necessary to complete them, because otherwise the money would lapse the 1st of next July.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will take the matters up in order.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from Nebraska yield to a question?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I find some items in the current appropriation act. I have not referred to the House bill to find appropriations, because I know you can not make an appropriation merely by a House bill until it becomes an act. What does this refer to? Is this something that Congress has enacted and is the law?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. At what place?

Mr. MANN. It says, at the bottom of page 33 of this bill, "appropriated in House bill numbered 11185 for the fiscal year 1919."

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That was the current appropriation for the academy for 1919.

Mr. MANN. That was the bill that was introduced in the House?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. A bill for an act. But when it is a law it is a bill no longer.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The language merely needs to be changed.

Mr. MANN. This is something that was included——

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. In the law. Yes, sir. It is part of the existing law.

Mr. MANN. I thought it was a bill that somebody had introduced.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman certain that all these provisions relating to construction have heretofore been authorized by law?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That is the fact, as I understand it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Where is there any authorization for the installation of automatic stokers? Where is there any authorization for grading and granolithic pavement in the area of the south cadet barracks?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have the act here before me, and it states "for grading and granolithic paving in area of south cadet barracks, $7,777." The items here in the bill which we are considering now are copied from the act of last year.

Mr. STAFFORD. What page of the act is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. It was the act approved January 17, 1918. It is on page 13 of the copy of the act I have in my hand here.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have what purports to be a copy of that act, and I do not find any authorization for the automatic stokers. Does the gentleman find any authorization for them in the copy he has before him?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The Clerk will find that for me, if the gentleman will permit.

Mr. STAFFORD. While the Clerk is locating that authorization, may I ask the gentleman's attention to the second paragraph on page 33? What is the necessity of authorizing the detail of Col. Timberlake by law?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I have, if you will permit, the item, on page 12, for the installation of automatic stokers under boilers in power plant, $40,000. That was authorized last year.

The reason for authorizing the assignment of Col. Timberlake is, as I understand it, in the first place, that the committee and those in charge of the academy, knowing that he has been very efficient for the past four years, are satisfied that he can render the Government and the academy great service by being continued. Under the present law, after having been detailed for four years to that place, he automatically returns to his position in the line, which he has already done, and it requires this special authorization now to permit him to be longer continued at the academy. It is just a military matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order still further, and I ask recognition under that reservation. May I, then, inquire as to another item, the proviso at the top of page 34, the necessity for the matter contained in the proviso?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, that is an item that has been carried, or a provision that has been carried, in the bill before, and it is asked for by the academy in the interest of economic administration of bookkeeping and the best use of the funds. It is the general purpose, more or less, of making lump-sum appropriations that have gone into all of these bills.

Mr. STAFFORD. Going back to the question of reauthorization of the appropriations that were authorized in last year's appropriation act, may I inquire of the gentleman what is the necessity for reauthorization when the last year's act carried that authorization?

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Well, as I understand the law and the presentation of the matter made to the committee, it seems this will revert to the Treasury unless the money is reappropriated in this bill, and the idea of the committee was that these sums having been granted, after proper consideration by Congress, we want to continue them until the projects are completed.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand the law—I may be mistaken—when Congress authorizes the construction of a building in an act the money does not have to be expended that year, but the officer has two years in which to contract for its expenditure. It remains an authorization for two years following the year in which the money is appropriated.

Mr. MANN. It would probably take two years after it becomes a law to do this work anyway.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I do not know whether he covered that in the testimony, as to whether a time limit would run against the appropriation; but the general statement was made that they had not been able to complete these buildings, and probably had not been able to contract for them, owing to the difficulty of getting labor and material during the war, and therefore they asked for a reappropriation.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think I am correct in the understanding of the law, that the officer would have two years following the appropriation in which to contract for this work.

Mr. MANN. That is the general rule.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I think the gentleman is correct about that.

Mr. MANN. The rule as to public buildings is that the authorization remains available until the building is completed. Whether that applies to these appropriations or not I do not know.

Mr. DENT. The idea of the committee was to prevent the appropriation from lapsing. I do not think it can do any harm, so long as it is but a repetition of what we gave last year and it was not expended.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The committee was satisfied that Col. Timberlake had made careful investigation of this matter, and he must have thought that it was necessary to have this authorization.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think he was laboring under a misapprehension; that he had not authority under existing law.

Mr. DENT. These items are appropriated only for one year. The money must be expended by next July or will have to be turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think it would do any harm.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I again reserve the point of order and ask recognition under that reservation.

I wish now to direct attention as to the need of the matter contained in the last proviso, authorizing the superintendent to sell the unnecessary and discarded machinery, implements, and supplies and have them transferred to the credit of the appropriations from which they were originally purchased.

Mr. MANN. That ought not to be in here. It is all right to sell it, but it is contrary to the policy of Congress entirely to authorize Government officials to sell some old machinery and take that money and use it over again.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. If the gentleman will permit, while the chairman is looking up the direct testimony of Col. Timberlake, I recall that he stated several specific instances where he would have been able to save the Government considerable money by being permitted to dispose of some of this more or less worn-out or discarded machinery, implements, and instruments that he has there.

Mr. MANN. I think he ought to be permitted to sell them, and I think he has the authority now to dispose of them, and he has the authority to ask for an appropriation for new instruments. But under this system Congress would never know anything about what was done, because he could sell something and use the money.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. That same language has been enacted by Congress in regard to the disposal of other war materials and articles, permitting the money to go back into the same fund and be reinvested.

Mr. MANN. We repealed all that the other day in the deficiency bill.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am aware of that fact; but the colonel asked for this, knowing that it was in other bills.

Mr. MANN. Yes. It was in another bill as a war-emergency matter, but we repealed that in the deficiency bill the other day.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The committee were satisfied that if we granted him this power he would not abuse it.

Mr. MANN. Col. Timberlake will not live forever, and it is absolutely contrary to the policy that Congress has adopted for many years.

Mr. DENT. I think I can settle this question by moving to strike out all the language after the word "direct," in line 16, page 34, down to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. That would be all right.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand, under general law he has authority now to dispose of discarded supplies by advertising. There is a general provision of law authorizing the sale of unnecessary supplies. I can not see any reason for carrying any part of this last proviso in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I still reserve the point of order.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think there is need of carrying that proviso. The superintendent related to us that every time the old material was condemned in the usual course and offered for sale the junk dealers from the near-by towns would come to the academy and form a combination under which they would offer practically nothing to the Government for this stuff. But the superintendent says that if he is permitted to dispose of it to manufacturers when they are buying new machinery he could trade for it and get a very large value for it. I think it is a wise provision, and he should have it.

Mr. STAFFORD. There should be some provision to the effect that the proceeds of these sales shall revert to the miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury.

Mr. DENT. Would not that necessarily follow?

Mr. STAFFORD. It is generally so provided when we make such authorizations as here.

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to the entire paragraph going out. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last proviso in the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reservation of the point of order is still pending, and the hour for rising has arrived.

Mr. DENT. I would like to dispose of that last portion first. I move to strike out the last proviso.

Mr. STAFFORD. You can not do that with a reservation pending.

Mr. DENT. I thought you would withdraw if I moved to strike out.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 34, strike out lines 10 to 19, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment before the committee rises.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, the time agreed upon for the consideration of this bill to-day has run out. The two hours have been construed to begin at the beginning of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct. The time allotted for the consideration of this bill to-day has expired. The committee will rise automatically.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SABATH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the Military Academy appropriation bill, House bill 15462, had come to no resolution thereon.

EULOGIES ON THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ROBBINS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CRAGO asks unanimous consent that Sunday, February 16, 1919, be set apart for addresses on the life, character, and public services of the Hon. EDWARD E. ROBBINS, late a Representative from the State of Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

PRESENTATION OF FALSE CLAIMS TO STATE DEPARTMENT.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9094) to amend section 1 of Title VIII of the act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I intend to object unless the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], who presented the bill, can convince me that it ought to be passed in this form.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, the matter is one to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected upon the last day set aside for the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and I desire to take up with the gentleman from Pennsylvania and Members of the House generally the need of this measure, not as a war measure but as a peace measure.

I heartily agree with what the gentleman said when the bill was last before the House, that if this were distinctly a war measure it should not now be pressed, inasmuch as we are practically upon a peace basis. But after the gentleman from Pennsylvania objected I presented the matter anew to the Secretary of State, and I have the letter of the Acting Secretary of State of January 30, 1919, in which letter he states that this is in no sense to be considered as war legislation. During the war action on claims was largely suspended. Now that the war is over many claims will be presented, and it is in connection with the presentation of those claims that this legislation is desired.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. DYER. This bill which the gentleman offers is proposed as an amendment to the espionage act, is it not?

Mr. GARD. Yes; it is an amendment to section 1 of title 8 of that act.

Mr. DYER. And that act itself is a war measure, is it not?

Mr. GARD. Of course, it is designed to afford protection to all branches of the war, including recruiting, enlistments, and the processes of the selective draft, manufacturing, and everything else. In other words, in so far as the civil authorities could act, the espionage law, which contributed its force in proper protection of law toward a proper morale in this country and toward the upbuilding and the continuance of manufactures, served a great purpose.

Mr. DYER. I appreciate that; but I say it is a war measure, and at the end of the war officially that act would become inoperative, would it not?

Mr. GARD. Some parts of it; yes.

Mr. DYER. And therefore this amendment would go out with it. Does not the gentleman think he had better try to get this passed as an independent proposition, if it is important and necessary?

Mr. GARD. The amendment to section 1 of title 8 is not limited to the time of war.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes; I yield.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman intend to have the letter of the Acting Secretary of State read, or does he intend to ask to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. GARD. I have submitted it to the gentleman, and if he desires to have it read I will do so.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I saw the letter of the Acting Secretary of State, and am frank to say that it presents a meritorious situation. He desires to prevent the making of false and fraudulent statements to the Secretary of State.

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. And he contends in the letter that it is not a war measure, but one that would operate in time of peace. I am heartily in favor of the enactment of a law which will prevent the making of false statements to the Secretary of State, as indicated in that letter, if we do not have such law, but I am not in favor of tacking that kind of a provision onto the espionage law. The espionage law was passed June 15, 1917. It is a very drastic act. It enters upon the rights of individuals all over the United States. It was intended purely as a war measure. It relates to espionage, to vessels in ports of the United States, to the injuring of vessels engaged in foreign commerce, to interference with foreign commerce, to the enforcement of neutrality, to the seizure of arms and other articles intended for export, making certain exports in time of war unlawful, to the disturbance of foreign relations, to passports, to counterfeiting Government seals, to search warrants, to the use of the mails, and then a number of general provisions upon which there is no limitation. All the provisions are just as much in force now as when the espionage act was passed. It involves the right of free speech, the right of an officer to search, and all that sort of thing, much of which we may be called upon to repeal as soon as the President announces that the war is at an end.

Mr. GARD. Assuming what the gentleman says is true, that there may be necessity and propriety of repealing some parts of the espionage law, that which I have tried to convince the gentleman and other Members of the House, is that this part of the section is not such a section of the act as at this time or in the near future could with propriety be repealed, because it takes up the matter of presentation of claims to the Secretary of State and those claims that the Secretary of State says by operation of law during the war time were suspended, but now that peace is practically restored they are coming in in great numbers, and there is much more necessity now that the law should be continued than there was that the law should be continued during war time.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask this: If the Committee on the Judiciary had reported a bill providing that it should be unlawful to make false statements to the Secretary of State under these circumstances, and providing a penalty, does the gentleman think that the Committee of the Whole or the House would object to that?

Mr. GARD. I do not know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Why should it be put on the espionage act when the repeal of it will be an issue before long, apparently, to bolster up that act?

Mr. GARD. What I am trying to get the gentleman to understand is that this section is not one that will be attacked by those who favor a repeal of the espionage act, because it applies only to proceedings before the Secretary of State, and primarily, now in times of peace, because the Secretary of State says that the presentation of applications and claims are coming in in great number, and will soon reach thousands in number; that the amendment is necessary, and the law itself is not repugnant to the idea that the gentleman has as to repealing sections of the espionage act, which has to do with possible control of speech and matters relative to newspaper publications, and hence may not be necessary now that the war emergency is past. But I want the gentleman to understand, if I am capable of making him understand, that this provision is not one that could be repealed, because it is essentially a peace provision, and the necessity is greater now than when the war existed. To my mind the entire section 1 should remain, as well as this addition being made to it. The Secretary of State says that in the matter of commerce between foreign nations and the United States there are a great number of claims now, and the State Department claims that it must really have this protection as to the accuracy of the claims. It is merely a provision that whoever shall willfully present to the Department of State any false or untrue statement with intent to influence its action shall come within the purview of the other provisions of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that if it should come in here as an independent war measure, standing on its own merits, I should support it, but I am not going to encourage the increase of war provisions in the various departments, nor shall I agree to increase war legislation which embarrasses the people of this country, much of which may have to be repealed, when there is an easier way to get this sort of legislation.

Mr. GARD. That of which I am trying to convince the gentleman is that this act is not a war measure, but for the absolute protection of the Department of State and the people of the United States in a time of peace. Whether some other parts of the espionage act may be repealed, that is another question, but this is not such an act, because, if the gentleman will look through section 1, there is nothing there which he will see should be repealed, because it all applies as much to the time of peace as to the time of war. Because the gentleman is not in favor, I assume, of any law which would permit any untrue or false statement or affidavit to be filed with the intention to secure action by the Secretary of State without some prohibtion or penalty being attached thereto.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I appreciate the argument the gentleman has made and am in sympathy with what he is trying to do, but I think it should be done in another way. Therefore I object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, before the objection is announced, may I have the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD so as to include the printing of the letter of the Secretary of State to me; also a letter from the Secretary of State to Mr. WEBB?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 30, 1919.

Hon. WARREN GARD,
House of Representatives:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 23, 1919, in which, with reference to H. R. 9094, a bill to amend section 1 of Title VIII of the espionage act, approved June 15, 1917, you state that on the 20th instant, upon consideration of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, the bill was objected to by Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania on the ground that it was intended as a war measure and is no longer necessary. You state that you had the bill retained on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent (for which action the department is most appreciative) and request that you be advised of the present necessity for passage of the proposed legislation.

In reply I beg to inform you that the bill is in no sense to be considered war legislation. The purpose of the bill is, as indicated therein, to provide a penalty for the willful making of sworn false representations to the department, or the presentation of such false representations to the department, by persons purporting to be entitled to the diplomatic protection of this Government, for the purpose of influencing the action of the department with respect to their interests as regards foreign Governments. Requests of this character are of constant occurrence both during peace and the existence of a state of war. The principal cases in which such legislation would serve a useful purpose are those having to do with diplomatic claims against foreign Governments, in which the interposition of this department is requested.

While the war was in progress action on all claims against enemy Governments and, to a certain extent, action on claims against belligerent Governments generally was, by necessity of the case, suspended. Now that the war is practically over the claims resulting therefrom, as well as those held in abeyance on account thereof, are being received in large numbers and will doubtless reach several thousand within a short time.

In this connection I beg to inclose for your information a copy of my letter of December 13 to Representative WEBB regarding the urgent need of the proposed law.

I am pleased to note your interest in the matter and I hope that you may use your influence with a view to bringing about the early passage of the bill by the House.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

DECEMBER 13, 1918.

Hon. EDWIN Y. WEBB,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. WEBB: I am taking the liberty of again calling to your attention H. R. 9094, which was introduced by you on January 22 last and which, according to the department's information, is now on the House Calendar.

The purpose of the bill, as you will recall, is to amend section 1 of Title VIII of the espionage act, approved June 15, 1917, by providing a penalty for the willful making of sworn false representations to the Department of State or for the presentation of such false representations to the department for the purpose of influencing its action with respect to the diplomatic protection of the interests of such persons as regards foreign Governments.

The needs of such legislation were pointed out to you in the department's letter of May 20, 1918, and are set forth in Report No. 667 of June 18, 1918, of the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems unnecessary to add anything to what has already been said respecting the purposes to be served by the proposed legislation other than to say that the reasons heretofore advanced in support of the bill are now becoming most urgent. Owing to the present prospects for peace, diplomatic claims against foreign Governments, in the settlement of which the department's assistance is sought, are being received daily in increasing numbers.

As has been previously pointed out, there is at the present time no provision of law defining as an offense the making of false representations under oath to the Secretary of State by persons seeking the interposition of the department in connection with their claims against foreign Governments. Since such claims may lead to negotiations and representations of a serious nature, and since the department must rely in great measure upon the statements made by interested parties, i. e., the claimants themselves, it is highly important that such statements should be safeguarded as much as possible against falsification.

I therefore hope that you may find it possible to bring about the early consideration and passage by the House of this much-needed proposed legislation.

I am, my dear Mr. WEBB,
Very sincerely, yours,

FRANK L. POLK.

ADDING LAND TO WYOMING NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1847) to authorize the addition of certain land to the Wyoming National Forest.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any lands within the following-described areas, found by the Secretary of Agriculture to be chiefly valuable for the production of timber or the protection of stream flow, may be included within and made a part of the Wyoming National Forest by proclamation of the President, said lands to be thereafter subject to all laws affecting national forests: All of township 29 north, range 118 west; all of township 29 north, range 119 west; sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33, township 30 north, range 118 west; all of township 30 north, range 119 west; sections 7, 18, 19, 30, 31, and west half of section 32, township 31 north, range 118 west; sections 19 to 36, inclusive, township 31 north, range 119 west; all of the sixth principal meridian, Wyoming.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 1, line 6, after the word "may," insert "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, N. DAK. AND MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13232) granting the consent of Congress to Traill County, N. Dak., and to Polk County, Minn., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn., and their successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the village of Bellmont, in the county of Traill, in the State of North Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following amendment:

Page 1, line 3, strike out all after the word "the" down to and including the word "six," in line 2, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge, authorized by act of Congress approved August 11, 1916, to be built across the Red River of the North at or near the village of Bellmont, Traill County, N. Dak., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Without objection the title was amended to read as follows: "A bill to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, between Traill County, N. Dak., and Polk County, Minn."

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13294) to amend an act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1916, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire as to the nature of the authorization as carried in the last proviso, empowering the Board of Managers of the National Home to classify the memberships of such homes for the purpose of administration, and to utilize certain branches exclusively for rehabilitation of the disabled soldiers.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that this amendment to which the gentleman calls attention was incorporated by the action of the Committee on Military Affairs. It was no part of the text of the bill, as introduced by me, and it was the thought of the Committee on Military Affairs, which put this amendment on unanimously, that these National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers were facing a new and enlarged jurisdiction, that with the probability of an increase of the membership caused by the disabled soldiers of the present war, and the increased number that would be admitted under the provision of the original bill, the homes should be changed from their type of being merely a place where men lived to a place where they might receive care and treatment commensurate with their needs, and where, to the extent prescribed by the board of managers, certain processes of rehabilitation might be gone through with.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman know whether that suggestion has been submitted to the Secretary of War for his ideas?

Mr. GARD. I do not know whether it has been submitted. I will state this to the gentleman, that some two or three weeks ago I talked with the Secretary of War about this bill, and about matters relative to the board of managers, and the Secretary of War said that he was firmly of opinion that these homes ought to be used in the largest scope possible, and that he saw as the best future of the home places of rehabilitation for the soldiers wherever they could be used for that purpose, and such as could be used for that purpose, with the incorporation of additional facilities, should be used. This amendment, I think, was inspired largely in committee by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY]. Certainly he was one of its principal proponents.

Mr. STAFFORD. My query was predicated largely upon the work we are doing in rehabilitation under the Board of Vocational Education, and I was wondering whether the activities of that board would not include the rehabilitation of our disabled soldiers. Again the Army rehabilitation work is provided for under the Surgeon General's office, but that work is limited to those in the service.

Mr. GARD. Yes; for discharged soldiers.

Mr. STAFFORD. We are all in sympathy with the idea of permitting the present homes to be used by discharged soldiers of the present war.

Mr. GARD. I think so.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. The point is this: Heretofore the soldiers' homes have been filled with men of mature years, for which there was very little left in life except that they might be provided with a comfortable living. After this war these homes will be filled with a lot of young men, men who should be fitted to go back into civil life of the country, if it is possible to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the work now undertaken by the Board of Vocational Education?

Mr. ANTHONY. I do not know as to that, but the work in the soldiers' homes, as explained to me by a member of the Board of Managers, will not be very elaborate. They will take these men and try to teach them some simple occupation and fit them to make their own way in life wherever possible. They do not intend to go into an elaborate scheme of rehabilitation.

Mr. GARD. To make them in part self-sustaining.

Mr. ANTHONY. The purpose is either to maintain them in idleness in these homes or else to give them a chance to establish themselves in industry.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the board having charge of the work of rehabilitation of soldiers has a current appropriation of $2,000,000, of which they have expended, as I recall, some two or three hundred thousand dollars. They are entering on this work very extensively, and expect to enter upon it still more extensively, as evidenced by the fact that they are asking for $4,000,000 for the coming fiscal year. I think there is some possibility of complicating the situation by attempting to make provision for the rehabilitation in the soldiers' homes. The main provisions of the bill are most excellent. There is now room in the soldiers' homes for about 7,000 additional inmates. A few of the discharged soldiers are already in the homes—that is, soldiers discharged who have been engaged in the late war—and there is room for 7,000 more.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In a moment. If this simply meant that the board would make some simple provision for occupation for the men in the homes, I do not know that there will be any objection to it. There would be an objection to it, it seems to me, if, in addition to the very extensive and all-embracing work of the board having rehabilitation matters in charge, we should embark upon a considerable activity along this line in connection with the soldiers' homes.

Mr. GARD. I will state so far as I am advised by members of the board of managers and members of the War Department, the Secretary of War, and by members of the Committee on Military Affairs that there is no purpose to do anything except to afford for these men, who will be necessarily brought in by reason of physical disabilities, the privilege of doing some slight task or performing some bit of labor with the hands or with the head which will result in their being in part self-sustaining.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, there is very considerable opportunity for that sort of thing in the homes now, particularly in an agricultural way?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. That is given to them because most of them have very considerable farms connected with them that furnish such facilities.

Mr. GARD. I am sure, as was well said by the gentleman from Kansas, that there is to be a new type of man in the governmental military homes. Heretofore the man who was a member of a soldiers' home was well along in years. He was forced by adverse circumstances into the home necessarily, and could not nor was it proper that he should be compelled to do any manual labor, nor was it proper at the time that compulsion should be had, but where the man is able to do a slight physical task and is paid for the same, it has occurred to me, as it has to the Committee on Military Affairs, that this is a very wise solution of a most pressing question for the conduct of the homes in the very near future. No appropriation is asked and no sum of money has been stated for any purpose. It is merely authority to increase the efficiency of the home.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, as I understand this does not in anywise seek to amend by extension or diminution the present management of these homes?

Mr. GARD. No; there is no extension or change in the process of management. The bill primarily relates to the privilege of admission as a member of the home.

Mr. SLOAN. And in no wise seeks to interfere with the incumbency of the homes as they are now organized——

Mr. GARD. Not the slightest.

Mr. SLOAN. And as I understand, the purpose is largely to utilize the vacant space and facilities for the keep, care, and treatment of soldiers by the inclusion of soldiers of this war as well as the volunteer soldiers of the two preceding wars?

Mr. GARD. That is true; and, I may state, to include also soldiers who were on the border in Mexico and who were engaged in military services for the United States which could not be classed as a war. For instance, there are a number of concrete cases of men injured while they were protecting the border in Mexico, acting as United States soldiers while not in war, who, under the present statute governing admission to these homes, can not by the board of managers be admitted, no matter how disabled they may be, no matter how meritorious the individual case. It is merely to extend the use of these homes wherever it is proper and give assistance to every man who has borne arms in an American battle and who is disabled by disease or wounds from taking care of himself. I am in favor at all times of providing all proper assistance and relief to all American soldiers.

Mr. SLOAN. As so expressed, I think it is an admirable provision; but I would like further to ask whether or not it is contemplated that the work suggested by the sponsor of the bill, the gentleman from Ohio, that members would in anywise be required to work or merely that the individual person, if he desired to get some compensation, can avail himself of the opportunity presented?

Mr. GARD. There is no change in the requirement. They are not required now. It is simply affording a privilege, because I esteem it personally to be a privilege rather than a requirement of these men who might be forced by circumstances and have to go into the home, that they might do some little task and be paid for it and become in part self-sustaining. It is a great matter of preserving his self-respect, and it is better for the soldiers and for society in general that they have some occupation in which they can engage.

Mr. SLOAN. I have no doubt whatever all in the homes so located as they are would be willing to have this privilege extended, but there is undoubtedly, as I said in another matter bearing somewhat to it, a natural jealousy in the homes the Government has established for them. They are willing to share it, but they do not desire to abdicate or surrender.

Mr. GARD. I think the purpose of the bill and the amendments are all, indeed, meritorious, because, as I have stated, they carry no new law and because they only provide for the very best administration of these soldiers' homes for every disabled American soldier.

Mr. SLOAN. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I hope an opportunity will be had to consider this measure. I would not object, but I am opposed to many things in connection with the home, but I have not the time nor can I get time under this procedure, and I therefore shall object for the present.

Mr. GARD. I hope the gentleman will reserve the right to object.

Mr. DYER. I would eventually, unless the matter could be——

Mr. GARD. I would be very glad to inform the gentleman. If there is anything he has in mind he does not agree with, I would be very glad to explain it to him. The matter, it seems to me, is so very clear and so manifestly intended for the benefit of the present war soldiers, Spanish War soldiers, and all soldiers——

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman would agree in the bill to an amendment which I would like to have incorporated in the act pertaining to the soldiers' homes, and that is to take the management of the homes out of the hands of the present managers and put them in charge of the War Department, I would not oppose it. But I am opposed to giving the present management of the soldiers' homes further authority.

Mr. GARD. That is a matter so entirely at variance with the principles of this bill that I could not agree to it.

Mr. DYER. I knew the gentleman would not agree to it. I want to discuss that for the purpose of presenting some facts to the House that I feel are justified.

Mr. GARD. If that is all the gentleman has in mind, he could have no objection to this bill, because if the gentleman wants the homes taken from the civil authorities who control them and put in the hands of the War Department, that is entirely a different proposition. But while they are in the hands of the present board of managers, why would not the gentleman be willing to afford the present-day soldiers and soldiers of the war in which he so ably represented the Government to have the full privileges of these homes?

Mr. DYER. Well, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object or not?

Mr. DYER. The gentleman was asking me to reserve my objection. I do it for the purpose of making this statement, which I have made to him, and to say that to adopt this proposition now would necessitate, of course, enlargements and justification for the soldiers' home board to enlarge these homes and ask Congress for additional appropriations, and I do not believe at this time there is any necessity for including the present soldiers. I do not think any of them are going to be sent to these homes.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will pardon me, there are a number of soldiers of the present war in the homes now, and necessarily there will be more.

Mr. DYER. Under our allowances for those who are disabled, and so on, I think it is unnecessary at this time to send them to these soldiers' homes, under the present management.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit just there?

Mr. DYER. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Prior to our entering this war there was a recommendation made by the Secretary of War to discontinue the branch home located in the environs of Milwaukee, in the district represented by my colleague [Mr. CARY]. The accommodations are much larger than what the present demands require. Now, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] says, there are going to be any number of instances of boys returning from abroad who will need the accommodations of that home and the other branch homes, where they are not taxed to capacity. I think the opportunity should be given them to have the privilege of entering these homes just as the soldiers of the Spanish-American War and the Philippine insurrection and the Civil War have the privilege.

Mr. DYER. I would not object, probably, if we had opportunity, as I said, to consider the matter, which we have not under unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield just a moment?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. We heard the managers of the soldiers' homes the other day before the Committee on Appropriations, and, having in mind the present situation, we discussed with them at very considerable length this matter of admitting the soldiers of the present foreign war in the homes. As a matter of fact, they are now admitted. They are of the opinion they have authority to admit them. There are several hundreds of them in the homes at this time. There is room for between 7,000 and 7,500 additional inmates in the various soldiers' homes, without crowding in the least, and utilizing them in a way in which the soldiers will all be very comfortable. These world-war soldiers ought to have an opportunity to enter those homes. The homes are running, and they are running under good management. The facilities are all there. It requires no further outlay of the public money to give them these opportunities. We certainly ought to fill those homes with these returning soldiers as they may desire to enter the homes. The board of managers has considered the matter fully. They have had no other thought than that the soldiers would be given the facilities of the homes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman knows that we passed the bill here the other day for $10,000,000 and more for the purpose of establishing additional hospitals for the care of those who need hospital treatment.

Mr. MONDELL. That is quite a different proposition.

Mr. DYER. And we also have in the War Department——

Mr. MONDELL. That is quite a different proposition. Assuming the necessity of building hospitals for discharged soldiers because of tuberculosis or other diseases we have now, at this hour, splendid institutions in which there is room for 7,000 of those soldiers. Are we going to deny those soldiers the opportunity to enter these excellent institutions now being maintained and appropriated for?

Mr. DYER. On the theory, I will say to the gentleman, that the soldiers' homes are not the place to send men who need hospital treatment. It is nothing more nor less than a place for soldiers to go to who have not anywhere else to go, and who want to spend possibly the rest of their days there. It is good for the old soldiers, but I am not in favor of opening these homes and encouraging these boys who are coming back to go to these homes, instead of getting them out into the vocations they went from, and go to work—those who are able to work. We do not want to encourage them simply to live in these homes without any opportunity for their advancement. The Government is prepared to take care of all these people who need treatment, get them well, cure them, and put them out into business. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I am not ready at this time to encourage these boys going to these homes.

Mr MONDELL. They are going, anyway.

Mr. DYER. If they are going, Mr. Speaker, if the board of managers say they have the authority now, and are doing what the gentleman from Wyoming says, whether they are usurping authority or not, there is no need for legislation for their doing that. And if that is so, in addition to other reasons, I am opposed to the present management of the soldiers' homes.

If the gentleman will agree to that——

Mr. GARD. I have no objection to the gentleman offering the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. This proposition is limited to those who are disabled by wounds and disease and incapable of earning a living. It is to provide a home for such persons who may have both legs off or both arms off and who have passed the stage of hospital treatment. But there should be some place where they may have a home.

Mr. DYER. I thought the gentleman knew that we had appropriated money to give men arms and legs and to teach them trades in which they can support themselves.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to provide for those who have not a home.

Mr. DYER. I doubt the correctness of that statement.

Mr. STAFFORD. There are numbers of persons who have been totally disabled who are maintained there.

Mr. DYER. The Government should give them sufficient money to support themselves, so that they can be with their families.

Mr. STAFFORD. We compensate them under the war-risk insurance, but if they have no families to provide a home for them we wish to provide a home and where they will have their comrades about them.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me make a statement. The board in charge of the rehabilitation of returning soldiers was before the Committee on Appropriations a few days ago and told us what they were doing in great detail. They told us what they expected to do.

Here is a situation in connection with their work, in which the soldiers' home serves a most useful purpose and will serve a most useful purpose. It takes some little time for these soldiers who are disabled to have their cases adjudicated before the War Risk Bureau. It requires some little time in many cases for the rehabilitation board to get in contact with the men and learn just what they desire to have done for them and to determine what is best to do for them, what school or institution they would attend. In the meantime, if the opportunity is given to the men to enter the soldiers' homes and be cared for there they will have a comfortable place while their cases are being adjudicated by the War Risk Board and while the committee on rehabilitation is studying their cases and arranging for their tuition in some school where they can acquire that education or that training which will be helpful to them.

The soldiers' homes work right in with that sort of thing. The rehabilitation board keeps track of these men. They are not always ready when they are discharged from the service to enter upon the courses of study which the board outlines or suggests to them. In the meantime the soldiers' homes should be open until there is opportunity for them to be cared for, until their claims are adjusted and an opportunity is given to provide for their training.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Under our law is there any institution in our country where a soldier such as you have described could find a home?

Mr. MONDELL. No. And this is the fact, that the Rehabilitation Board told us of cases where soldiers had been discharged without being paid. I hope there will be no more cases of that kind. There are and will be many cases where the amount that the soldier is entitled to for disability has not yet been determined, and they found such soldiers in many cases to be really objects of charity.

Mr. DYER. And that is a disgrace to the United States Government.

Mr. MONDELL. It is; and the gentleman proposes to keep closed the only door that we are prepared to open in order to prevent the recurrence of that sort of thing. I do not think the gentleman wants to take the responsibility of doing that.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is mistaken. I do not think the gentleman correctly understands the character of the soldiers' homes and present conditions and does not look at the situation from the true standpoint, as he ought to look at it, with reference to those soldiers who are coming back disabled. We have provided money for them, and the Government is authorized to give these men enough money to support them. We provided vocational schools for them in order that they may learn useful arts and trades and go out and earn a living for themselves, and to put them in soldiers' homes until the end of their days would be a discredit to the Nation.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If I understand the gentleman's remarks, he would not object if an amendment were adopted to transfer the management to the War Department?

Mr. DYER. If that is agreed to by the gentleman in charge of the bill——

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman can offer an amendment and let the House pass upon it.

Mr. DYER. There will be no opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. CANNON. There will be opportunity to discuss it under the five-minute rule, and I have no doubt that such time as the gentleman may desire will be conceded to him.

Mr. GARD. I shall be very glad to concede any reasonable time that the gentleman wants, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CANNON. I think something ought to be done in the matter, either by referring it to the War Department or without referring it. There is this vacant space in these homes unoccupied.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will permit me, the other day we had a bill up here to take from the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes the Battle Mountain Sanitarium, and turn it over to the War Department for the care of men who are in need of care and attention, and this House voted it down. It ought not to have done so, in my judgment.

Mr. MONDELL. That was for soldiers before they were discharged. That is quite another thing. This is for the care of discharged soldiers. That bill ought to have passed, but that does not affect this situation at all. This is a proposition to take care of the soldier after his discharge, and the War Department, let me suggest to the gentleman, has no control over the soldier after his discharge.

Mr. DYER. We appropriated $10,000,000 to take care of men after their discharge.

Mr. MONDELL. We have an appropriation of $2,000,000 to take care of men and rehabilitate them. This works right in with it. This gives men an opportunity to remain in the homes, if they care to, while the War Risk Board is determining the amount due them and the Rehabilitation Board is studying their cases.

Mr. DYER. Oh, no.

Mr. MONDELL. There is nothing in the bill compelling them to go there, but they may go if we pass this bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 171) to repeal the last proviso of section 4 of an act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes, approved January 26, 1915.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Reserving the right to object, I take it the purpose of this bill is to get a larger appropriation for this park?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is the ultimate object, of course, but it will not be sought to get a larger appropriation this year. It is very much desired to have the limitation removed, because if that were done we would be enabled to get a great many local subscriptions to supplement the large appropriations that have been made by the Legislature of Colorado this year for the improvement of this park. It is not contemplated to ask an additional appropriation for the park this year.

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee on Appropriations, which appropriates for the parks, has been considering the Rocky Mountain National Park in connection with the matter of improvement of roads, and so forth. As a member of the committee, I am of the opinion that this limitation ought to be removed. If my opinion is that of the committee—and I think it is—I do not think the committee will be disposed to add anything to the appropriation this year, but I do think we can not well maintain these appropriations permanently within the $10,000 and do justice to that park.

Mr. FOSTER. How much does the gentleman think it will take to do justice to the park?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no particular sum in mind. Personally, I would not be in favor of increasing the appropriation a dollar this year, but possibly somewhat next year.

Mr. CANNON. Where is the Rocky Mountain National Park?

Mr. MONDELL. It is due west of Denver in the mountains. It is in what is known as the Estes Park region of Colorado, a very beautiful mountain region.

Mr. CANNON. Is it between Denver and Cheyenne?

Mr. MONDELL. No; it is very nearly due west from Denver.

Mr. CANNON. How far?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The entrance to the park is about 70 miles from Denver, and it extends over to Grand Lake in the western portion of the State of Colorado. It includes Longs Peak and the principal mountain peaks in that locality, of which there are a great number that are more than 12,000 feet high.

Mr. CANNON. What area does the park cover?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. A little more than 229,000 acres.

Mr. FOSTER. I am informed that it covers a little more than 229,000 acres. I am going to withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. CANNON. I should like to know a little more about it. It includes mountains and valleys and that sort of thing?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. All that character of mountain scenery. Some of the most beautiful scenery that is found anywhere in the Rocky Mountains is within the boundaries of this park.

Mr. CANNON. There is in the air an appropriation of $100,000,000 to improve lands for our soldiers to live upon, to get cut-over lands, and to get lands that are abandoned in New York, and so on. With all the parks we have, does the gentleman think it is a good time to establish another one?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. This does not establish a new park. It was established four years ago. There was a limitation on the appropriation that could be made for its improvement to make it accessible.

Mr. CANNON. That is $10,000 a year?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That is $10,000 a year, and this bill is simply to remove that inhibition. We are not asking for an additional appropriation now.

Mr. CANNON. No; but it is to ask an additional appropriation at the next session?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. It is contemplated, of course, that the Government will want to improve and make accessible this very valuable park from which the Government, when this is done, will derive a very great revenue.

Mr. CANNON. How?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. By concessions and charges that are made in connection with the supervision of the park.

Mr. CANNON. We are going to be bone dry pretty soon, and concessions to keep hotels and bars will not be worth much.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. That will be eliminated, and consequently will reduce the revenues somewhat, perhaps, but there are many other methods of collecting revenues.

Mr. CANNON. How many million dollars will it cost to develop this park, to build the highways to get in, to construct that 70 miles of road, and so on? You see, we are rich in parks. God knows, I do not know, how many we have now.

Mr. MONDELL. Sixteen.

Mr. CANNON. Is that all?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The Legislature of Colorado have appropriated this year $70,000 for the completion of the Fall River Road, which has been in process of construction since this park was organized four years ago, and it has appropriated $90,000 for the completion or improvement of the Thompson Road, showing that the people of the State of Colorado are supplementing the efforts of the Government in making these improvements, which will make this wonderful landscape of scenic beauty, which even Switzerland and her Alpine scenery does not equal, accessible to the people who visit this park. Over 117,000 people visited this park last year. What can we not expect when it shall be improved by the building of roads and trails which will permit of its exploration and which can be accomplished with a little more liberal appropriation, which the removal of this limitation will later permit of? And in my judgment it would be shortsighted in the Government not to do it. It will only be improving her own property, which will in the end bring into the Treasury substantial revenues.

Mr. CANNON. The efforts of the Government are limited to $10,000 under the law, and now $70,000 and $90,000 have been appropriated to improve roads. How many hundreds of thousands of dollars is it going to take to develop this when it comes to unloading it all on the Government?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Having discussed this frequently with the Interior Department and with Superintendent Mathers, supervisor of parks, I can say that it is not the intention of the department to expend any large sum in any one year, but they feel that their appropriation should be a little larger in order to open up trails, telephone lines, and make it accessible to the people.

Mr. CANNON. My observation has been that in the Yellowstone Park, and in the Glacier National Park, and the great park in California, and in our 16 parks scattered all over the country, there has been a good deal of money expended. I hate to object; at the same time——

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I hope the gentleman will not object; this is a proposition of a great deal of merit.

Mr. CANNON. At the same time, God knows we have come to the time when we have got to economize.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I assure the gentleman that I will agree to that, but we do not feel that we ought to be discriminated against. Other parks that have been organized have been privileged to expend whatever receipts they had from concessions in the management and development of the park, which of all our parks was the first that was not given this concession.

Mr. MONDELL. I think it will please the gentleman from Illinois to know that we are now receiving from some of the larger national parks a sum varying from 23 to 30 per cent of the annual expenditures.

Mr. CANNON. That is, the parks pay about one-quarter of the expense.

Mr. MONDELL. In some cases nearly one-third.

Mr. CANNON. In some cases, and the balance the Government pays in perpetuity.

Mr. MONDELL. That is better than for the Government to pay it all.

Mr. CANNON. But there is only $10,000 on the Government now in this particular case.

Mr. MONDELL. And there being only $10,000 on the Government in this particular case we are unable to improve the park in order to obtain anything more from automobile licenses, and so forth.

Mr. CANNON. But in round numbers we have $200,000 appropriated by the Colorado Legislature.

Mr. LOBECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I yield.

Mr. LOBECK. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois prompt me to ask the question whether any farm lands are lying in this park which would be fit for agricultural land to be located on by the soldiers?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. There are no agricultural lands or lands suitable for agriculture within the confines of this park.

Mr. LOBECK. Scarcely a little valley?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. No little valley that would justify a person making a homestead entry. If they took one it would be for the purpose of having a home and capitalizing it for its scenic beauty. The elevation is too high.

Mr. LOBECK. I have been in that park and I noticed that where they sowed oats they did not ripen.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CANNON. I do not feel like standing out and preventing the House from considering the bill, but I have my doubts as to whether I am performing my duty.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the last proviso of section 4 of an act entitled "An act to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park, in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes," approved January 26, 1915, which is in the words and figures following: "Provided, That no appropriation for the maintenance, supervision, or improvement of said park in excess of $10,000 annually shall be made unless the same shall have first been expressly authorized by law," be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I did not object to the consideration of this bill, and I am glad to vote for its passage. I do not think the limitation of $10,000 should have been put in the bill, in the first place. But there is this peculiar condition. Gentlemen come here, and in this case gentlemen and ladies, and ask Congress to create a national park. The man most active in connection with the agitation was a gentleman whose name I do not now recall, located at Estes Park. In the consideration of that measure, and there was some opposition to it, Congress finally gave unanimous consent and approval to it by an agreement that the amount asked for any years should not exceed $10,000. Congress passed the bill on the supposition that the cost of the park could not exceed $10,000 a year, if anybody objected to a greater amount. But, like everything else of the sort, just as soon as the bill became a law people who had agreed to the limitation, in order to get the bill passed, forgot their good faith, as it seemed to me, and commenced to agitate to have the limitation, which they had agreed to, repealed, so that they could get more money. Having stated to Congress that we "will ask for a park that will only cost $10,000 a year," and having gotten from Congress the creation of a park on the supposition that it would only cost $10,000 a year, they at once started to have the limitation removed.

There may have been good reasons for that. I was not in favor of putting the limitation on in the first instance. Anybody who knew anything about the conditions there knew that they could not maintain a park properly at an expense to the General Government for $10,000. These people knew it as well as I did, only I had the good faith to say that I was not in favor of putting any limitation on it, and then they turn around and do not keep good faith.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I feel that a word of explanation is proper at this time in response to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], as I was the author of the original Rocky Mountain National Park bill and reported it from the Public Lands Committee to the House and had charge of it on the floor at the time of its passage. As everyone who was present at that time knows, there was a clause in the bill, the way it was reported out, providing that all the revenue derived from the use of automobile licenses and other concessions for the use of the park should go to the revenue of and for that park. The gentleman from Kentucky, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. SHERLEY], was on the floor, and he contended that it was an illogical or improper policy for the revenue derived from any particular park to go to and be expended in that park. His idea was the revenues from all the national parks should go into the general fund and be expended where they would do the most good. It was on his motion that that provision was stricken out. When we were discussing the $10,000-a-year expense limitation, which I may say was also put in by the gentleman from Kentucky, I was asked a number of questions about that limitation, and I desire to read to the House two or three questions and answers that will fully explain this matter. They are short, and I think it is due to the House and to myself that I should put this record in at this time.

I read from page 1791, volume 52, part 2, of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 18, 1915:

Mr. MOORE. The maintenance of it, for the first year at least, would be limited to $10,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is limited to $10,000 a year forever, unless Congress grants us an increase.

Mr. MOORE. Then $10,000 per annum is all you propose to ask at present?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is all until further additional appropriations are authorized by Congress.

Mr. MOORE. Would $10,000 a year be sufficient to provide for maintenance and take care of future improvements?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; that amount is not enough; but we will have to get along with that sum for a while, and I am in hopes that we will be allowed to also retain and use toward the improvement of the park all the revenues derived from automobile licenses and concessions from all sources. If we can have those receipts, I feel that we can get along without any additional appropriation for possibly several years to come.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman expects some revenue will be derived from the park to make up the expenses?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes, sir. Mr. Marshall and the Interior Department recommend that we be given those receipts for the maintenance and improvement of the park, especially for road and trail building, and I am relying upon these recommendations and that express provision in this bill. I had that in mind when I reluctantly consented to the adoption by the committee of this $10,000 a year limitation.

That is the colloquy that took place on the floor of the House at that time. After that that provision giving this park these receipts from licenses, and so forth, was stricken out of the bill, and we have never from that day to this been given any of those revenues, notwithstanding there are thousands of automobiles that go into that park every year.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Repealing this limitation, how much is it expected it will cost yearly?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is purely a matter for the Committee on Appropriations to determine. The State of Colorado is spending a very large sum—I do not know its exact amount, but upwards of $200,000—on building a magnificent highway, a boulevard, right across through the center of the park. When we passed this bill through the House we did so with the express promise on my part that the State and the adjoining counties would build a wagon road through the park. At that time we were constructing a good, ordinary road, something like we do in the mountains, about 12 feet wide.

Mr. WALSH. That is, through the park?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; in the park and across through it. We were preparing and agreeing to construct that kind of a road; I have forgotten how much it would have cost, but not a very expensive road. As soon as that bill was passed the park authorities came out there and insisted that they did not want that kind of a road, and that we were bound and had agreed to build an automobile boulevard some 20 or 30 feet wide, and spend some fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a mile on it. That was not the agreement at all. We never dreamed of any such an expenditure. But we have gone ahead with it and nearly destroyed our road fund in the State of Colorado. The Federal officials are holding us to constructing a highway that we never agreed to, never contemplated, and never have built in any place in the State. They are practically forcing us to build this road at an enormous and unwarranted expense to our State, in order to make a highway through the park and carry out a supposed obligation that neither I nor anyone else ever entered into.

Mr. WALSH. Is it going to cost $20,000 annually or $100,000, or what will the cost be?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I can not state what will be asked for, but the Appropriations Committee will take the report of the park officials, and they will treat us fairly, I assume, the same as they do other parks, and give us whatever they think we ought to have. It may be $15,000 or $25,000 a year. It is not going to be an unnecessary or unreasonable amount.

Mr. WALSH. It is going to be sufficiently unreasonable that they have had this limitation repealed which heretofore we put on.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Why, the Interior Department can not even properly police the park for $10,000 a year. They have not sufficient help to preserve the scenery. They have not sufficient attendants in the park to even prevent the mutilation of the scenery. There should be attendants and guides everywhere, and they can not have more than one or two now. The National Park Service needs this additional appropriation for additional help, to build additional roads, and make a great many improvements, as well as for caring for and supervising the park and regulating the tourists through the park. They come there from all over the United States. There are more people who go into this park every summer than go into the Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. WALSH. I think if at this time we showed a little more inclination to take care of the boys who have been battling for the country than we do for these tourists, we would be transacting public business of greater importance than to take off a limitation that we have placed upon a bill which we purposely placed there and allow the people having the thing in charge to come in and ask Congress to appropriate any amount they please. I do not believe that we should appropriate large sums of money for the purpose of making the scenery pleasant to the tourists, particularly at this time. It seems to me to be unwise. Why does not the gentleman suggest that we raise the limit, so to speak, from $10,000 to $20,000?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That is what I want; but the House put this limit on me at that time.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this repeals that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Would not the gentleman rather have the people of the United States spend their money in the United States than to go to Switzerland every year to see scenery that is not half as good as this Rocky Mountain National Park contains; and do we not need to encourage the people of the United States to see our own country first, rather than spending hundreds of millions of dollars every year in Switzerland and other places that do not have anything like the scenic grandeur we have?

Mr. WALSH. That is a very beautiful theory, but it does not necessarily follow Congress must remove safeguards it has heretofore placed in legislation to keep the maintenance of pleasure resorts within reasonable bounds. We are now going to say to the Secretary of the Interior that he can come here with estimates or expenditures, if you please, of $25,000.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, I suppose the Secretary of the Interior and the park authorities have heard of deficiency appropriations before.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, we have all got confidence in our Appropriation Committee, and they are not going to run wild.

Mr. WALSH. People ought to have confidence in Congress, and people who have got legislation, as the distinguished gentleman from Illinois pointed out, under the representation that they would ask for only $10,000, ought to have confidence enough in Congress when they secured that legislation not to seek immediately to wipe out the limitation that has been placed upon it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. That was put in in perfect good faith on the understanding that some of these times we would ask to have this limitation removed.

Mr. WALSH. It is not being taken out in good faith.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This bill repealing this limitation is in perfect good faith and in strict compliance with my statements at the time of the creation of this park, and when this bill is passed we will commence the further systematic improvement of this park, and in a very few years there will be more visitors every year to this park than to one-half of all the other parks in the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division. I withdraw the demand.

The question was taken, and the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the engrossment and third reading of the amended bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 4.

So the bill was passed.

On a motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FOR RELIEF OF HOMESTEAD ENTRYMEN WHO SERVED IN ARMY, NAVY, AND MARINE CORPS.

The next business in order on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 13353) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and her allies.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that this extends to our present soldiers the privileges contained in sections 2304 and 2305, as interpreted by certain resolutions and certain acts subsequently passed. I rise for the purpose of inquiring as to the nature of these interpreting resolutions and acts.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the resolutions referred to by the gentleman from Wisconsin are, first, the resolution of August 29, 1916, in which is recited persons who participated in the disturbances on the Mexican border, and the department felt that it would be advisable in referring to those who participated in the disturbances on the Mexican border to have the reference to the language here which had reference to those persons.

Mr. STAFFORD. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact this is not limited to those merely who participated in the disturbances on the Mexican border, but it also extends to those who served in mobilization camps.

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; though in connection with that service.

Mr. STAFFORD. The original sections of the statute to which this act seeks to extend its privileges to our present forces provided, as I recall, that these privileges shall only be granted to those who had served 90 days and had obtained an honorable discharge. Here you are purposing to extend the privileges to those who may not have seen any service at all, except maybe about the mobilization camps. Is it the purpose to grant credit to men who have been at camps, who had virtually civilian duties, and who would not be required to have any actual residence?

Mr. FRENCH. Of course, the answer to that is this, that the length of service governs the amount of credit that is due to any entryman. If the person were about some mobilization camp merely, why, in all probability in this or any other war his period of service would be limited, but, on the other hand, if his service called him into action he would in all probability be longer, and I think that takes care of itself.

Mr. MANN. There are men in the mobilization camps who have been there all during the war. That is not their fault. Why should not they be credited with the length of time required to live on a homestead?

Mr. STAFFORD. These men have not heretofore made entries. This bill is to grant the privilege to those who make subsequent entry.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. STAFFORD. To the time they have been in the service of the Army.

Mr. MANN. The time of his service during the war shall be equivalent to that much service living on a homestead. The war has not been very long, and it will not give the entire period; that is a sure thing. Besides that, they must live upon the homestead one year, according to the provisions of the original section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Just where is that provided?

Mr. MANN. I think that is true as to commutation.

Mr. FRENCH. That is provided in the Revised Statute, section 2305. You will find the provision in this language:

No patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his home for a period of one year after he shall have commenced his improvements.

Mr. MANN. Now, as a matter of fact, we are talking about spending very large sums of money to provide homesteads for these boys. Of course, this does not do that. The more of them that take out homesteads and go and live on them the better off we will be both as to their employment and as to the public domain, probably.

Mr. STAFFORD. I quite agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. This is simply giving the same privilege to the boys who served in this war as boys who served in the Philippine Insurrection, the War with Spain, and the Civil War.

Mr. CANNON. They must have been mustered into the military and naval service?

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. CANNON. They are not civilian employees?

Mr. FRENCH. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. This bill was prepared by the department in order to put in line for the present soldiers what has been done heretofore.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object, inasmuch as the bill ought to pass—this bill as drawn is an illustration of the way that the departments insist upon drawing legislation for Congress, and then of the curious and peculiar way in which they proceed to draw it. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] introduced a bill which was clear and definite, proposing to do in a clear and definite way a proper thing, and it ought to have been reported. The department did not like it, I presume, because they had not drawn it. They proceeded to draw a bill. Now, the French bill, on which this bill is predicated, was a bill that extended the benefits of section 2305 to the soldiers of the late or present war, whichever it may be, and clearly recited the fact that its purpose was to give the benefit of constructive residence provided for in that section. The department was not satisfied. Section 2304 of the Revised Statutes was a law that granted a homestead right, and it is not proposed in this bill to grant any additional homestead rights. The only provision of section 2304 which was sought to apply to the soldiers is the very last provision of it, that the soldier shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead and filing his declaratory statement in which to make his settlement. That is the only part of that long section which anyone desires to give the soldier the benefit of. And the curious thing about it is that this department, which has to do with the land laws, apparently forgot that that privilege is now the privilege of every homesteader. He can not be contested unless he is absent from his homestead for more than six months after he makes his entry. Therefore, that provision of this section of the statute, necessary at the time it was passed, right after the Civil War, is entirely unnecessary, because it simply grants a privilege that every homestead settler, whether a soldier or not, now has. In extending the provisions of section 2304, we may raise a question whether or no we are trying to give these soldiers another homestead right. We are probably safe as against that interpretation, because they have not been so interpreting the section in its application to the soldiers of the Spanish War. But there was really no rhyme or reason for reference to section 2304 in this bill.

Now, that was not all. The department was not satisfied with the reference that was contained in the bill originally introduced by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] to the war on the border and the present war, but they want to define what the war on the border is, or when it was, or what it was about, or something of that sort, and also the present war. And they referred to two statutes, one of which does make reference to the war on the border. The other makes no reference whatever to the recent war in which the United States was engaged. The act of July 28, 1917, provides:

That any settler upon the public lands of the United States, or any entryman whose application has been allowed, or any person who has made application for public lands which thereafter may be allowed under the homestead laws, who after such settlement, entry, or application enlists or is actually engaged in the military or naval service of the United States as a private soldier, officer, seaman, marine, national guardsman, or member of any other organization for offense or defense authorized by Congress during any war in which the United States may be engaged—

This is the sort of insistence upon controlling the form of legislation that we are having from the departments all the time. Not content to report on a bill that is clear and definite and concise, instroduced by some Member of Congress, they must, forsooth, draw another bill to suit their notion. And in the drawing of it they have complicated the situation; and except for the fact that they have heretofore interpreted a reference to section 2304, they might raise a question as to just what we were trying to do in the case of these soldiers.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. MANN. Was not the department bill drawn before the French bill?

Mr. FRENCH. My bill was drawn first. I had taken the matter up orally with the department and then drew a bill and referred it to the department. The department then drew this bill and sent it to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House and to the chairman of the Senate Public Lands Committee. I then introduced the bill in the language of the department, and we considered both bills before the Public Lands Committee, as will be seen in the report.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, in a word, grants to the persons in the military and naval service of the United States during the war with Germany and her allies and to those who saw military service in the Mexican disturbance the privilege of applying the length of time of such service in lieu of residence on a homestead. It is the same privilege we granted to the soldiers of the Civil War and to the Spanish War veterans.

The bill is not in the language as it was when I originally introduced it. The language of the original bill followed as far as possible the language of preceding legislation. This refers to the laws we have passed by referring to the sections of the statute. I think my idea was better, but I do not want to quarrel with the department on that point, and I am content to accept the language as it has been modified.

One thing I would call to your attention specifically. My bill provided explicitly that the law shall apply to entrymen on 320-acre homesteads and, as well, on the stock-raising homesteads. The pending bill doubtless includes both, without referring to them specifically. In reporting on my bill as originally introduced and using the language of the pending bill the department said the language used would accomplish the same purpose, so I assume no other interpretation could be made.

The bill should pass immeditely, and, to use the language of the gentleman from Massachusetts, it is in the interest of those who have been battling for our country.

Mr. MANN. The department bill was drawn before the bill of the gentleman was introduced in the House?

Mr. FRENCH. No. My bill was introduced first and referred to the department.

Mr. MANN. When was the gentleman's bill introduced? At this session of Congress?

Mr. FRENCH. The original bill was introduced November 21, 1918.

Mr. MANN. H. R. 13160?

Mr. FRENCH. Yes; and that bill codified, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said, what I thought was the essential and right part of the law that we had heretofore passed and specifically recited the persons who were to be the beneficiaries under it. The department felt that it would be better to refer to the sections by numbers and to these resolutions for the benefit of the persons for whose benefit it would run.

Mr. MONDELL. The trouble is that one of the definitions refers to no war at all except any war.

Mr. FRENCH. The department wanted to have there an enumeration of the soldiers and sailors and marines and so on and other persons engaged in the military service, and I thought that was enough to take care of all that I had recognized in the bill which I introduced.

Mr. MONDELL. The bill itself defines the persons who are intended to benefit from the bill.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, simply to call the attention of the House to the practice of the departments in insisting on having their own way in regard to all legislation. They are now proposing a bill which, if the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] himself had introduced and sent down there, they would have sent back here with all sorts of mistakes, not only those that were originally made but others. I think it is all right to pass the bill as it is proposed, because the people who propose it are the people who must interpret it, and they can not well interpret it except as suggested by themselves in presenting it. But it might very well otherwise be interpreted, particularly the reference to section 2304 of the Revised Statutes, and the last references are seemingly confusing rather than enlightening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSTER). Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar, and I will ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. MASON. Mr. Sepaker, as this bill is in the interest of the soldiers, it occurred to me that it was exceedingly important to have some soldiers left to enjoy our homestead laws, and that the way we might have some left was to bring them out of Russia.

I desire to present some reasons why, in the interest of this bill, we should pass the resolution originally offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] and afterwards one offered by me, directing the Commander in Chief to withdraw the forces of the United States from Russia.

I stated in my speech the other day that I purposed to show that there was a dangerous element of the almighty dollar in the payment of interest out of American money that was intended by American taxpayers and the American Congress to go for the support of our allies in winning this war.

I stated the other day that I was so informed, and I shall add, in addition to that statement, a statement which is a sort of reportorial or editorial statement in the Christian Science Monitor, which is evidently written by one acquainted with the finances of this country. And I purpose to show by reading this that I was right, that the money that you voted to win this war with is now being used by the agents of the old original government representing the Czar of Russia to pay the interest upon bonds of the speculators of America, who loaned their money to the Russian Government and took a gambler's chance. I purpose to show by reading this that only a few bankers in Wall Street knew that they were going to pay the interest on those bonds that had been put upon the Russian people to pay for their chains in the past, as the price of their own slavery, money that was loaned to the money lenders of America. After the collapse of the government of Kerensky those bonds went down in the market from par to below 50 cents. Then I propose to show that some distinguished, patriotic money lenders of this country, who had some private advices, learned that they were going to pay the interest on those bonds out of the money that you voted to feed the starving people in Russia; that it was being used, and I think improperly used, to pay the interest on those bonds. That is a remarkable fact stated in this seemingly accredited statement by a writer on a paper that stands well in this country, the Christian Science Monitor. It is undoubted. It carries out the statement that I believed to be true.

These bonds were sold by Morgan & Co. to the money lenders of America before we went into the war. It was at a time when the old Government of Russia was taking its chance on the life of the Czar and the continuation of the monarchy. When we loaned this money to the Government of Russia, some three hundred and odd millions—I have the exact figures here, and I will put this article in, with the consent of my colleague, so as not to take but one minute more—we loaned $130,000,000—we loaned a large sum, and there is $130,000,000 left in the Treasury of the United States—$130,000,000 that has not been expended to win the war.

The war is over. The money is in your country. It is in the hands of a gentleman who does not spend it except, according to this article, by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Now, gentlemen, if under the circumstances we should proceed by moral garnishment to say to the distinguished gentleman who now represents a divided country in Russia, who holds no commission from the present Government of Russia, who was originally appointed by the Kerensky government, when we loaned this three hundred thousand and odd dollars, "That money is here, and if the Secretary of the Treasury would only say we loaned that money to a government that is now collapsed, under international law there may be danger that a revolutionary success in Russia means a loss to the United States of $385,000,000."

But that is not what they are doing. They are not attempting to save that money in the hands of the Russian representative for the purpose of relieving your constituents and mine; but, on the contrary, according to this statement, certain favored bankers who were not surprised when, on the 17th of last month—I will give you the exact date——

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I do not combat the gentleman's argument. In the interest of accuracy, let me say that we authorized a loan of $300,000,000 to Russia, but did not loan more than $187,000,000.

Mr. MASON. All right. This article states this:

It is understood there is still a balance in the United States Treasury of about $130,000,000 granted to Russia and never used after the fall of the Kerensky government.

Now, that $130,000,000 is a sacred trust. It belongs still either to win this war for America, or, the American war having been won, then as a matter of fact that money should be held as security to the American taxpayers instead of being used to pay the interest upon the bonds that have been discredited in the market, so that favored bankers have been able to go out and buy them up at 48 cents on a dollar and then find themselves getting 6½ per cent on bonds that were selling for 48 cents and getting that out of the money that belongs to the people of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The $130,000,000 is still in the Treasury of the United States and none of it is being used for this purpose. It never has been paid to them. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows it.

Mr. MASON. This is what it says here, and this has been vouched for by a member of the Foreign Relations Committee. Now, you and I want the facts, and if I am mistaken, I want to be corrected.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Do I understand that from this $130,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States the interest upon the Russian bonds of the former government is being paid?

Mr. MASON. I do so state. I only state it upon information given to me the other day here upon the floor, and this article states it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, he must be absolutely wrong about that. That fund he is speaking about, of $130,000,000, is simply money that has not been actually loaned; that is not being used for any purpose in connection with the Russian loan. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] was absolutely right when he said that we authorized a loan of approximately $300,000,000 to the Russian Government.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But, as a matter of fact, we have loaned only $187,000,000, as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] states. Now, the money remaining in the Treasury is not a fund that is used or that could be used for the payment of interest.

Mr. LITTLE. Let us see if we can be told how much money the former Russian ambassador now has that this country intended to loan to Russia. Let us find out if that is one fund and the fund referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] still in the Treasury of $130,000,000 is another fund, or whether we are really all talking about the same fund.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think he is confusing the amount actually loaned with the amount that was not loaned.

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I think I have heard it stated that the fund actually loaned to Russia, such of it as was not actually sent to Russia, may still be here in the hands of some Russian agent, and that might possibly be used for the payment of interest.

Mr. MASON. That is exactly what I meant.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But that is not the money in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MASON. I do not say that.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman made that statement.

Mr. MASON. No; but I say that is all with the consent of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. PLATT. It is not.

Mr. MASON. Let us see whether this man is correct or not.

Mr. PLATT. He is not.

Mr. MASON. It is awfully hard to get the truth in Washington. As a matter of fact, you do not get the truth from any nation in the world. You do not even get the truth of what is occurring at the peace table. You can not get the truth of what is occurring in Russia. Yesterday I heard two newspaper reporters speak in this city, and I wish every one of my colleagues could have heard them. They were clean and honorable. They went over there to represent American newspapers, and one of them gave a list of the good reporters who were canned—perhaps some of you do not understand the language of the street—were discharged, simply kicked out, because they dared to tell the American people the truth. Now, let us see which is right. I have stated that the money in the hands of this agent of the Russian Government has been used to pay interest upon the bonds of the Russian people, bonds that were issued before America went into the war, when Russia was in the war. I have stated that they were clients of Morgan & Co., and that some bankers knew the interest was to be paid and some did not. I am not complaining about that so much.

Mr. LITTLE. He is not an agent of the Russian Government now, is he?

Mr. MASON. I think not; but he is the only representative they have here. His name is the same. I do not know whether he is a brother or a cousin or an uncle.

Mr. LITTLE. He is not in the employ of the Bolsheviki?

Mr. MASON. Oh, no. They have no representative here. It is a mere chance if one of their people has the opportunity to tell the truth about the Russian situation. What we want is the truth, whether it helps or hurts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should like very much to get the matter clear in my mind if I can. Does the gentleman refer to loans made by the Government as a Government?

Mr. MASON. No.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Or does he refer to loans made by individuals in the purchase of Russian bonds?

Mr. MASON. Yes; that is what I refer to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then the gentleman is not referring to any official loan made by this Government.

Mr. MASON. Except where the money is paid out of that loan that is still left in the hands of the Russian representative. It was not used to win the war, but he has used that balance to pay interest upon bonds that were sold before we went into the war that were not a part of the war measure. I say that you and I, as lawyers, as diligent attorneys, would give the moral garnishment and say that that money belongs to Uncle Sam and the people, and it should come back to us. But instead of that they are laying it out to be distributed to the bondholders in this country.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To get back again. The Government, as I understand the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from Ohio, the Government itself after we had entered the war loaned to the Russian Government $187,000,000.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There had been Russian bonds sold here prior to the time that this Government entered the war?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman say that a part of that $187,000,000 loaned by the Government after we had entered the war is being used to pay interest on bonds sold to individuals before we entered the war?

Mr. MASON. That is exactly what I say. As I stated the other day, I was informed and gave my information to you—and the only proof I have now I am offering to you—is a statement by a credible reporter on a newspaper who is writing on this subject. I want Congress to know the facts. My statement was that there was $130,000,000 left in the Treasury which had not been sent to Russia but is still in the hands of the United States or of the Kerensky government, and that the Secretary of the Treasury has consented that he may pay the interest on these bonds out of the money that should have been returned to the United States on the signing of the armistice.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Let me ask the gentleman, if the loan had been made it must have been made without any string attached to it—I mean a loan made by this Government to the Russian Government, whatever that government was—must have been made without any strings tied to it.

Mr. MASON. I think there were many strings tied to it, where it was to be used to help us win the war, and after the war was won they should never have paid out another cent, but said, "Here is your money." But instead of that it has been used to bull and bear the market on these ancient bonds of Russia, if the statement is true, and that is what I want to find out. This article makes it very clear.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will pardon me, how is the gentleman proceeding?

Mr. MASON. I am proceeding by unanimous consent. I think that I will be through in less than five minutes. I do not know of anything that is more important when we are considering the question in this Congress whether you are going to leave the American boys in Russia. The other day they lost 50 men and 5 officers 500 miles from any spot where we had a pound of iron or anything else to defend. Great God, gentlemen, do you understand that we are making war; that we have declared any war against Russia? If that is true, if we have declared war, instead of leaving 10,000 men up there to be slaughtered as they were in Mexico, you ought to send a million and a half men. But if you have not declared war, the Constitution gives you the right to pass a resolution which declares that these boys should be brought out of Russia. The American people want them brought out. They did not enlist to fight the poor people of Russia; they enlisted to fight the Germans, and they have licked them to a standstill, and there was not a German within 3,000 miles of Archangel, and these boys that have been sent to Russia have been 350 miles from the place they were to defend, sent under Japanese commanders, sent under English commanders. England has no troops there now; they were ordered out. English soldiers went to Lloyd George and asked him if he was going to send them to Siberia and he said, "No; far be it from me to send English soldiers into a country that we have not declared war against." What are the American soldiers doing? We ought to bring them home. They did not enlist to fight the poor people of Russia; they did not enlist to go into the wilds of Siberia. But, gentlemen, I am getting away from the question of the dollar mark into the question of blood, and when I do I am likely to get excited.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KINKAID. Can the gentleman inform the House where remains that portion of the $187,000,000 which is being used to pay the interest on these bonds?

Mr. MASON. I think the article that I am about to read will explain that better than I can.

New York, N. Y.—Announcement on Thursday, last week, by the National City Bank—

That great patriotic organization willing to sacrifice everybody but themselves—of the payment of interest, due January 10, on the 6½ per cent external obligations of the old Russian Government attracted considerable interest in banking circles.

Partly due to the unsettled conditions in Russia, but mainly accentuated by the fear that the January interest would go in default—holders of these bonds have thrown them on the market during the last few weeks to such an extent that the price declined from nearly 80 at the end of October to below 50 just before the end of the year.

These are external obligations of the old Russian Government—

Remarkable, is it not, that the ancient bonds of the ancient Government of Russia should so fluctuate! One man who was not posted sells them below 50 cents, and the wise man who is posted buys them, and they are not worth 5 cents unless he has some information as to what the Treasury Department is going to do.

It can, however, be stated that in certain banking circles the payment of the interest caused no surprise.

Some of the bankers were not surprised. Is it not surprising that some knew and some did not?

It would also cause no surprise to these interests to see the bonds paid off at maturity.

Out of whose money, please?

One banker, who was well versed with conditions surrounding these bonds, expressed the opinion that the worst that could happen would be a short extension on more favorable terms than those under which the bonds were issued. "It is hardly conceivable," he says, "that the allies, as well as the United States, would let these bonds go to default in view of the enormous holdings of Russian securities in the allies' countries, in comparison with which the outstanding amount of 6½ per cent bonds, viz, $50,000,000, is very small."

It is understood that there is still a balance in the United States Treasury of about $130,000,000—granted to Russia and never used after the fall of the Kerensky government. The payment of coupons on Russia's obligations in this country, it is said, comes from this fund, and it is understood that the sanction of the Treasury has to be obtained for each payment.

Just as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] said—

Mr. LOBECK. Does the gentleman know the amount of interest paid out?

Mr. MASON. They pay 6½ per cent on $50,000,000. That is a mere bag of tools—bagatelle, I should say.

The 6½ per cent bonds are undoubtedly the cheapest of all Russian obligations dealt in anywhere in the world. While they declined from nearly 75 to 48 in New York, the 5 per cent rentes of long maturity quoted in all European markets remained practically stationary—around 60.

Most remarkable thing. First, they declined the Russian bonds, when we were willing to lend them money, and then there are some wise people so connected with the department that they know they are going to get the interest, and they buy them at 48, and it will only take a few more years' interest to get their principal back in interest.

Bankers who have been following this situation closely predict that inasmuch as the United States Government—

And here comes the "nigger in the woodpile"—

has seen fit to pay interest out of the balance of the Russian funds it still has on hand—

And this is what we call bulling the market—

that inasmuch as the United States Government has seen fit to pay interest out of the balance of the Russian funds it still has on hand, it will not decline to pay the principal of the bonds when due out of the same funds, inasmuch as this $50,000,000 issue and another of $725,000,000, due December 21, 1921, are the only short-term Russian bonds outstanding and represent an inconsequential sum to be provided for to prevent a default by the Russian Government, which is obligated to the allies for billions of dollars.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] to say awhile ago that the Treasury Department had not paid any money toward the interest on these bonds. I will ask him whether that is correct?

Mr. PLATT. The report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows this whole thing. So much money has been advanced to Russia——

Mr. MASON. I am not saying that the Treasury Department did pay it.

Mr. GARNER. That article says so and the gentleman seems to have great confidence in the article.

Mr. MASON. The article does not quite say that. It says that they are paying it out of the funds that are in their hands. I believe our colleagues from New York [Mr. PLATT] and from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] are right, that there are $130,000,000 still in the Treasury.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman will pardon me, but as I got the reading of that article, it is a positive statement that the money now in the Treasury that simply was not used as a loan is being used to pay the interest on the bonds issued before we ever entered the war and before this authorization was made.

Mr. MASON. I do not think it goes that for.

Mr. LONGWORTH. It goes that far if it goes anywhere.

Mr. MASON. Anyway take that horn of the dilemma if you like, would you not like to know the facts?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I certainly would.

Mr. MASON. That is all I want to know. This article says this, but in the latter part of the article it says:

It is understood that the sanction of the Treasury has to be obtained for each payment.

It further says:

The payment of coupons on Russia's obligations in this country it is said comes from this fund.

What is this fund? It is understood there is still a balance in the United States Treasury of about $130,000,000 granted to Russia and never used after the fall of the Kerensky government.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is a direct charge that money now in the Treasury that never was actually expended under our authorization of a loan to Russia is being used now to pay the interest on bonds issued by the former Government of the Czar at a rate of 6½ per cent interest.

Mr. MASON. I think it is a direct charge.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, as I understand the situation with regard to this authorization, it is this: When the first liberty loan issue, as I recall it, $2,000,000,000 was authorized as loans to the allies—and I do not think my figures are absolutely accurate—it was left to the Treasury Department, the administration, to determine what amount shall be loaned to the respective governments, and in many cases authorizations were made by the Treasury Department, but all the money authorized was not loaned, as in this case, but surely the money that was not actually loaned to any of the allied Governments merely will remain in the Treasury unexpended and could not be used by the Treasury Department properly for the payment of interest on any other bond.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman said "properly."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Properly. That is what I understand that the charge made by that article is—that exact charge.

Mr. MASON. But if the gentleman will read the whole article it might lead in this direction, that between the $130,000,000, which is in the Treasury, and the $185,000,000 would leave, say, $50,000,000 we were to use for the use of the war. You know there was a large sum of money used to buy supplies to send into Russia—engines and everything of that kind. Now, while the unexpended balance in the hands of the original Russian representatives is $50,000,000; that is, of that $50,000,000 which was turned over to the Russian Government, a part of it stands to the credit of the representatives of the Kerensky government and out of that possibly, because the article says that before it could be paid as interest on these bonds they had to have the consent of the Treasury Department——

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, that would be quite another thing. I can see no possible objection to the representative of the Russian Government paying the interest on the bonds issued under the liberty loan. We do not have to ask where that money comes from so long as we get the interest, and it is very different from what I understood the gentleman to charge that the Treasury Department was using funds actually in the Treasury for that purpose.

Mr. MASON. I do not see a bit of difference from any moral standpoint if in the hands of this man here there was $20,000,000 or $10,000,000 turned over to him to help win this war;

he is bound morally, when his Government fell, to turn that money back into the Treasury of the United States, and if it is not in the Treasury of the United States it is in his possession, and clearly, from this article, that interest is being paid with the consent of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is not what the article says.

Mr. MASON. Yes; it does.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The article says the $130,000,000——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, our colleague has occupied the floor for about half an hour, and I trust he will now let us proceed.

Mr. MASON. Give me just a couple of minutes to answer this.

Mr. MANN. I know; but then there will be another one, and the gentleman can get in to-morrow on general debate for an hour.

Mr. MASON. I beg the pardon of the House for occupying so much time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to considering this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to the conditions therein expressed, as to length of service and honorable discharge, the provisions of sections 2304, 2305, and 2309, Revised Statutes of the United States, shall be applicable in all cases of military and naval service rendered in connection with the Mexican border operations or during the war with Germany and its allies as defined by public resolution No. 32, approved August 29, 1916 (39 Stat. L., 671), and the act approved July 28, 1917 (40 Stat. L., 248).

The committee amendments were read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "four," strike out the comma and insert the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Page 1, line 6, after the word "five," strike out the words "and twenty-three hundred and nine."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object. Gentlemen ought not to go down in front within a few feet of the desk, where we can not hear them.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho moves to reconsider and lay that motion on the table. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks briefly on this particular bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BRIDGE AND DAM ACROSS THE MAHONING RIVER, OHIO.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12995) granting the consent of Congress to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co. to construct, maintain, and operate a combined bridge and dam across the Mahoning River.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, operate, and maintain a combined bridge and dam and approaches thereto across the Mahoning River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the town of Struthers, county of Mahoning, State of Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "fix," insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no dam constructed under the consent hereby granted shall be used to develop water power nor to generate electricity."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SNOOK, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

METALLIFEROUS MINERALS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 385) authorizing the mining of metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations as amended by the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 385) to authorize mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered, under general regulations to be fixed by him and under such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, not inconsistent with the terms of this act, to lease to citizens of the United States or to any association of such persons or to any corporation organized under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory thereof, any part of the unallotted lands within any Indian reservation within the States of Arizona, California, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Oregon, Washington, or Wyoming, heretofore withdrawn from entry under the mining laws for the purpose of mining for deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals, which leases shall be irrevocable, except as herein provided, but which may be declared null and void upon breach of any of their terms.

SEC. 2. That after the passage and approval of this act, unallotted lands, or such portion thereof as the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, within Indian reservations heretofore withheld from disposition under the mining laws may be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be subject to exploration for the discovery of deposits of gold, silver, copper, and other valuable metalliferous minerals by citizens of the United States, and after such declaration mining claims may be located by such citizens in the same manner as mining claims are located under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the locators of all such mining claims, or their heirs, successors, or assigns, shall have a preference right to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for a lease, under the terms and conditions of this act, within one year after the date of the location of any mining claim, and any such locator who shall fail to apply for a lease within one year from the date of location shall forfeit all rights to such mining claim: Provided further, That duplicate copies of the location notice shall be filed within 60 days with the superintendent in charge of the reservation on which the mining claim is located, and that application for a lease under this act may be filed with such superintendent for transmission through official channels to the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That lands containing springs, water holes, or other bodies of water needed or used by the Indians for watering live stock, irrigation, or water-power purposes shall not be designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to entry under this act.

SEC. 3. That leases under this act shall be for a period of 30 years, with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of 10 years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, unless otherwise provided by law at the time of the expiration of such periods: Provided,

That the lessee may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be permitted at any time to make written relinquishment of all rights under such a lease and upon acceptance thereof be thereby relieved of all future obligations under said lease.

SEC. 4. That in addition to areas of mineral land to be included in leases under this act the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may grant to the lessee the right to use, during the life of the lease, a tract of unoccupied land, not exceeding 80 acres in area, for camp sites, milling, smelting, and refining works, and for other purposes connected with and necessary to the proper development and use of the deposits covered by the lease.

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, in making any lease under this act, may reserve to the United States the right to lease, sell, or otherwise dispose of the surface of the lands embraced within such lease under existing law or laws hereafter enacted, in so far as said surface is not necessary for use of the lessee in extracting and removing the deposits therein: Provided, That the said Secretary, during the life of the lease, is hereby authorized to issue such permits for easements herein provided to be reserved.

SEC. 6. That any successor in interest or assignee of any lease granted under this act, whether by voluntary transfer, judicial sale, foreclosure sale, or otherwise, shall be subject to all the conditions of the approval under which such rights are held and also subject to all the provisions and conditions of this act to the same extent as though such successor or assign were the original lessee hereunder.

SEC. 7. That any lease granted under this act may be forfeited and canceled by appropriate proceedings in the United States district court for the district in which said property or some part thereof is situated whenever the lessee, after reasonable notice in writing, as prescribed in the lease, shall fail to comply with the terms of this act or with such conditions not inconsistent herewith as may be specifically recited in the lease.

SEC. 8. That for the privilege of mining or extracting the mineral deposits in the ground covered by the lease the lessee shall pay to the United States, for the benefit of the Indians, a royalty which shall not be less than 5 per cent of the net value of the output of the minerals at the mine, due and payable at the end of each month succeeding that of the extraction of the minerals from the mine, and an annual rental, payable at the date of such lease and annually thereafter on the area covered by such lease, at the rate of 25 cents per acre for the first calendar year thereafter; 50 cents per acre for the second, third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively; and $1 per acre for each and every year thereafter during the continuance of the lease, except that such rental for any year shall be credited against the royalties as they accrue for that year.

SEC. 9. That in addition to the payment of the royalties and rentals as herein provided the lessee shall expend annually not less than $100 in development work for each mining claim located or leased in the same manner as an annual expenditure for labor or improvements is required to be made under the mining laws of the United States: Provided, That the lessee shall also agree to pay all damages occasioned by reason of his mining operations to the land or allotment of any Indian or to the crops or improvements thereon: And provided further, That no timber shall be cut upon the reservation by the lessee except after first obtaining a permit from the superintendent of the reservation and upon payment of the fair value thereof.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to examine the books and accounts of lessees, and to require them to submit statements, representations, or reports, including information as to cost of mining, all of which statements, representations, or reports so required shall be upon oath, unless otherwise specified, and in such form and upon such blanks as the Secretary of the Interior may require; and any person making any false statement, representation, or report under oath shall be subject to punishment as for perjury.

SEC. 11. That all moneys received from royalties and rentals under the provisions of this act shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservation where the leased land is located, which moneys shall be at all times subject to appropriation by Congress for their benefit, unless otherwise provided by treaty or agreement ratified by Congress: Provided, That such moneys shall be subject to the laws authorizing the pro rata distribution of Indian tribal funds.

SEC. 12. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations not inconsistent with this act as may be necessary and proper for the protection of the interests of the Indians and for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into full force and effect: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed or held to affect the right of the State or other local authority to exercise any rights which they may have to levy and collect taxes upon improvements, output of mines, or other rights, property, or assets of any lessee.

SEC. 13. That mining locations, under the terms of this act, may be made on unallotted lands within Indian reservations by Indians who have heretofore or may hereafter be declared by the Secretary of the Interior to be competent to manage their own affairs; and the said Secretary is hereby authorized and empowered to lease such lands to such Indians in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit other Indians to make locations and obtain leases under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe in regard to the working, developing, disposition, and selling of the products, and the disposition of the proceeds thereof of any such mine by such Indians.

SEC. 14. That hereafter no public lands of the United States shall be withdrawn by Executive order, proclamation, or othewise for or as an Indian reservation except by act of Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to 20 minutes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill authorizing mining for metalliferous minerals on Indian reservations. It is made up of applicable sections taken from the coal, oil, and gas and coal-leasing bills and the water-power bills which have passed this House three times. The bill as originally introduced in the last Congress applied solely to the State of Arizona. It was referred to the Department of the Interior for report, and on the Secretary's recommendation was amended to include all of the United States, and in that form it passed this House. The Secretary further suggested that the bill should be amended to provide that only reservations or such parts of reservations as he might designate should be opened to entry for mining purposes, so that whether mining is to be permitted on any reservation or any part thereof under this act depends entirely upon the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary also suggested in his report the minimum royalty be raised from 2 to 5 per cent, and that was done by your committee. The last suggestion made in this Congress was that the receipts from royalties and rentals be subject to pro rata distribution to Indians entitled thereto. That amendment has been made. So every amendment suggested by the department is incorporated in this bill.

Furthermore, this bill has been considered by the Board of Indian Commissioners, consisting of 10 members appointed by the President to advise as to Indian affairs. At their suggestion is was amended, in section 2, to provide that lands containing springs, water holes, or water-power sites shall not be subject to entry under this act. Also, in section 9, to the effect that if the land of any allottee is damaged by mining operations compensation shall be paid. A third change, made at the suggestion of this board, is found in section 11, which was amended to provide that all funds received under the provisions of this act shall be subject to appropriation by Congress for the benefit of the Indians concerned rather than for their support, education, and civilization. The Board of Indian Commissioners suggested these three changes, which were adopted.

The bill was then taken up with the Indian Rights' Association, another group of friends of the Indians. They thought that competent Indians should be given the same privilege to conduct mining operations as citizens of the United States, and you will find that section 13 of this act authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue leases to Indians who are competent to manage their own affairs the same as to citizens. Incompetent Indians may also mine, but the proceeds remain under the control of the Department of the Interior. So, as the bill now stands, it has passed the scrutiny of every recognized friend or guardian of the Indians. The amendments suggested by them have been adopted and are now incorporated in the act.

As I said before, this measure passed the House by unanimous consent in the last Congress, went to the Senate, and failed of passage owing to a fillibuster against other legislation in the closing hours of the session. This bill has passed the Senate, and I sincerely trust that favorable action will be taken on it to-day by the House.

If any gentleman has any questions to ask about any provision of this bill, I shall be glad to tell him where it originated and all about it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. On page 3 of the report it says:

> Owing to the present demand for metals for war purposes, this is a most opportune time for the passage of a measure of this character.

That was June 29, 1918. Now, I assume the gentleman will agree that the present demand for metals for war purposes is less than it was at the time that report was written.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no question about that.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if that argument is out of the way, what other reason is there for taking up the time of Congress at this particular hour, in the closing days of the session, in an attempt to enact this legislation? Is it going to financially benefit the Indians and add to their tribal funds?

Mr. HAYDEN. Beyond a doubt the Indians will be benefited. It is well known that on many Indian reservations there are deposits of metalliferous minerals, which, if permitted to be mined, would produce a revenue that would be deposited in the Treasury as tribal funds and used for the benefit of the Indians. As the case stands now, no mining of any kind whatsoever can be done on any executive-order Indian reservation. There is no law of any sort whereby the Secretary of the Interior can permit mining on any Indian reservation of such a character. The only place where the mineral resources of the Indian lands have been developed is in Oklahoma, where special acts have been passed by Congress to permit coal, oil, and gas leases.

Mr. WALSH. Is it a fact that these Indians have been so comfortably situated that they do not care to engage in this work themselves?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is simply lack of ability. Mining is a highly developed art, which requires scientific knowledge, which the Indians do not possess, not to speak of the capital necessary for such enterprises.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I suppose if it were to be a profitable venture they might be able to employ somebody to show them how to do it, and have it done under their own supervision.

Mr. HAYDEN. As provided in the last section, Indians, under this act, can locate mining claims, and if they have the money to hire miners to do the work they are at liberty to do so.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; he is at liberty to do it, unless the department would take it into its head to leave 19,551,000 acres to the Anaconda Copper Co., and in that case the Indians in the gentleman's district would not have very much chance to engage in this mining business on their own account.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is not the least likelihood of anything like that happening.

Mr. WALSH. They would have to lease these various acres containing these deposits to somebody who will be willing to operate it.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is no argument about that.

Mr. WALSH. And I do not suppose the wheat farmers in the gentleman's district will be leasing mining lands and attempting to gather gold and other minerals from the soil. They will probably be leased to people who have a little knowledge of this highly technical science of extracting these things from the earth. Is it not likely that these lands will be leased to large mining interests?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no doubt but that large mining interests will attempt to obtain leases. The gentleman must remember that it usually takes a great deal of capital to develop mining properties, particularly copper mines. The chief concern of the Indians, however, is that use is made by somebody of the undeveloped mineral resources of their reservations and that a proper royalty is paid for the privilege of mining thereon.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose some of these mining interests have nearly as much money as are in these tribal funds belonging to the Indians.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Arizona a question. What provision is there in the bill which would require the lessees—these large interests, of which the gentleman himself has spoken—to develop the land or give it up? And what is the period of limitation? Otherwise there is going to be a grabbing of that Indian land, possibly, and then sitting down and doing nothing with it except with such portions as they please.

Mr. HAYDEN. The same provision is made here as is in the coal, oil, and gas leasing bill, which is that when the mines are not being worked the lessee must pay an annual rental for the land covered by the lease. This is in the nature of a penalty for failure to operate the mines.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. With pleasure.

Mr. STAFFORD. We all know that there are mining propositions on these Indian lands that are of great value. But some of them are more or less of a lottery. Has it ever been considered practicable from an industrial standpoint to have the terms for operating the mines based upon competitive bidding?

Mr. HAYDEN. This bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior must collect a minimum royalty of 5 per cent of the net value of the minerals at the mine. He may make it as much higher as he pleases.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. It has been the policy in the handling of the mining claims in the Indian Bureau and in the Interior Department in the past not to submit the leasing to competitive bids, but we always submit the sales of the minerals to competitive bids.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill provides for the development of the mining property by individuals or mining companies. It is not intended to sell the land.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. No sales are included in this bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I understand from the reading of the bill, there is no sale, but it is intended to grant an absolute right to an individual or corporation to do the prospecting and to develop the mineral resources on the unallotted land.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That is a correct statement.

Mr. HAYDEN. The title to the leased lands remains in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. The title is transferred to the lessee.

Mr. HAYDEN. Not at all. He has no title to the land.

Mr. STAFFORD. But the title to the product is in the lessee after he mines the property.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. For the time the lease runs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then it is a perpetual lease. At least the lessee has the right of renewal at the expiration of the term.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Upon reasonable terms to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; upon reasonable terms to be prescribed by the Secretary.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, how much time does the gentleman from Arizona reserve?

The SPEAKER. He reserves nine minutes.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks that I made this morning on the Military Academy bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the Military Academy bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

METALLIFEROUS MINERALS ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the bill now pending on the motion to suspend the rules and pass it is a bill to authorize mining on the unallotted lands in Indian reservations. We have now in the country left, I believe—I do not know how many Indian reservations. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona if he knows how many Indian reservations there are where there is unallotted land?

Mr. HAYDEN. In the States that this act applies to——

Mr. MANN. Can not the gentleman tell me how many there are?

Mr. HAYDEN. I do not believe anybody can.

Mr. MANN. I know the number stated in the report.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, if anybody could give that information to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. If I were on the Committee on Indian Affairs I would be able to give it to any Member of the House in one second, and I think the gentleman will be next year. Ask the department to tell. They know.

There are about 30,000,000 acres, so the report says, of these unallotted lands in Indian reservations. All the rest of the country is open to the people to explore for mining, either by the people who own the land or, if it is public land, anybody can go and explore for mining and file a mining claim. But there is little land left in the possession of the Indians; just a little land, 30,000,000 acres, only a small amount compared with the total amount in the country.

There is now pending before Congress a bill asking Congress to reimburse the people who have gone out West and started mining claims, to get these metals that are referred to in this report, because they said they did it out of patriotic motives as a war measure, and that it cost them money. Now, they want Congress to pay them the money back. And at the same minute the same class of men want leave to run all over the unallotted lands in Indian reservations. I understand that the Indians do not have many rights and never have had in this country. But they ought to have a few rights still guaranteed to them. Here is an Indian reservation with unallotted lands, where the Indians keep their cattle and their horses, and we appropriate every year large sums of money to help them stock these unallotted lands. Yet it is proposed to let Tom, Dick, and Harry, and anybody else in the country who wants to, walk in on these unallotted lands and explore for minerals. Of course, everybody knows that if you have got a wheat field and you permit anybody who pleases to go into the wheat field to explore, you will not have any wheat left, but you will have a row with the people, and everybody who knows anything about the situation knows that if you allow Tom, Dick, and Harry to walk in on these Indian reservations where the Indians are herding their stock, there will be a continuous row of some kind between the invaders and the Indian owners. It is human nature. It can not be avoided.

Gentlemen say, "Oh, well; but the Indians ought not to be permitted to own a piece of ground with minerals beneath the surface which the white people can not get at and use." After all, gentlemen, the world will still be wagging after you and I are gone. All the minerals in the world are not designed to be used by the present generation. There will be need of these minerals when our grandchildren and their descendants are yet coming along, and those who think that we ought to utilize every particle of mineral resources to-day are mistaken. We ought not to do that.

Now, everyone knows you can not provide for the doing of this thing without trouble. This bill has been pending around here a long time. It is a very important measure. A gentleman moves to suspend the rules and pass it. It came up the other day on a request to pass it by unanimous consent. I objected. A bill of this sort, if it is to be passed under any conditions, ought to be passed after careful consideration and properly safeguarded. It gives to any citizen of the United States, or to any association of such persons, or to any corporation organized under the United States or any State or Territory thereof, the right to go on any of these unallotted lands, and if they make or claim to make a discovery of minerals, then they are given a part of the surface of the land to carry on mining operations. I do not think we can afford at this late stage in our dealings with the Indians to rob them of what they have left or to encourage or incite trouble in their midst. We are asked every year to appropriate a considerable sum of money to keep liquor away from the Indians. Well, the Government of the United States is going on a prohibition basis, and I am in favor of enforcing the prohibition law; but everyone knows that whisky is one of the easiest things in the world to make. It does not take very much of an outfit to make whisky, and there will be whisky made in the Indian territories or near them for many years to come. We will appropriate a large sum of money on the one hand to keep whisky away from Indians, and this bill proposes to invite every kind of a white man to walk in upon the unallotted lands of the Indians and, if he can do it without being caught, to furnish whisky to the Indians. Under this bill he can go in legally. At the present time he can not go in legally. It is his business to keep off of that land. But if you pass this bill you make it proper for him to go in. If you catch him selling liquor to Indians you punish him, perhaps; or, I take it, under the new constitutional provision, if you catch him with whisky at all you can punish him. But you have got to catch him. Meanwhile the Indians get the whisky.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reserves 11 minutes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], permit me to say that evidently he has not very carefully read the provisions of this bill, because it has been specifically amended to provide that prospecting and exploration for minerals may be made only on such reservations or parts of reservations as may be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly well aware of that provision. This grants authority to the Secretary of the Interior to throw open the unallotted lands on all Indian reservations, and I assume that that may be done.

Mr. HAYDEN. On the contrary, at the Secretary's suggestion, the bill has been amended so as to forbid unauthorized mining. Secretary Lane said in his report on this bill:

> The latter amendment is suggested for the reason that there may be cases where the opening of all lands within a given Indian reservation to exploration and prospecting would be destructive of the rights and interests of the Indians or inadvisable from the standpoint of public policy, and the proposed amendment gives some discretion to the officers of the United States in that connection.

The gentleman from Illinois also states that the passage of this act may encourage the sale of liquor to the Indians, because it will give to anyone the right to go upon these unallotted lands. Let me say to the gentleman that in all my experience I never knew of anyone who was required to obtain a permit in order to enter an Indian reservation. People travel through them and across them every day in the year, so that this act will not in any way add to the present facilities for intercourse with the Indians and will not in the slightest degree make it easier to introduce intoxicating liquors into the Indian country.

Now I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, there are three kinds of Indian reservations—what is known as the fee reservation, the treaty reservation, and the Executive order reservation. A fee reservation is that to which the Indians own the title of the land in fee. A treaty reservation is one where the title to the land is vouchsafed to them by treaty provision. An Executive order reservation is one created by Executive order of the President of the United States, the Indians being placed upon it and holding their title by the grace of the Government. This bill applies principally to Executive order reservations. In some cases where there are no provisions now for mining this may extend the right to treaty reservations; but the point I wish to make is that practically all the reservations in the State of Oklahoma are either fee reservations or treaty reservations. Therefore this bill does not apply to the State I have the honor to represent, and Oklahoma is not enumerated among those States affected by this measure. In the light of these conditions, I hope I may speak without selfish interest and purely in the interest of the Indian.

This bill provides that these lands may be leased by the Secretary of the Interior under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him at a royalty of not less than 5 per cent of the net value of the minerals. It further provides for a penalty of 25 to 50 cents and $1 per acre in case the mineral is not mined for a certain length of time—or that is the effect of it. I am interested in the measure purely from the standpoint of the Indians, because in a great many reservations the Indians think they have minerals in their lands that they want mined, so that the royalties can be collected and given to them for the purpose of improving their allotments while they live. I sympathize with the conservation ideas of my friend from Illinois, but I think the present generation, whether white or Indian, have some rights to the treasures in the bosom of mother earth.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What does the gentleman mean by "net value"?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. That would mean the value after the expenses of mining are taken out.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Government of the United States in the original Pacific railroad matter had an agreement by which it was to get so much of the net revenue, but there was never any net revenue. They manipulated the expenses so that the Government did not get anything. The net cost could be manipulated so that the Government or the Indians would be defrauded.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill provides that there shall be a minimum royalty of 5 per cent and as much more as possible. In this the "net value" set forth in this bill, as commonly understood in the mining industry, means the value of the ore after deducting the cost of mining and transportation. I took up the matter with the Geological Survey and the Department of the Interior, and they said that that was the customary form of a mining lease, and there would be no difficulty in it.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I call the attention of the gentleman to section 10, which gives to the Secretary of the Interior the right to examine the books of the lessees and investigate their accounts. This should be sufficient guaranty of an accurate accounting, and other provisions require prompt payment, with proper penalties. This same plan has been thoroughly tested in leasing of Choctaw and Chickasaw coal lands in Oklahoma. It has worked very successfully and beneficially to the Indians, and very little complaint has been made concerning nonpayment of royalties for coal mined. The Pacific railroad matter was such a loose arrangement that it does not present a parallel case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Arizona, who expressed a willingness to answer questions, state how the term was arrived at by which these leases are to run—30 years?

Mr. HAYDEN. When I originally introduced the bill I followed the form of the water-power bill and made the term of the lease 50 years. In the last Congress there was objection in the House by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], and after we talked it over he offered an amendment reducing the term to 30 years.

Mr. WALSH. Then it was the idea of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HAYDEN. His motion was adopted by the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts does not recollect the incident. It was suggested that 50 years was too long for a lease to run to the individual developer before the Secretary of the Interior had a right to revise the royalty. My judgment was 20 years, but when we came to consider the trouble the developer would be put to and the large amount invested, we thought 30 years was a fair term to permit the development of the property.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin recall that the language in the bill which passed the House with reference to the length of time was identical with the language in this measure?

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the term was 30 years.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but this term is not 30 years; it is 300 years. It provides that the lessees can request an extension of 10 years upon reasonable terms and get it. I do not think that was the language in the other bill.

Mr. HAYDEN. That was the exact language of the bill which passed this House in the last Congress.

Mr. WALSH. What is the idea of fixing any term at all?

Mr. HAYDEN. My own preference would be that the leases should be for indeterminate periods, subject to revision at stated intervals by the Secretary of the Interior, but the House has adopted the plan provided in this bill.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is familiar with the lands and mining operations. I notice that they omitted the great State of Idaho and the State of Oregon and they were put in by amendment. What is the idea of giving them 80 acres additional to the land where the minerals are?

Mr. HAYDEN. That provision is copied from the potash law, approved in October, 1917. Oregon and Idaho have been included in this bill at the request of the Representatives from those States.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. MANN. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. WALSH. Can the gentleman state what the idea is of giving them 80 acres in addition to that land where the minerals are?

Mr. HAYDEN Suppose that a stamp mill was needed to crush the ore. It is necessary to have the use of some of the surface of the ground upon which to locate it. Very frequently ores are given treatment near the mines and it is necessary to have buildings for that purpose. It sometimes happens that the mine is located on a mountain side where it is impossible to erect buildings, and the ore must be transported by a tram, or in some other way, down to where the buildings can be located.

Mr. WALSH. That would be sufficient to put up a considerable mill.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Secretary of the Interior does not have to grant the right to use the full 80 acres. That is a maximum limit.

Mr. WALSH. That is quite a large limit, it seems to me. They could build a mill large enough on 10 acres, could they not? You are not only taking this land away for 30 years, where the minerals are, but you take 80 acres somewhere else, probably the most valuable land these poor Indians may have for grazing or for agriculture or something else, and turn it over for a mill.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am quite positive that the gentleman from Massachusetts never saw a mining camp or surely he would not have made that statement.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; I have seen them in the gentleman's own country.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there are a great many things in this bill that ought to be carefully explained, and it ought to be amended if it is to be passed at all, although I do not think that it ought to pass at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, may I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that two years ago he was present on the floor of the House when this bill came up for consideration. He did not then object. He has had every opportunity to offer all of the amendments that could possibly be presented, but he then permitted the bill to pass by unanimous consent. I am frank to say that I am very much surprised to find any objection upon his part now. He has had ample time to consider this legislation and I——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I objected the other day. I remember the bill. I objected to this bill several times in former Congresses.

Mr. HAYDEN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MANN. And the gentleman knows that I did.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman will fail to find anywhere in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD where he ever objected to the consideration of this bill except two weeks ago to-day. I have kept close track of this legislation and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken. In the closing hours of a Congress, with plenty of other work to do, I did not object to the passage of this bill in the House, knowing that it was as dead as a doornail, whether it passed through that door going that way or whether it passed through this door going up to the Clerk's room.

Mr. HAYDEN. This legislation was not considered in the closing hours of a Congress. The bill passed the House on the 4th day of September, 1916. There was plenty of time to consider it in the Senate. The bill was promptly reported to the Senate, but because of an unfortunate filibuster against the shipping bill it did not become a law.

Mr. MANN. The bill was dead. This is an old bill. My recollection is fairly good about these things. The gentleman has been trying to pass this bill for a good while. Somebody with a greedy eye looked over some of the Indian land allotted in Arizona and desired to have authority to mine upon that land, and the bill as originally introduced did not apply to any part of the country except Arizona, if I recollect rightly. Is not that correct?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; and at the request of the Interior Department it was amended to cover the whole country.

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; the Interior Department was not inclined to favor the bill in the first instance, and I regret that Members of Congress go up to the Secretary of the Interior or to the Commissioner of Lands and persuade him to favor bills which he first is inclined to oppose.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman want to use his own time?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. MANN. The Interior Department, in order to let itself down easy, being utterly unable to defend the original proposition, suggested to make this bill general throughout the country, and even then did not suggest that it be applied to Idaho and Oregon. I do not know whether the gentlemen who had the greedy eye will get a chance down there or not. I do not accuse the gentleman from Arizona——

Mr. HAYDEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. He represents his State, and the people with the greedy eyes who go to their Representative and urge him to offer a bill, and they do not find it very hard usually to persuade him that the bill is correct, wherever he comes from. But, after all, the question is whether we will permit these Indian reservations to be invaded and thus stir up trouble, practically destroy the reservations so far as the unallotted lands are concerned, upon the provision that we pay to the Indian fund 5 per cent of the net value of the minerals. Five per cent of the net value! Why, the Government of the United States charges more than that as an income tax. The net value is arrived at after all the expenses are paid. Then you are going to get 5 per cent of that. The man who goes in and steals the land gets nineteen-twentieths of the value and the Indians who own the land get one-twentieth. It will not hurt to have this bill laid over; it will not damage anybody if he does not get on this land to-morrow. I hope the rules will not be suspended and the bill passed. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, how much time is there remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois has three minutes remaining and the gentleman from Arizona four minutes.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the gentleman from Illinois intend to use his time?

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Arizona a question.

Mr. HAYDEN. I shall be very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In the State of Washington there are a number of these reservations where the Indians have been praying that they shall receive allotments, and I was wondering if this question of minerals would impair the future chances to have lands allotted to the Indians?

Mr. HAYDEN. If there are minerals in the ground undoubtedly such lands would not be allotted, because the rule is that mineral rights are reserved for the tribe as a whole, and anything derived from the minerals goes to the credit of the tribe.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The same thing applies to timber; but these Indians have had this dream held out to them, that in time, through education and otherwise, they would soon be competent to come into their own; and I am wondering whether they would be pleased to find some day when they come into their own it will all be leased. Is not that one objection?

Mr. HAYDEN. Not to this legislation, because if mines are developed the members of the tribe would probably be receiving more from the royalties than they could get from such lands in any other way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Arizona to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the Chair was in doubt.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 26.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two-thirds not having voted in favor of the motion——

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for tellers. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 168, nays 90, answered "present" 1, not voting 170, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. DAVEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for five days on account of death in family.

LATE SENATOR HUSTING.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I move that Sunday, February 23, be set aside as a day for the delivery of addresses on the life, character, and public services of the late Senator PAUL HUSTING, of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that Sunday, February 23, 1919, be set apart for eulogies on Senator HUSTING. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

THE RUSSIAN LOAN.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 10 minutes relative to the Russian loan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for not more than 10 minutes on the subject of the Russian loan. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know from what source the gentleman has his information?

Mr. PHELAN. From the Treasury Department. It is from the Assistant Secretary, Mr. Rathbone, to whom the Secretary referred me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, there have been some statements made this afternoon relative to our dealings with Russia on the matter of credits extended by this Government to that country. I shall not undertake to rehearse what they are, because they were made here on this floor this afternoon. All I desire to do is to make a simple statement of fact and show some incontrovertible facts.

By act of Congress of April 24, 1917, and by subsequent acts, this Government was authorized to advance credits to certain foreign countries among our cobelligerents. Acting under those acts, the President approved loans to Russia to an amount of $325,000,000. When he gave that approval he simply indicated that he was willing that such credit should be granted. We did not give the Russian Government the right to get that money, but there had to be a further act by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury, in pursuance of the power given him, made arrangements whereby $187,720,750 was advanced to Russia. Every single dollar of that money was advanced prior to December 1, 1917. That is over a year ago. Not one cent has been advanced by this Government to anybody connected with Russia, representing the Russian Government, out of the credits authorized, according to my statement just made.

There was a balance left of $137,270,250, which might be loaned to Russia, but the Secretary of the Treasury never has loaned any of that money, and Russia is not entitled to one cent of it until the Secretary of the Treasury says that Russia may get it. The last advance made to Russia was on November 15. 1917.

I said a moment ago that no payment was made after December 1, 1917, but I now have the exact date. The last advance made to Russia was November 15, 1917. The amount of that advance was $1,329,750, and on that same date we received a trifle more than that in interest due us.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a brief question?

Mr. PHELAN. I can not yield now.

Mr. DILLON. I wanted to know who paid the interest.

Mr. PHELAN. That is not material, so long as it was paid by somebody representing the Russian Government.

Mr. DILLON. I think it is material to know who paid the interest on this loan.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] declines to yield.

Mr. PHELAN. What I am stating are facts, and not subject to controversy.

Now, in November, 1917, when the so-called Kerensky government came to grief in Russia, this Government, through its Treasury Department, made arrangements with those who were representing what had been the government in Russia whereby they promised to use what funds they had on hand to pay the Americans to whom they owed money. As a result of that agreement practically all, if not all, of the claims of Americans against Russian contractors and others have been liquidated. I mean contracts for war supplies.

That, briefly, sets forth the situation. Therefore there never could have been paid out of our Treasury anything to anybody after November 15, 1917, relative to this matter, and nobody in any way could have obtained and nobody has obtained anything from our Treasury Department to pay any of the recent indebtedness due on any of the bonds previously put out by the Russian Government.

Mr. DILLON. Now will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PHELAN. I will be glad to.

Mr. DILLON. Will the gentleman tell the House who paid the interest upon that loan?

Mr. PHELAN. I presume the official representatives of the Russian Government paid it.

Mr. DILLON. Can the gentleman be more definite? I saw a statement in the papers that the interest on the loan we made to Russia had been paid. I want to know specifically who paid it.

Mr. PHELAN. What interest do you refer to?

Mr. DILLON. Interest upon the loan.

Mr. PHELAN. There are several interest dates. What payment are you talking about?

Mr. DILLON. The interest due on those loans.

Mr. PHELAN. From time to time?

Mr. DILLON. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Recently it has been paid, I presume, by those representing the old Kerensky government.

Mr. DILLON. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. PHELAN. I am not certain of that, but I presume it has.

Mr. MANN and Mr. MASON rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield, and to whom?

Mr. PHELAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I think that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] was not here when the question arose this afternoon, because he has not replied at all to what I understood was the charge. I understood it was charged that when the Kerensky government in Russia fell the agents of that government here had in their possession a large amount of money, which had been advanced by the United States to Russia; that the Treasury Department insisted that that money should be used in America to pay contractors and others; and that among the others who were paid were the men who held the interest coupons on the Russian bonds; and that, in effect, the Government of the United States had advanced money to Russia for which it has yet received no security, then in the hands of the Kerensky government here; and that that money was applied by the direction of, or with the consent of, the Treasury Department to pay the interest on Russian bonds. Now, I do not say whether that is an offense or not, but I think we ought to know whether those are the facts or not.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois if the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] did not consist of reading a newspaper article with reference to the payment of interest on January 10?

Mr. MASON. January 17 of this year; January 17, 1919.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] read an article which charged, inferentially at least, that the United States Treasury had been drawn upon on the 10th day of last month to pay interest on $50,000,000 of Russian bonds issued before we got into the war.

Mr. MANN. I did not so understand it. The gentleman may know.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MANN. And the question still remains unanswered.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may have five minutes further.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. All I want is just to know the facts. If the Treasury Department could furnish you this—they have had several days since I made the original charge, and I made the charge at that time upon information, stating frankly to the House that I had no way of proving the statement except newspaper reports.

Mr. PHELAN. Did the gentleman ask the Treasury for information subsequent to that?

Mr. MASON. Only in that way.

Mr. PHELAN. Then, you have made the statement again without asking the Treasury authorities to furnish the facts?

Mr. MASON. I have made the statement and demanded to know the truth, and I expected you or some other gentleman representing the administration upon the Committee on Banking and Currency to give me the information within the last 10 days.

Mr. PHELAN. What is the information you want?

Mr. MASON. I want to know if it is not true and has not the Secretary of the Treasury stated before your committee that they loaned this money? Did they not turn over to the credit of the Kerensky agent here $187,000,000?

Mr. PHELAN. Approximately that, to the provisional government.

Mr. MASON. Now, I think this newspaper editorial is susceptible of two constructions. You read it in one way and it sounds as though the money to pay the interest came out of the Treasury of the United States direct, but I think the spirit of the article charges that the agent of the Kerensky government had this money left over in his possession, the $187,000,000. That was drawn from the Treasury. It was deposited somewhere, God only knows where. There has been no answer to that proposition.

Mr. PHELAN. Probably those who deposited the money know as well as God knows where they deposited it.

Mr. MASON. But they are in the same position with God as to telling. They will not tell, and neither will He, and you can not find out. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELAN. I am not specially interested in that; but come to the point. What is it you want to know?

Mr. MASON. I want to know if it is not true, as stated by this article, that the interest on this $50,000,000 of bonds that was held by the National City Bank of New York was paid on the 17th of January as stated——

Mr. PHELAN. What year?

Mr. MASON. This year, last month; January of this year. These bonds, drawing 6½ per cent interest, were sold on the market at 48 cents, and then this payment of interest of 6½ per cent was made. I ask you to state now whether you know or not that that interest was paid out of the money held by the Russian agent in this country, with the approval and consent of the Secretary of the Treasury. That is what I want to know.

Mr. PHELAN. I will answer the question. I simply wanted to wait until I got the question developed.

I will say first of all that I think the inference might well be taken from the newspaper article and the gentleman's remarks that subsequent to November, 1917, money in the United States Treasury had been paid out to meet these interest obligations referred to. That was one reason I gave particular attention to the date on which the last payment was made. Now, to come to the gentleman's question, I think I can answer most of it if I can not answer all.

After the fall of the Kerensky government there were left in the hands of Bakhmeteff and some of the other representatives of this government certain balances, unquestionably, of funds which had been advanced by this country to Russia.

Mr. MASON. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. I may disagree with the gentleman in this respect, and probably do, but I think the money was properly advanced to Russia at that time.

Mr. MASON. I am not questioning that.

Mr. PHELAN. In addition to that, our Government, as I stated, provided very carefully that, first of all, those contractors to whom that Government owed money or to whom it was under obligations should be paid. So they had the balance of the money advanced by this Government, and they also had in a fund money obtained from the sale of goods and merchandise of various kinds which they had contracted for and obtained the title to, and, in addition, they had funds received from private sources, perhaps some of their own funds, perhaps from money that had been advanced by Great Britain, because Great Britain had advanced considerable to Russia before we started in. But, at any rate, they had a certain amount of money from various sources, undoubtedly including some that we had advanced. Now, our Government, as I say, required that they should pay our American contractors. Whether or not at that time they required that they should pay the interest on bonds held by people in this country issued by the Russian Government prior to the time when we advanced that credit to them I can not say for certain, but I think they might very well have done so.

Mr. MASON. But you have no knowledge on that?

Mr. PHELAN. I have no knowledge that there was any understanding upon the part of our Treasury Department that they should do it. I have an understanding that our Treasury Department, so far as it could, endeavored in every way possible, and I think properly, to provide for those to whom the Russian Government owed money in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The inference to be drawn from the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], and certainly from the article he read, was that this Government having authorized a loan of $300,000,000, in round numbers, to the Russian Government, and having advanced, in round numbers, $187,000,000, that the balance, about $130,000,000, now in the United States Treasury, was being used to pay the interest on bonds heretofore, and before we went into the war, issued by the Russian Government. I want to ask the gentleman whether he will not deny that that is the fact.

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly. I drew the inference from it myself, and therefore I was actuated to stand here and make the statement. It may be that some other interpretation can be given to the article and a different interpretation given to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, but I think that was the inference that the average man would make from that statement. I am not sure that on the part of somebody—I make no charges against the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON]—that that was intended to be the inference.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. Was not this about what happened in regard to the funds that the Russian representatives have had since then? There was at the fall of the Kerensky government a large number of outstanding contracts made by the Russian Government, partly on the credit which the United States had advanced and partly on the credit which Great Britain had advanced.

Mr. PHELAN. That is true.

Mr. PLATT. And a large part of the contracts had been fulfilled—that is, locomotives had been built and were ready to send over, and also war supplies. Our Government required the Russian representatives to settle up all those contracts, and in settling them there was a large number of supplies nearly paid for which they had to sell, and by selling them they received a considerable fund; and that money has been used in paying the obligations to contractors, and perhaps it may be interest on bonds.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; I will say in addition that the War Department and other departments have received some merchandise intended for Russia. It has been turned over and used by us in the war, and incidentally to help us win the war. I will say further that these very representatives, Mr. Bakhmeteff and others, have rented vessels to our Emergency Fleet or the Shipping Board, I do not know which, which have been used, and the rent has been paid, and that rent has gone into that fund.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The interest on our loan to Russia is being paid regularly?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes; the last payment was due the 15th of November, 1918. Most of that has been paid, and our Government could have collected every cent if it had so desired, because there is plenty at hand which they can get if they desire to get it, but our Government did not feel like crowding them as long as they had plenty of merchandise here when that merchandise may be, and probably is now, available, for the people of Russia need it badly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is that being paid out of any fund of the United States Treasury?

Mr. PHELAN. No, indeed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the only question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for five minutes more.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. There was an authorization for a loan of $300,000,000 and out of that $187,000,000 was actually loaned. The Secretary of the Treasury exercised his supervisory control over the disposition of this money even to saying that it would be used for war-winning purposes.

Mr. PHELAN. What authority has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. SLOAN. Nothing except the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHELAN. That is pretty nearly the best authority a man can get. I had understood it differently. I understood in many cases the money had been loaned to the cobelligerents with the understanding that the money was going to be used in some way in connection with the war, but that there were no strings tied to it, no inspector appointed to see that they carried out that purpose. It was handed over for the general purpose of winning the war.

Mr. SLOAN. The large purpose was to pay for munitions, materials, food, and so forth.

I do not find that there is any particular controversy here except the one question whether out of that money which is under the control of Bakhmeteff that was loaned to his government and under control, whether out of that there had recently been paid the interest upon the loans that were made to Russia by citizens of the United States before we entered the war. I am not putting any adverse construction on that fact, but I think the House would like to know whether or not that money which has been in the hands of Bakhmeteff, who was the custodian of money loaned by the United States, had been used for these private bonds and not the obligations of the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. The gentleman wants to know whether or not money which has been advanced by this Government to Russia has been used in any part to pay the interest upon bonds previously put out by Russia.

Mr. SLOAN. Yes; referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. PHELAN. It is almost impossible for anyone to say what money is used for a particular purpose when there is a fund made up of money derived from very many different sources, so I do not think anybody can say that money that we loaned to Russia has actually been paid out to pay the interest on some other bonds; but it is a fact—and I think this will answer the gentleman's question—that out of a fund among which are moneys advanced by this Government there has been money paid to holders of bonds previously put out by the Russian Government. Does that answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. SLOAN. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. I want to say just one other thing in regard to the point raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], and that is this, that you must keep in mind in connection with the payment of the bonds referred to, which were put out by the Russian Government before we extended credit to them, that those men had a valid claim, and that they easily by a law process could have tied up large amounts of merchandise owned by that provisional government or to which it had title, and we might have been worse off, if that had been done, looking simply at the Government's point of view and nothing else, than if the interest had not been paid on these bonds. In the second place, if we are going to be paid back this money by Russia—I do not know what the situation is going to be in the future—I presume the bonds put out to private bondholders while Russia was a government and before we extended any credit to her are going to be paid. So that it does not make any particular difference how this thing is handled in that respect; but the fact is—and this is the salient point of the whole thing—that since November, 1917, our Government has advanced nothing to Russia nor to anyone representing Russia.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman in a position to inform this House who the principal Russian bondholders are in this country?

Mr. PHELAN. No, I am not; and I am not interested to know.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I just want to see if I have gotten the situation entirely clear in my mind. As I understand from the gentleman's statement, out of the $187,000,000 advanced to Russia as represented by Bakhmeteff, there were certain residuary balances remaining after the payment the gentleman mentioned, and then that the Russian Government, as represented by Bakhmeteff, had other funds in its hands, obtained from other sources.

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And out of this aggregate, part itself of the residuum of balances of the $187,000,000, the Russian Government, represented by Bakhmeteff, has paid interest upon the money owed by that Government to the United States, and on money owed by that Government to certain private individuals in the United States.

Mr. PHELAN. Out of the general fund held by them.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. There is a very extensive anti-Bolsheviki propaganda being carried on in this country by a purported Russian committee. It is charged that this committee is being financed by the former Kerensky agent, Bakhmeteff, and his associates. Is the gentleman in a position to advise us whether this propaganda is being carried on with money that the United States Government loaned to the Kerensky government?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I can not answer that question, and I really think that is outside of the present purpose here.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman know whether this propaganda is being financed by Bakhmeteff and his associates?

Mr. PHELAN. I am not in a position to say that there is such a propaganda.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does it not come to the gentleman's table, does he not see it?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not care to go into a discussion of that kind of thing, because I think it has nothing to do with this question. It is a question as to whether or not our Government is acting right through its administrative branches. I have stated here that the Treasury Department had acted absolutely right in this whole matter, and the inferences which might be drawn and I think have been drawn, which I think were reasonable to draw, have been incorrect, due to an incorrect statement.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does not the gentleman think that the American people would like to know whether the propaganda among them is being carried on at their own expense?

Mr. PHELAN. I do not care to go into that. I think that is entirely outside of the question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes out of order.

Mr. CHARLES B. SMITH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is unanimous-consent day, and I would like to know how long discussion is going to proceed. We have not done very much on the Unanimous Consent Calendar thus far to-day.

Mr. STAFFORD. The time has been largely taken up by suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois that he proceed for five minutes? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some misunderstanding. I asked this question some days ago. I stated that I had no proof; that I was asking for information. I stated that same thing again this morning and have asked for that information. Now, the gentleman rises and gives what information he has, and I am very much obliged to him, but he does not know and no Member of Congress knows. One gentleman upon this side of the Chamber, who is a member of the committee, said that the Secretary of the Treasury told him that the money held by this man with the unpronounceable name, Bakhmeteff, that that gentleman holds this money, but that the Secretary of the Treasury holds a supervision over it, and that is what this article charges, that this money, 6½ per cent, was paid upon bonds which were selling at 48 cents and that some bankers in New York did know it and some of them did not know it. No one has answered that question.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman charge on information that the recent payment on those bonds was made out of the United States Treasury?

Mr. MASON. I have not made any statement of that kind. I remarked that this paper—it is confirmed—stated that it was made out of money in the hands of this man who held United States money and that it was made with the consent of the Treasury Department. If the gentleman was on the floor this morning——

Mr. WINGO. I was on the floor and heard the gentleman. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MASON. Yes; of course. If the gentleman can answer my question, I will answer his if I can.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman read the article and I will read a short paragraph from it.

It is understood that there is still a balance in the United States Treasury of about $130,000,000 granted to Russia and never used after the fall of the Kerensky government. The payment of coupons on Russia's obligations in this country, it is said, comes from this fund, and it is understood that the sanction of the Treasury has to be obtained for each payment.

Does the gentleman say that that statement is true?

Mr. MASON. No; I do not know anything about it. I am exactly in the position the gentleman is on the other branch of the case. I do not know and you——

Mr. WINGO. I do know.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman does not know whether the money which was paid by this individual on the 17th of January comes out of the fund; the gentleman does not know, and if he does why does not he say so?

Mr. WINGO. Whenever I get a chance I am going to do so.

Mr. MASON. The gentleman can have the chance out of my time. According to the paper and according to the statement made by the gentleman from Nebraska the Government of the United States holds a supervision over the money of the United States in the hands of this Russian agent. Now, I do not charge anything; I am only stating what is charged by this newspaper.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Certainly.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the gentleman think this Government should have attempted to interfere to prevent Bakhmeteff or his associates from paying the interest of the bonds to which he referred in his speech this afternoon?

Mr. MASON. Yes; if they are paying them out of our money that he got out of the sale of the notes which we sold him. I say it was an immoral and unconscionable act, and he ought to have returned the money, when his Government failed, back into the United States Treasury. When he paid it out he did have the leading strings of the Treasury loosened with him.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WINGO. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WINGO. In the article the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] read, and which by reading he gave credence to, because he said he did not make inquiry at the Treasury as to whether or not it was correct, contains these two statements:

It is understood that there is still a balance in the United States Treasury of about $130,000,000 granted to Russia and never used after the fall of the Kerensky government. The payment of coupons on Russia's obligations in this country, it is said, comes from this fund, and it is undestood that the sanction of the Treasury has to be obtained for each payment. * * * Bankers who have been following this situation closely predict that inasmuch as the United States Government has seen fit to pay interest out of the balance of the Russian funds it still has on hand, it will not decline to pay the principal on the bonds when due, out of the same fund.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield? Is not that a direct charge that this money belongs to the United States?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the man who wrote that article intended to charge—and if the gentleman from Illinois did not intend to give that charge circulation and credence on this floor I can not understand his object—that as late as January, 1919, the Treasury of the United States advanced the money to pay the interest then due on Russian bonds sold in this country before we entered the war and now held by individuals and corporations. That charge is false, and the gentleman from Illinois, if he had taken the pains to phone the Treasury Department, could have known it was false, because not one single dollar has been paid to Bakhmeteff or any other representative of the Russian Government since November 15, 1917.

Now, the article is misleading in that it suggests—and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is either misled or he is misleading when he suggests—that the United States Treasury has supervision over a certain balance that Bakhmeteff has in the United States Treasury. He has no balance. The truth about that $137,000,000 is this: Proceeding under the act of April, 1917, the President made an order authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to grant credits to Russia to the extent of $325,000,000. What did that mean? It meant that the Secretary of the Treasury could grant credits to Russia without consulting the President up to $325,000,000. Now, acting upon that authority, prior to November 16, 1917, the Secretary of the Treasury did advance to the Russian Government $187,000,000 for the purpose of purchasing in this country war supplies for the Russian Army, at that time fighting Germany. That left what? It left $137,000,000 in the Treasury for Bakhmeteff? No. It left a balance authorization from the President to the Secretary of the Treasury, but Bakhmeteff has no claim upon that fund, and that fund was not drawn upon by him last month to pay the interest on the Russian bonds as charged.

Mr. ELSTON. Not only that, but were not bonds of the Russion Government delivered to us for the loans or credits we advanced to it?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; we received Russian bonds for $187,000,000, as the act of Congress required.

There are some other facts. At the time the Kerensky government failed, in 1917, Bakhmeteff and the Russian representatives had other funds besides this $187,000,000, which, as a matter of fact, I believe had already been paid out here to those furnishing supplies to the Russian Army. I will not make the assertion upon the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, but I will make it upon the authority of the common report that was current at the time, that these advances, amounting to $187,000,000, were not made to Bakhmeteff to be kept by him and put in the bank but were advanced for war supplies being furnished to the Russian Government; but when the Kerensky government failed Bakhmeteff did have funds on hand. Made up of what? From loans made to the Government by Great Britain, by way of credits in New York. He also had balances on hand, possibly from the proceeds of other bond issues that had been sold in the United States. Now, what happened? When the Kerensky government failed the Secretary of the Treasury refused to advance any more money to Russia. In addition to that, the Secretary of the Treasury said to Mr. Bakhmeteff and the Russian representatives, "You have gone to the people of this country, to the manufacturers, and you have obtained war supplies, and contracted for the manufacture of war supplies—did that upon the credit they knew you had in the Treasury of the United States. Now, you pay for this material." Bakhmeteff paid for that material or the balances due thereon. He took that material over. Some of it subsequently he turned over to the War Department of the United States, and it was used by us. Other of that material he sold——

Mr. MANN. Paid for by us.

Mr. WINGO. Paid for by us? These materials may have been partly paid for out of the credits we extended in 1917 or they may have been paid for out of other funds of the Russian Government held in this country and procured from loans made to it by Great Britain or out of funds derived from sale of Russian bonds to individuals in this country. But from whatever source the funds were obtained with which to pay for these supplies, they belonged to Russia, and Russia's representative, who had paid for them and had them in his possession, had a right to sell them, which he did. Now, the fact that he used the proceeds of the sale of these supplies in the payment of interest on Russian bonds held in this country is not a fact upon which you can base the charge that the Secretary of the Treasury made such payment.

The fact that can not be controverted is that not one dollar has been paid out of the Treasury on Russian account since November 15, 1917, and that fact could have been ascertained by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] had he made inquiry at the Treasury instead of repeating upon this floor the baseless charge contained in the article he read and in support of which he admits he has no proof. The charge made in that article is false, and viciously so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it makes any difference whether the interest on the bonds of Russia was paid out of the United States Treasury or some other fund. It may have been a perfectly proper transaction. But what are the facts? The Secretary of the Treasury advanced $187,000,000 to the agent of the Russian Government here, with some strings tied to it. It was understood and agreed that that money should be expended, at least in the main, in the United States in the payment of bills for war supplies.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MANN. I do not yield unless I get more time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. The gentleman from Nebraska is usually accurate, but I think the Secretary of the Treasury will not show that he undertook to tie strings to the loan.

Mr. MANN. I did not make my statement on the strength of what the gentleman from Nebraska said. If the Secretary of the Treasury was not a plumb d——d fool he did not advance millions of money to the agents of these foreign governments without taking any security and without knowing anything about what was to be done with the money. [Applause.] The gentleman can take either horn of the dilemma he wishes to. If the Secretary of the Treasury had any sense and any desire to protect the United States, he would either have taken Government securities for the money advanced or would have provided—and probably would have provided anyhow—that the money should be used for the purchase of or payment for war materials.

However, that is not so material to what I want to get at. The money was advanced. The Kerensky government in Russia fell; the original Czar's government fell. When the Kerensky government fell it is said—I do not know with how much truth—it is said that the Kerensky agent here, Bakhmeteff or somebody else, still had in his possession a large amount of the money that had been advanced by the United States. The United States had not received Russian bonds in accordance with the law providing for Russian advances, but the Secretary of the Treasury, it is stated, had taken demand notes, notes due on demand, for the money that was advanced, of the agents here of the Russian Government which had fallen; and, knowing that the Russian Government had fallen, so far as the agents here are concerned, and it is said knowing that the agents still possessed the money advanced by the United States, instead of demanding the return of that money on these demand notes, he authorized the payment of it as interest on the bonds.

Now, I do not know whether that is so or not, but I fail to discover any difference in principle between that and the payment of the money out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MASON. That is the point exactly.

Mr. MANN. It was money which belonged to us, for which we had not yet received any proper security. It would have been paid to us on demand. If we did not demand it and authorized its payment as interest, I do not say that is an improper transaction, but it is the same thing as though we had paid it out of the balance of $325,000,000.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I may say to the gentleman that very little money was passed. It was simply credits, and they still owed a lot of it to our manufacturers.

Mr. MANN. That does not matter. My colleague did not say that the money was paid out of the Treasury. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] tried to make him say it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What does the gentleman mean by that statement?

Mr. MANN. I mean that is the fact.

Mr. LONGWORTH. "The gentleman from Ohio" did not make any such statement. The gentleman only asked a question of the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman from Ohio tried to make my colleague [Mr. MASON] say that this article stated it was paid out of the Treasury of the United States. Maybe that is what the article stated. I did not listen to the article, but my colleague said he did not so understand it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The article as quoted by the gentleman, as I said, made that plain inference, and I asked him if it did not.

Mr. MANN. That is what the gentleman said, and my colleague said he did not so understand it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I did not try to make him say it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman repeated his question several times.

Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman from Illinois has no right to say that I attempted to make his colleague say something he did not want to say.

Mr. MANN. I have not said that you did.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEY FOR RHODE ISLAND.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the Speaker recognize me to make a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will make his motion, the Chair will recognize him.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I move to discharge the Judiciary Committee from further consideration of the bill (S. 2116) to increase the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island, to suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island moves to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of S. 2116, suspend the rules, and pass the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman want to pass the bill as amended or as originally introduced?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no information about that.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the House ought to know what it will be called upon to vote upon.

The SPEAKER. It will when the bill is read.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair stated the motion of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

The SPEAKER. Of course the Chair stated the motion. What else could the Chair do.

Mr. WALSH. I am propounding a parliamentary inquiry——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. As to whether that motion comprehends passing the bill as originally drafted or as reported by the committee with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will be whatever the Clerk reads. The rule when a motion is made to suspend the rules is that whatever is read from the Clerk's desk is the matter to be voted upon. Now, if any gentleman has an amendment to this bill, it will be read as a part of the bill to start on.

Mr. WALSH. That is an answer to the inquiry that I propounded.

The SPEAKER. Nobody is offering any amendment which the Chair has heard of.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRISP. An amendment is not in order and can not be offered on a motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. You can read an amendment into the bill when it is first read.

Mr. CRISP. Of course you can; but the Chair said "if any gentleman has an amendment to the bill"——

The SPEAKER. Nobody has sent up any amendment to be read. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States district attorney for the district of Rhode Island shall be at the rate of $3,500 a year.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WALSH. I demand a second.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] has 20 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has 20 minutes.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, in the Sixty-fourth Congress this bill as introduced called for the raising of the salary of the district attorney of Rhode Island to $5,000 a year. The Attorney General's office, I believe, at that time recommended $3,000, and the United States judge for the district of Rhode Island recommended $4,000. The committee brought in a recommendation for $3,500. That bill passed this House, raising the salary of the district attorney of Rhode Island from $2,500 to $3,500 a year. It went over to the Senate, and there it failed to pass because of a filibuster, conducted, I believe, by the Senator from Wisconsin. The same measure is now before us again. I have tried ineffectually several times to secure its passage.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House in justifying an increase of the salary of the district attorney for Rhode Island from $2,500 to $3,500 a year. I merely say in justification that a couple of weeks ago a bill was passed in this House to increase the salary of the district attorney for the district of Connecticut to $4,500 a year, although he now gets the same salary as the district attorney for the district of Rhode Island, $2,500 a year.

Mr. GORDON. What is the reason for this special legislation to raise the salary of a district attorney?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. The neglect of the United States in taking cognizance of its underpaid officials.

Mr. GORDON. But is there anything peculiar with reference to your constituent which makes his case one that ought to be taken out of the general rule?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Everybody in Rhode Island feels that this man is worth more than the common laborer, and the carpenter gets $70 a week in my State.

Mr. GORDON. Was this man drafted?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. No; he is over age.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, I mean was he drafted into this position? [Laughter.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Yes; he was drafted by the Democratic Party, and he has done very good service. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I doubt the propriety of picking out one district attorney at this particular time and providing for an increase of his salary under a suspension of the rules. I know the gentleman from Rhode Island has been most earnest and persistent in his efforts to secure favorable consideration of this measure. I doubt not that the gentleman to be benefited is a most worthy official, but we are approaching the close of the last days of the session of what will be known as the war Congress, and I do not believe that the American people will want to see us take up the closing hours in suspending the rules to pass legislation increasing salaries of Government officials. I think we have sufficient to do to pass the regular appropriation bills, and in addition to that to enact legislation to take care of the soldier boys that are coming back from the other side and seeing that they do not become destitute or in want, and that we provide some plan for this purpose to put into execution. [Applause.]

This bill seeks to pick out a district attorney of the State of Rhode Island and raise his salary from $2,500 to $3,500. The gentleman from Rhode Island says that there are sufficient reasons why this should be done, because some few weeks ago the district attorney of the neighboring State of Connecticut was successful, through some means or other, without the necessity of suspending the rules, in getting an increase from $2,500 to $4,000. These salaries may be inadequate, but if they are there are thousands of others throughout the country that are inadequate. They have raised the salaries of judges, and now we must go down the ladder a step and raise the salaries of the district attorneys. Next we must go down and take United States marshals, and I believe there is a measure pending for the clerks of courts, the bailiffs, and other officials.

My objection to this bill is based on the fact that this is no time to engage in the increase of salaries. We have a revenue bill coming in now in a few days that I hope will provide sufficient revenue to run the Government. If we do not get it in here pretty soon, if we are going to suspend the rules and pass bills increasing salaries, by the time the revenue bill gets in and put on its final passage it will be so many laps behind that required by the Government to pay the increase of salaries that we will think we have not passed any revenue bill at all. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I submitted a question to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] in reference to the bond and interest paying controversy had on the floor this afternoon. I quoted an authority which he challenged, and the question was afterwards raised by the gentleman from Tennessee as to the accuracy of my statement. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in his hurried statement seemed to have understood that I had talked with the Secretary of the Treasury about the Russian loan. I feared that I might be misunderstood. What I did refer to was the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury in answer to the questions put to him from both sides of the Ways and Means Committee table as to how he would dispose of the money that would be loaned to the various countries and how the credits should be disposed of which were to be loaned to these European countries. I should not regard myself a fit member of that committee if I did not insist on knowing how that money was to be disposed of, because we did not want the gold or other forms of money taken out of the country. Why, the amount now loaned is more than 50 per cent more than the sum total of all the money in the United States at this time. We wanted it to insure payment of American bills and to be used in winning the war. And so questions propounded from every side of the table demanded to know what safeguards would be placed about this money after it was loaned to these governments that our war-winning purposes would be served. Then it was that the Secretary of the Treasury assured the committee that he would exercise such supervisory control of that money as he could, so that it would be used practically all in America to pay for munitions, food, and on other American bills. If necessary, some gold should be allowed to go to Europe, and some did go to Europe, we were then informed. I want to say right here that if we had not had that assurance, I would not have voted for these loans to those countries. I take it that the Secretary of the Treasury was living up to his high duties and responsibilities when he assumed control, so far as he could, over the expenditure of this money so loaned. I have no doubt that, living up to his high duty and responsibility as he saw them, he could not fail to do with respect to the Russian loan, when the collapse of that Government came, what he did with all the other loans to the governments understood to be solvent.

I make this statement simply to have the RECORD straight. I do not state it with a purpose of criticizing the use of this money for the payment of the interest upon the loans made by this Government to Russia, nor the interest upon the other loans that Russia floated through private channels before we entered the war, because it may have been the best kind of judgment to do so, and I do not assume to criticize it favorably or unfavorably. I shall draw no conclusion till I know the important fact which I sought to elicit and others properly related thereto. I endeavored by my question submitted to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] to get at the real question. That was the question whether the money that had been furnished to the Kerensky government, through Bekhmeteff, was used in the payment of interest on these private prewar Russian loans. After that fact is established, it will be up for criticism, favorable or unfavorable.

Mr. PHELAN. I endeavored to answer that question, but perhaps the gentleman did not understand me. I said the interest had been paid out of a fund, and that fund was made up probably of some balances; it was made up of other credits obtained elsewhere; it was made up of funds obtained from private sources; it was made up, in part, from rents of vessels——

Mr. SLOAN. Oh, I understood the gentleman's answer.

Mr. PHELAN. And from other sources. I meant to give the gentleman the information.

Mr. SLOAN. I have no doubt that the Treasury of the United States can enlighten the people upon the substantial fact of whether or not it was largely made up of that money loaned by our Government to the Kerensky government.

Mr. GORDON. Does the gentleman know of any better use that a nation or an individual can put his money to than to pay the interest upon his debts when they are due?

Mr. SLOAN. This interest payment was on a loan not made by the Government of the United States to Russia.

Mr. GORDON. No matter who makes it.

Mr. SLOAN. Discussion of that feature was not the purpose for which I took the floor.

Mr. GORDON. Then how is it important?

Mr. SLOAN. It is important because the accuracy of my statement was questioned on the floor of this House.

Mr. GORDON. Oh, I did not understand that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will reserve that for a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I understand that a number of other bills are to be called up to-night, with the expectation of a night session. Many of us have important engagements early in the morning, and if we are going to have a long session to-night, let us test the question right now.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman to reserve that for a moment.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statements which have been made to me by gentlemen on the other side, I withdraw the point of no quorum for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent again that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know how long the gentleman intends to continue to-night.

The SPEAKER. As far as the Chair is concerned, he is not going to recognize anybody else under suspension of the rules.

Mr. KITCHIN. It will not take a long time, and we——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time remains to either side?

The SPEAKER. Seventeen minutes remains to the gentleman from Rhode Island and 11 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Waive the time.

Mr. WALSH. We can waive the time and adjourn now, but I wish to consume some more time upon this measure. I trust the gentleman will withdraw his request until we lay this bill away. [Laughter.]

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, under the veiled threat of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I reckon I had just as well withdraw it.

Mr. WALSH. I assure the gentleman I did not intend to convey any threat.

Mr. KITCHIN. If I do not withdraw, will the gentleman from Massachusetts object?

Mr. WALSH. No; I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 11 minutes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island if he will tell me, if this increase of salary be accorded, if the incumbent of this office intends to devote his entire time to the duties of the office?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. He devotes his entire time now.

Mr. WALSH. The report does not say so. The report says, or the report evidently complained, or, rather, states in a complaining manner, that the district attorney is compelled to devote practically his entire time to the duties of his office, and because he is compelled to do that he must necessarily have an increase of salary to $3,500. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Rhode Island, if this increase be granted, if he will then dispense with giving some of the Government's time to his private business and the Government can secure his entire time?

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I do not think he gives any of his time to any clients; and I think I could ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he knows anybody who performs work of that character in Massachusetts who gets these beggarly wages?

Mr. WALSH. Well, I will say to the gentleman, while the report is very meager in its information as to the character of the work done, I think we have gentlemen in Massachusetts who are performing similar duties to those performed by this distinguished official, whom the report says is compelled to devote practically his entire time to the duties of his office, who are getting substantially the same salary—practically the same salary—which is not adequate for a lawyer occupying such an important position. Of course, this district attorney is to be congratulated upon the fact that he secured from the judge before whom he practices a most complimentary letter, in which the judge of the Federal court asks the Assistant Attorney General in Washington to recommend that the United States Congress increase the salary of the district attorney.

Mr. GORDON. And also the judges.

Mr. WALSH. And I assume the same judge was one of those who directly or indirectly was asking for an increase of his own salary from $6,000 to $9,000, or in that vicinity. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is but natural for a district Federal judge who is in a position to recognize the attainments and the ability of the district attorney who practices before him to be interested in the salary that he receives, and to be sufficiently solicitous of the ability and attainments of the district attorney to write to the Department of Justice and intercede with the Assistant Attorney General for him.

But I repeat that I doubt very much if this is the time in this stage of this Congress, by a suspension of the rules, to be passing bills to increase salaries of Federal officials of this character, and particularly when we specialize as to the number and pick out an official in the great little State of Rhode Island and simply pass a measure to apply to that State alone. Why not consider a bill increasing the salaries of all these officials of ability and attainment, the same as we did with respect to the Federal judges? We increased their salaries the other day to a moderate extent, not as much as they would like to have had.

Mr. STEVENSON. Will the gentleman be prepared to support a bill of that kind if brought in?

Mr. WALSH. I certainly am not prepared to support such a bill.

Mr. COLLIER. Were you in favor of the judges' bill that was passed sometime ago?

Mr. WALSH. I was not. And if the gentleman will permit a personal reference, I think I was the only member of the committee reporting the bill who opposed it.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. I think I might recommend it as a very good idea to my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to consult——

Mr. WALSH. I have no doubt the gentleman is capable.

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY (continuing). To consult the ex-district attorney of Rhode Island, who sits near him, Mr. STINESS. He knows all about it.

Mr. WALSH. I talked with the distinguished gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. STINESS] some little time ago, when he attempted to secure unanimous consent for consideration of this measure by the House. And I recall the argument made by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. STINESS] at that time as to the character of services and as to the distinction of the gentleman who is occupying the position. But if the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY] thinks that because the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. STINESS] is in favor of this measure, or was in favor of the measure at that time, or because of the argument that he presented then, that it changes my judgment, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], who now seeks in the closing hours of the Sixty-fifth Congress, by the procedure known as suspension of the rules, to pick out his particular State, and through that method increase the salary of that distinguished official there, is mistaken. And so, Mr. Speaker, I submit to the House that as far as the report of the committee is concerned, as supplemented by the arguments of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. O'SHAUNESSY], who makes the motion, further supplemented by the statement of the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. STINESS], I submit further and again, and once more reiterate, that this is not the proper time to be passing bills to increase salaries of Federal officials. If you think the people of the country are in favor of it, you are greatly mistaken. When they come to pay the bills that we have incurred in this session of Congress, and when they will be called upon to pay taxes that must necessarily be levied because of those authorizations and in the incurring of those expenditures, it will not meet with their approval if they know that in the closing hours of this session we have picked out here and there a Federal official and increased his salary, and that practically within 24 or 48 hours we will take into consideration a conference report proposing to give to the boys who went across 3,000 miles of ocean to fight and offer up their lives a bonus of $60. For those reasons, among others, much more important perhaps, I am opposed to the measure, and I trust that the rules will not be suspended. [Applause.]

Mr. O'SHAUNESSY. Mr. Speaker, I want in all solemnity to plead guilty to the horrible charge of trying to suspend the rules, and I throw myself on the mercy of the court. I ask my friends to vote for this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 113, nays 96, answered "present" 4, not voting 216.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, pursuant to the order previously made, until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 4, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. Letter from the president of the Washington Railway & Electric Co., transmitting report of the Washington Railway & Electric Co. for the year ended December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1751); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

2. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a bill to relieve the estates of the late Capt. Belvedere Brooks, Capt. Samuel I. Zeidner, Capt. C. W. Gaylord, and Lieut. John V. D. Bebell from responsibility or accountability for the sum of $173.26 lost in battle (H. Doc. No. 1752); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

3. Letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a bill providing for retirement, as master signal electrician, of enlisted men of the Regular Army who have heretofore been discharged to accept commissions in the Army of the United States during the present emergency (H. Doc. No. 1753); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

4. Letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting list of documents and papers which are not needed or useful in the transaction of the current business of the department and have no permanent value or historical interest (H. Doc. No. 1754); to the Committee on Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

5. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of communication from the Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay claims for damage by naval vessels adjusted by the Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 1755); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation to pay claims for damages by collision, river and harbor work, which have been adjusted and settled by the Chief of Engineers, United States Army (H. Doc. No. 1756); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. Letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the chairman of the Lincoln Memorial Association submitting an estimate of appropriation required to defray the expenses incident to the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial (H. Doc. No. 1757); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PHELAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 5236) to amend sections 7, 10, and 11 of the Federal reserve act and section 5172, Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1026), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. WELLING, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11836) for the relief of Mary Holloman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1029), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11835) for the relief of Jimmie Lou Martin, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1027), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11834) for the relief of William Henry Coleman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1028), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNHART: A bill (H. R. 15574) for the construction of a Federal building at Warsaw, Ind.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15575) for the construction of a public building at Plymouth, Ind.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. KETTNER: A bill (H. R. 15585) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to cause survey to be made of the Colorado River, with a view to controlling the flood water of said stream, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Flood Control.

By Mr. HOOD: A bill (H. R. 15586) authorizing the acquisition of a site for a public building at Clinton, Sampson County, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15587) for the erection of a public building at Mount Olive, Wayne County, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 15588) requiring The Adjutant General of the United States Army and the Secretary of the Navy to furnish certain data to the adjutants general of the several States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HERSEY: A bill (H. R. 15589) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Presque Isle, Me., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAGO: A bill (H. R. 15590) to increase the cost of the public building at Waynesburg, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BLAND of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 15591) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the town of Irvington, county of Lancaster, Va., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROWLAND: A bill (H. R. 15592) to increase the cost of the public building at State College, Pa.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15593) to increase the cost of the public building at Dubois, Pa., to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 15594) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish a German cannon, with carriage and cannon balls, to the city of Warsaw, Ill.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES: A bill (H. R. 15595) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the village of Rockford, Mich., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHURCH: A bill (H. R. 15596) for the purchase of a public-building site at Visalia, Cal.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 15597) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Villa Grove, Ill., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15598) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Arcola, Ill., one German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 15599) for the erection of a public building at Edenton, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15600) authorizing the acquisition of a site for a public building at Williamston, N. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. LEWIS. I present a resolution adopted by the Chicago Equal Suffrage Association, of Illinois, signed by the president and recording secretary, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas there has been brought to a peaceful termination a world-fought war for the same fundamental principle of self-government, for which the Chicago Equal Suffrage Association has labored for many years; and

Whereas in the conduct of the war women have demonstrated that they are equally concerned with men in national affairs and have given service of equal importance to the safety of the Nation; and

Whereas woman suffrage has been given or promised by our allies and even some of the central powers as a result of the greater understanding which the war has brought of the principle of self-government and the service of women; and

Whereas our work as women of the Nation and the service of our men as soldiers of the Nation have given us a greater sense of national unity than ever before, making it especially fitting that we should address ourselves to the representatives of the Nation: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Chicago Equal Suffrage Association, in mass meeting assembled at 1.30 o'clock on the afternoon of December 31, 1918, in the Casino, at Chicago, Ill., appeal to the Senate of the United States to speed the coming of universal woman suffrage in this country by immediate passage of the Federal woman-suffrage amendment.

CHICAGO EQUAL SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION,
By BERTHA D. BAUR, President.
CAROLINE HOWE PACKARD,
Recording Secretary.

BOLSHEVIST PROPAGANDA IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I was not able to be in attendance at all upon the Senate yesterday. I was necessarily detained by attendance upon a very important, all-afternoon meeting of a conference committee and by other official duties which were pressing upon my attention. I am sorry I was not able to be present. Had I been present when the able and distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] spoke yesterday in condemnation of a seditious meeting which was held at Poli's Theater in this city Sunday night, I would assuredly have given my indorsement to the patriotic words which he uttered upon that subject, and I now give my hearty indorsement to all he said upon the subject. I regret that I was not here to say something upon the subject yesterday, and I now take occasion to say a few words on the subject.

I was inexpressibly shocked and horrified to read in the Washington Post of Monday morning this article:

[From the Washington Post, Monday, Feb. 3, 1919.]

URGE "RED" AMERICA—BOLSHEVIK SPEAKERS STIR HUGE AUDIENCE AT POLI'S THEATER—CITY'S RADICALS IN THRONGS—REPRESENTATIVE MASON CHARGES PLOT TO KEEP SLAV FUNDS IN UNITED STATES—SPEAKS FROM BOX AFTER ALBERT RHYS WILLIAMS AND OTHERS LAUD SOVIETS AND TELL OF SPREADING PROPAGANDA IN UNITED STATES—"SUFF" PICKETS TAKE UP COLLECTIONS—ADOPT JOHNSON RESOLUTION NOW IN SENATE.

Bolshevism was lauded and advocated in preference to American democracy before a big audience that packed Poli's Theater yesterday afternoon in an address on "The truth about Russia," by Albert Rhys Williams, a war correspondent, who recently returned from Siberia. For three hours Williams and Miss Louise Bryant, who spent several months in Russia, interspersed descriptions of conditions in Russia with praise of the Soviet system and the Bolshevik leaders and frequently disparaged the American form of government. Williams declared that the people will want a Soviet system instituted in America when it is seen how admirably the system works.

There was an attempt last week to have the meeting forbidden by the police. Many Secret Service men were in the crowd, which was largely made up of radicals. Five of the suffrage pickets were in the audience. Mrs. Ida M. Waters, a prominent local suffrage worker, assisted in taking up a collection to pay for the rent of the theater.

MASON SPEAKS FROM BOX.

Several Senators and Representatives attended the meeting, which was widely advertised. Representatives DILLON, of South Dakota; GORDON, of Ohio; and MASON, of Illinois, were among those present. Representative BILLY MASON, who occupied a box, made a speech at the end of the meeting. In his address Representative MASON declared that he was not "afraid to go to jail."

Miss Bryant declared the Russian people were trying to organize a new human society. "They do not want a civilization," she said, "like we have in America or England or France. They do not want an East Side and a Fifth Avenue in Russia."

DODGES FATE OF WOMEN.

Miss Bryant dodged the question when asked whether the women had been "nationalized," and said people should examine the law for themselves. When a member of the audience attempted to reply to Miss Bryant, Judson King, who presided, said he was not "going to stand for any speeches from the floor." The matter was put to an informal vote and carried unanimously. The audience was wildly demonstrative. Outburst of applause were frequent. Shouts of "Hurrah for the Bolsheviki!" greeted Representative MASON'S remarks.

"The verdict of the masses is that the Soviet has made good notwithstanding terrible handicaps," said Williams. "They were first deserted by the educated class, excommunicated by the church, sabotaged by the old officials, nearly guillotined by the Germans, blockaded and boycotted by the allies. That the Soviet beset and bedeviled on so many sides should have survived is a tribute to its basic strength."

PUSHING PROPAGANDA HERE.

Williams spent 15 months in Russia living among the peasants, in the red army, and in the industries with the workers. He is well acquainted with both Lenine and Trotzky and other leaders. When the Germans began the drive on Petrograd he organized an international legion for the defense of the red capital.

In the foreign office of the Soviet government he helped prepare the propaganda which was sent into Germany to stir up the revolution. He has been making speeches recently in many cities throughout the country. Over 100,000 copies of a pamphlet on Bolshevism written by him have been distributed in this country.

"The average American inquires," he continued, "why it is necessary to have a Soviet government and why not have a government like our own? The Russian workers and peasants have higher ideals than Americans."

TELLS STORY OF MASSACRE.

Williams asserted that the Soviet had done many things for which America should be grateful. He declared it has saved 500,000 American lives by bringing about the great revolution in Germany and Austria.

"The Soviet sent hundreds of agitators into Germany and Austria," he added, "who told the people to make a revolution as they had done in Russia. Millions of copies of the Soviet propaganda literature in different languages were dropped by aeroplanes, blown by wind, smuggled in boxes, and carried by prisoners into Germany. It was the greatest propaganda the world has ever seen."

Williams then told the story of what he termed the "massacre" of the Soviet officials at Vladivostok by the allied troops. During the funeral, he said, the American troops were landed. He said a Bolsheviki leader remarked, "All countries are alike—all imperialists."

Williams deplored the fact that the United States should have had for an ally "an autocratic and imperialistic country such as Japan." He said the Soviet government would endure if all the allied troops were withdrawn from Russia. He emphasized the necessity of withdrawing the American troops, as the Russian people looked to America as their only friend.

At this point some one from the audience moved that the resolution of Senator JOHNSON of California, asking for the withdrawal of the American troops be indorsed. The motion was carried by an overwhelming majority.

Representative MASON then arose in his box and said he did not have time to detail the outrages that are being perpetrated upon the young men of this country by keeping them in Russia.

"I get letters every day from the mothers of boys," he shouted, "whose blood is redding the snows of Siberia. I will lift up my voice every day to oppose this slaughter until it is stopped. There is no justification for it, and, thank God, I have the courage to oppose it.

MONEY HELD HERE, HE CHARGES.

"I do not know whether you know it or not, but I charge the money that we have furnished to help feed the starving Russian people is being held in the United States by the Russian minister, and is being used to pay the interest upon the bonds held by Morgan & Co. to their clients before America entered the war. I believe that. I have not the proof, but I am going to get at the truth."

Williams then continued his speech, charging that the allied troops are being kept in Russia until the Soviet government guarantees the debts of the monarchy. "A huge allied army is wading through the gore of Russian peasants and workers," he declared, "to establish a stable government to insure these loans. However disguised such a state would be outwardly, in reality it would be a monarchy.

SEES AMERICA BOLSHEVIK.

"It is interesting to speculate how long any army of occupation would resist its job of supporting a monarchy and how long it will remain immune from the bacillus of Bolshevism. America sooner or later is going to accept the Soviet government, and when America discards some of the ideas current in the papers it will find it not so difficult to swallow."

I shall not detain the Senate long at this time to say much about that remarkable meeting. I realize that important business is awaiting the Senate's attention, and I believe a distinguished Senator has given notice that he intends to address the Senate on a subject of interest to-day. However, I want to say a few words, and it will not take me long to express my feelings about that meeting.

I am absolutely shocked and surprised that such a meeting could or should be held in the city of Washington, the Capital of this Nation, at a place within a block of the White House, within a few hundred feet of the United States Treasury Building, within a few blocks of the Capitol Building. It makes my blood boil with indignation. I am surprised that such a meeting was permitted to be held here. The irony of the matter is that the meeting appears to have been held in a building which is owned by the United States Government. I am surprised that any Representative in Congress should address such a meeting, or a meeting held under such auspices. I do not know what was said by the Representative in Congress who addressed the meeting other than what is set forth in this newspaper account.

I am surprised that any Representative would address a meeting of that character; and if any Member of Congress, in attendance on such a meeting, said anything which expressed sympathy with or approval of the alleged utterances of the man Williams, who was the principal speaker, or expressed any sympathy with the principal object of the meeting, which appears to have been denunciation of this Government and laudation of the Russian Bolsheviki—if any Member of Congress said anything in support of those utterances or doctrines—he ought to be expelled from the body of which he is a Member.

I will say, in this connection, that I take no exception to the action of the meeting in favoring the adoption of the resolution offered in this body by the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] for the withdrawal of our troops from Russia. That is a matter of public policy which any meeting of citizens—if they be citizens—is entitled to express its opinion upon; but I do object to and condemn, with all the power and earnestness of my being, the alleged utterances of the principal speakers of that meeting, a man and a woman, who, if correctly reported, grossly insulted this Government, orally assaulted it, and lauded the Russian Bolsheviki and the Soviet government of Russia—a lot of criminals, murderers, and thieves engaged in an assault upon all the organized society of the world. I think those addresses and the principal object of that meeting are an insult to the dignity and sovereignty of the United States of America, to our Government, to the law-abiding people of this country, and to every loyal citizen of this country. I think the meeting and all utterances made thereat should be investigated by the Department of Justice. If there is any Federal law to punish such doings and utterances, I think the Department of Justice ought to proceed against those responsible therefor, and have them punished, and if there is no adequate law to forbid and punish such meetings and utterances I think the Judiciary Committee of the Senate ought to take up the matter and frame and bring before this body legislation which, if enacted, would be adequate to prevent such treasonable meetings and seditious utterances.

Are we to remain silent and inactive and see the sovereignty, the dignity, the integrity of our Government insulted in this manner? If there is no law adequate to punish such shocking conduct, are we to continue inactive and not enact laws which will protect and defend the sovereignty, the honor, and the dignity of our country and of civilization itself? I am not content to let such a meeting occur right under my nose, I might say, without adding my denunciation to the words which were spoken in denunciation of it yesterday. The people of this country should awaken to their danger. Congress should awaken to its duty. I shall arouse both if words of mine can do it.

It may be the time is not far distant in this country when there will be room for only two political parties—one composed of those who support the Government and another composed of those who would destroy it; on the one hand those who are for law and order and on the other criminals—loyal people against anarchists. When that time may come I shall unhesitatingly array myself with the party that stands for upholding the American Government and American institutions, no matter what the name of that party may be and no matter what its past creed, doctrines, history, or career may have been.

I understand another meeting was held in this city last night, which ratified and reiterated all that was said at the meeting on Sunday at Poli's Theater on the subject of the Russian Bolsheviki and the Soviet government, lauded those criminal institutions, and repeated in large part the seditious utterances that were made at Poli's Theater. This is heaping insult upon insult. It is time to call a halt. It is time to take warning. It is time for action. I call on the Department of Justice for action. I call on the Judiciary Committee of the Senate for action. We will be false to our trust if we do not take action.

I want to read, as a most admirable expression, which fairly expresses my views on such matters, a clipping from the Washington Post of this morning, consisting of utterances from the lips of a loyal citizen, Col. Archibald Hopkins, as follows:

MEETING CALLED "BOMBSHELL."

Col. Archibald Hopkins characterized the Poli's meeting as a "bombshell" that might annihilate Congress by its explosion before they adopted measures to protect themselves and the country from the Bolshevik invasion. He urged prompt and drastic action by Congress to check the movement, and criticized the local authorities for not interfering with the meeting.

"Had Congress become aware that the Capital was thoroughly mined," Col. Hopkins said last night, "and that an annihilating explosion was arranged to take place while they were in their seats, they would take instant measures to protect themselves and to punish the conspirators.

"A much more far-reaching, infamous, destructive plan than even that is on foot to overthrow and ruin our institutions, and those engaged in it make no secret of their purpose. They are at work in the open and Sunday held a public meeting under the shadow of the Capitol, which was neither interfered with nor rebuked, at which the superiority of the Bolshevik government and morals to ours was boldly asserted and the spread of their doctrine throughout the country urged. These sentiments were applauded to the echo by a large audience, and an active propaganda to put them into effect, arranged and paid for, partly at least, in Germany, is being carried on throughout the country.

WANTS CONGRESS TO ACT.

"What will Congress do about it? Have we a Government willing or capable of protecting itself and the country from a menace far more deadly and imminent than any danger from Germany ever was, to ward off which we have made such enormous sacrifice?

"It is especially the duty of this country to check it, because, as is well known, it is entirely due to the refusal of this Government to act with the allies in stamping it out when urged by them to join them in doing so at the outset, when prompt action with a small force would have put it down, that has made possible its control of Russia and its wide and growing propaganda.

SPREAD OF DEADLY POISON.

"Congress should, if necessary, lay aside all other business until measures have been adopted to stop the spread of the deadly poison. Congress can still act under the war power, for we are not only at war with Germany but with the Bolsheviki, and such a war on our part!

"The handful of brave men we sent to help Russia and to protect the supplies we sent her in bitter Siberian cold are being shot down, gassed, and driven back by vastly superior numbers of murderers and robbers, and we raise not a hand to support or rescue them.

"The country will exact sharp penalties from some one if they are sacrificed.

NOTICE TO THE WORLD.

"Some weeks ago a bill was introduced in both Houses forbidding the display of the red flag in the United States.

"Had it been promptly and unanimously passed, the advocates of wholesale murder and robbery would not have dared to come to the Capital and preached their wicked doctrines.

"Furthermore, it would have been notice to all the world—notice which has not been given—that Bolshevism would not be tolerated here.

BLAME ON TIMID SOULS.

"No reason has been given why it has not been acted on except that some timid souls thought there might be some question whether it was constitutional. Is our Government paralyzed? Have we a Government desirous and capable of defending itself and the citizens? Have we a Government worth fighting and dying for?

"It is useless to look to the peace conference at Paris for assistance. We have been informed in a public declaration of well-known authorship put out by that body that it has no desire or purpose to take any part with, for or against, either of the factions now fighting in Russia, two of them being engaged in an attempt to establish orderly government and the remaining one bent on setting up a class autocracy by a process of extermination and robbery of all who oppose it.

"Probably we ought to think neutrally in regard to the contest. However that may be, it is evident that if this country is to be saved from Bolshevism it must be by our own prompt action alone."

Mr. President, I think we deal entirely too softly and gently with Bolshevism both in this country and abroad. I think we extend to it the soft hand of timidity and tolerance, when we should grapple it with the iron hand of force, of extermination.

So far as our troops in Russia are concerned, I think we should either withdraw those we have there and let the Russians kill each other or send over many thousands more and exterminate the Russian Bolsheviki and put an end to that miserable pest—cut out and destroy the evil root and branch. In my opinion, we should not temporize with it.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. KELLOGG and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield a moment, I desire to dispose of a bill which is now before the Senate under an agreement. It will take but a moment to do so, I think.

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. On yesterday the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], in charge of the Post Office appropriation bill, agreed to yield the right of way for the day to the legislative appropriation bill, in the hope that we might pass it. We were unable to do so on yesterday, and, the Post Office appropriation bill now really having the right of way under the agreement that was heretofore made, I ask unanimous consent that the legislative bill be returned to the calendar and that the Post Office appropriation bill be laid before the Senate as the unfinished business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is so ordered.

The Senate, as in Committee on the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriation for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

BOLSHEVIKI PROPAGANDA.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall not take much of the time of the Senate, but I should like to make a few remarks pertinent to the subject of the discussion by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. I am not surprised that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and the Senator from Montana were shocked at the news of the public meeting held in Washington advocating openly the destruction of our Government and the substitution for it of a Soviet government such as now exists in Russia. Knowing, as we do, the trail of crime and tyranny in the wake of bolshevism, unparalleled in history, it would seem that no one of sound mind would stand up in the city of Washington and advocate such a change.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the Senator satisfied that such a meeting was held and that such sentiments were uttered at that meeting?

Mr. KELLOGG. All my information is gathered from press reports and quotations from the newspapers, not giving the substance but quoting the exact language used. But I shall not stop to discuss that meeting. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana and other Senators here if they are aware that throughout the length and breadth of this land there is to-day a propaganda, public only to the extent that it dares to show itself, advising and teaching the lawless element in this country to overthrow the Government with fire and sword. That seems impossible, but it is true.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I have been aware of that fact for a long time, and the name of the organization is the I. W. W.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is the I. W. W.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to state that I am very well aware of the fact stated by the Senator from Minnesota and regard it with as great alarm as he does.

Mr. KELLOGG. It is the I. W. W.; it is the escaped nihilists who come to this country from Russia; it is the scum of Europe, comprised of men who call themselves socialists but who are mere anarchists. They are trying to incite the dissatisfied elements of this country to a class warfare.

Mr. President, I am not going to read this article, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to what must be an advertisement. I know there are many such advertisements being published throughout the country. The St. Louis Post Dispatch on January 23 published substantially an entire page of Lenine's appeal to what he calls the Bolsheviki of America. The article is headed:

"Lenine urges American laborers to use fire and sword so they may institute Bolshevism here. Russian leader says proletariat are warring against the middle classes now just like middle classes once fought with imperialists.

"This statement from Nikolai Lenine, who with Leon Trotsky is the recognized leader of Russian Bolshevism, is reproduced from the January, 1919, number of the Liberator, a proletarian magazine published by Max Eastman in New York. Eastman was indicted last fall under the espionage act but charges against him recently were dismissed."

In publishing this statement the Liberator makes the following editorial statement:

"This is the first direct word that has come to the American people from Nikolai Lenine since he became the recognized leader of the proletarian world. Early efforts to get it past the censorship lines evidently failed. It arrived in New York just as this issue was going to press. Certain passages have been omitted in deference to the extreme literal interpretation of the espionage law, but the heart of Lenine's message is here."

(By Nikolai Lenine.)

Moscow, August 20, 1918.

COMRADES: A Russian Bolshevik, who participated in the revolution of 1905 and for many years afterwards lived in your country, has offered to transmit this letter to you. I have grasped this opportunity joyfully, for the revolutionary proletariat of America—in so far as it is the enemy of American imperialism—is destined to perform an important task at this time. * * *

Mr. President, I take it that some passages have been eliminated; but if those passages are any worse than those remaining in this document, I can hardly imagine that the American people will view with equanimity such a published statement.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator will yield for a moment, I should like to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] whether the scope of the investigation now being conducted by the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, of which he is the chairman, would justify an inquiry as to who is paying for the advertisement to which the Senator from Minnesota has now directed attention?

Mr. OVERMAN. In reply to the Senator I will say that the resolution of the Senate under which the committee is acting, in my opinion, is not sufficiently broad to undertake that investigation.

Mr. WALSH. Then it seems to me some other committee of the Senate ought to be charged with the duty of running the advertisement down to its source.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will pardon me if I may express somewhat of a dissent from the attitude of the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, I am inclined to think that the resolution is broad enough, in view of the fact that it is well known that Germany in the beginning furnished the money for the Bolshevists and has been collaborating with them in all their efforts to destroy Russia, and, of course, was collaborating with Lenine and Trotsky in their efforts to destroy the governments of other nations.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think it would be a valuable contribution to the public service if Senators and Representatives in Congress and other public men would make known to the great body of the American people the nature of the sordidly criminal propaganda which is now going on in our midst, because I have confidence in the common sense and conservatism of the American people that they are not going to advocate or countenance a propaganda in this country of bloodshed, crime, and overthrow of law and order.

Let me invite the attention of the Senate for one moment to some of the statements in this article, which evidently the censor thought were not so bad but that they might be published. It purports to be Lenine's and Trotsky's appeal to the American people:

> In reality the class struggle in revolutionary times has always inevitably taken on the form of civil war, and civil war is unthinkable without the worst kind of destruction, without terror and limitations of the form of democracy in the interests of the war.
> One must be a sickly sentimentalist not to be able to see, to understand, and appreciate this necessity. Only the Tchechow type of the lifeless "Man in the Box" can denounce the revolution for this reason, instead of throwing himself into the fight with the whole vehemence and decision of his soul at a moment when history demands that the highest problems of humanity be solved by struggle and war. * * *

Mr. President, this article advocates that kind of a war against society. It reads:

> The greater the bitterness and brutality they sow, the nearer is the day of the victorious proletarian revolution. * * *

Mr. President, when the American people once understand that in our midst are criminal organizations deliberately and openly urging the overthrow of the Government, wantonly advocating murder, assassination, and the destruction of all property, I have no fear for the result in this country. But do the people understand it?

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think I ought to say that in the investigation which has been held some things have come out incidentally along the line that the Senator has suggested. We have in this country Bolshevism, syndicalism, anarchy, I. W. W., and such other organizations, all carrying the red flag, and they are all like currents going into a great stream for the purpose of tearing down the Government. It would be well for the Senator to read, when it is published, the very interesting testimony given by one of the witnesses on the stand, showing certain foreign newspapers advocating the overthrow of this Government and the uprise of Bolshevism in this country. There is a great deal of testimony along that line which came out incidentally.

I said that we had no authority under the resolution to investigate that, but we have incidentally done so. The resolution confines us to German propaganda and to the activities of the brewers in this country; but this testimony—and there is a great deal of it—will be very interesting for the Senator to read along the lines on which the Senator is making his speech now. There is a great deal of it all over the country, especially in the West and in the New England States, and very little, I am glad to say, in the Southern States.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I did not rise to make a speech or to take much of the time of the Senate upon this question, but simply to invite the Senate's attention to the fact that there are in this country organized propagandists who are publishing their red sheets advocating the destruction of the Government, promoting lawless activities in Russia—murder, anything to destroy organized society not only in this country but in all the world.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a minute?

Mr. KELLOGG. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state that evidence has been presented before the committee of which the Senator from North Carolina is the chairman, investigating German propaganda in this country, that some of these Bolsheviki have come to this country and are operating here, and they are supplied with money brought here from Russia.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have no doubt that is true, because this propaganda which is being circulated has the appearance of not only an organized but a paid propaganda of destruction of law and order and the rule of chaos and anarchy. I believe that when the American people understand it, when they know the nature of this criminal propaganda, the great, good sense of the mass of people living under a Constitution which guarantees liberty to every individual will make short work of it. I simply wish to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the nature of this propaganda which is going on and which is finding its way openly into the newspapers.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I was shocked, as were all other Senators, I think, by what took place in Washington night before last, and again last night, relating to the matter which has just been discussed by the Senator from Minnesota; and I agree with him in the remark which he has made in closing, that when the American people really understand this question they are going to stamp it out; but I do not think they understand it. I do not believe they really think that this is a treasonable propaganda; and the fact that it should take place in Washington, in a building owned by the Government, adds particular force to that assertion.

I want to bring to the attention of the Senate the Russian land law which has recently been passed. I am going to put it in the RECORD, because I hope it will reach the eyes of the farmers of the United States, so that they may understand what this propaganda really means. I will read four or five of the articles as an illustration of what the whole propaganda really means. These are the general provisions:

> ARTICLE 1. All property rights in the land, treasures of the earth, waters, forests, and fundamental natural resources within the boundaries of the Russian Federated Soviet Republic are abolished.

In other words, all lands and every appurtenance belonging thereto are confiscated.

> ART. 2. The land passes over to the use of the entire laboring population without any compensation, open or secret, to the former owners.
> ART. 3. The right to use the land belongs to those who till it by their own labor, with the exception of special cases covered by this decree—

Which I shall not read but which I shall insert in the RECORD.

> ART. 6. All private live stock and inventoried property of nonlaboring homesteads pass over without indemnification to the disposition (in accordance with their character) of the land departments of the county, provincial, regional, and Federal Soviets.
> ART. 7. All homestead constructions mentioned in article 6, as well as all agricultural appurtenances, pass over to the disposition (in accordance with their character) of the county, provincial, regional, and Federal Soviets without indemnification.
> ART. 17. Surplus profits, obtained on account of the natural fertility of the land or on account of its location near markets, are to be turned over for the benefit of social needs to the organs of the Soviet power.
> ART. 18. The trade in agricultural machinery and in seeds is monopolized by the organs of the Soviet power—

Whatever that may mean.

> Article 19. The grain trade, internal as well as export, is to be a State monopoly.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

Mr. WEEKS. I will.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to give an example that came under my notice on yesterday.

A Russian princess married an American consul general. She left Russia about four months ago. She told me that her mother had a very large estate. Her father was a nobleman. He had 150 horses and a large herd of imported cattle. She stated that the Bolsheviki had taken her estate, taken all of the horses, taken all the cattle, and divided up that great estate into subdivisions of one acre each, and gave her mother one acre out of a very large estate, and her brother only one acre, and he was trying to make a living now on one acre of land. That is what the Bolsheviki had done with her father's estate.

Mr. WEEKS. That is clearly outlined in these different articles of policy, which I will include in the RECORD.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. Apropos of what the Senator has been saying, it may be interesting to relate a conversation I had with a very prominent manufacturer, who had a large iron and copper plant in Russia. This conversation was sometime after the Lenines and Trotskys had taken control. This man and his associates employed about 30,000 men. He received a cablegram from his general manager from Vladivostok one day announcing that he was on his way back to the States; that the men, under the influence of the Bolsheviki, had passed three resolutions, about as follows:

First, the title of the owners of this property is hereby set aside.

Secondly, So-and-so—naming a foreman—is hereby appointed as the general manager of this plant.

Thirdly, the wages of each and every employee of this plant are hereby increased 100 per cent.

Now, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I have an intense feeling that these men who are preaching the beauties of Bolshevism are sowing the wind, and they will be reaping the whirlwind before very long unless it stops.

Mr. WEEKS. I have no doubt that if every class of people in this country really understood the character of this propaganda they would feel about it as those who have given it some attention.

I rose particularly to ask unanimous consent to put into the RECORD the general provisions relating to the land laws of Russia, in the hope that they would reach the eyes of the farmers of the country. I hope that some one will dig out all the laws that have been adopted by the Soviet governments, and that they may be given very general circulation in the United States. My opinion is if that were done it would create a feeling which would very quickly settle this treasonable propaganda.

Mr. OVERMAN. In that connection, if the Senator will pardon me, I should like to put in the RECORD the constitution of the Bolsheviki, a copy of which I have in my office.

Mr. WEEKS. I hope the Senator will do that, and that it will impress all those who take the trouble to read it that it is so crude in every form that it would be a disgrace to almost any schoolboy in the United States.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think it ought to be put in the RECORD. I shall read it to-morrow, because I think the American people ought to know what the Soviet constitution is.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask unanimous consent that the matter to which I referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DOCUMENTS—THE RUSSIAN LAND LAW.

The following "fundamental law of socialization of the land" in Russia went into effect in September, 1918, replacing the earlier and briefer land decree of November 7, 1917:

DIVISION I.

General provisions.

ARTICLE 1. All property rights in the land, treasures of the earth, waters, forests, and fundamental natural resources within the boundaries of the Russian Federated Soviet Republic are abolished.

ART. 2. The land passes over to the use of the entire laboring population without any compensation, open or secret, to the former owners.

ART. 3. The right to use the land belongs to those who till it by their own labor, with the exception of special cases covered by this decree.

ART. 4. The right to use the land can not be limited by sex, religion, nationality, or foreign citizenship.

ART. 5. The subsurface deposits, the forests, waters, and fundamental natural resources are at the disposition (according to their character) of the county, provincial, regional, and Federal Soviet powers, and are under the control of the latter. The method of disposition and utilization of the subsurface deposits, waters, and fundamental natural resources will be dealt with by a special decree.

ART. 6. All private live stock and inventoried property of nonlaboring homesteads pass over without indemnification to the disposition (in accordance with their character) of the land departments of the county, provincial, regional, and Federal Soviets.

ART. 7. All homestead constructions mentioned in article 6, as well as all agricultural appurtenances, pass over to the disposition (in accordance with their character) of the county, provincial, regional, and Federal Soviets without indemnification.

ART. 8. All persons who are unable to work and who will be deprived of all means of subsistence by force of the decree socializing all lands, forests, inventoried property, etc., may receive a pension (for a lifetime or until the person becomes of age) upon the certification of the local courts and the land departments of the Soviet power, such as a soldier receives, until such time as the decree for the insurance of the incapacitated is issued.

ART. 9. The apportionment of lands of agricultural value among the laboring people is under the jurisdiction of the Volostnoi [several villages], county, provincial, main, and Federal land departments of the Soviets in accordance with their character.

ART. 10. The surplus lands are under the supervision in every republic of the land departments of the main and Federal Soviets.

ART. 11. The land departments of the local and central Soviets are thus intrusted with the equitable apportionment of the land among the working agricultural population and with the productive utilization of the natural resources. They also have the following duties:

(a) Creating favorable conditions for the development of the productive forces of the country by increasing the fertility of the land, improving agricultural technique, and, finally, raising the standard of agricultural knowledge among the laboring population.

(b) Creating a surplus fund of lands of agricultural value.

(c) Developing various branches of agricultural industry, such as gardening, cattle breeding, dairying, etc.

(d) Accelerating the transition from the old unproductive system of field cultivation to the new productive one (under various climates) by a proper distribution of the laboring population in various parts of the country.

(e) Developing collective homesteads in agriculture (in preference to individual homesteads) as the most profitable system of saving labor and material, with a view to passing on to socialism.

ART. 12. The apportionment of land among the laboring population is to be carried on on the basis of each one's ability to till it and in accordance with local conditions, so that the production and consumption standard may not compel some peasants to work beyond their strength, and at the same time it should give them sufficient means of subsistence.

ART. 13. Personal labor is the general and fundamental source of the right to use the land for agricultural purposes. In addition, the organs of the Soviet power, with a view to raising the agricultural standard (by organizing model farms or experimental fields), are permitted to borrow from the surplus land fund (formerly belonging to the Crown, monasteries, ministers, or landowners) certain plats and to work them by labor paid by the State. Such labor is subject to the general rules of workmen's control.

ART. 14. All citizens engaged in agricultural work are to be insured at the expense of the State against old age, sickness, or injuries which incapacitate them.

ART. 15. All incapacitated agriculturists and the members of their families who are unable to work are to be cared for by the organs of the Soviet power.

ART. 16. Every agricultural homestead is to be insured against fire, epidemics among cattle, poor crops, dry weather, hail, etc., by means of mutual Soviet insurance.

ART. 17. Surplus profits, obtained on account of the natural fertility of the land or on account of its location near markets, are to be turned over for the benefit of social needs to the organs of the Soviet power.

ART. 18. The trade in agricultural machinery and in seeds is monopolized by the organs of the Soviet power.

ART. 19. The grain trade, internal as well as export, is to be a State monopoly.

Mr. WALSH. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following resolution (S. Res. 439):

Resolved, That the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary conferred by Senate resolution No. 307 be, and the same hereby is, extended so as to include the power and duty to inquire concerning any efforts being made to propagate in this country the principles of any party exercising or claiming to exercise authority in Russia, whether such efforts originate in this country or are incited or financed from abroad, and, further, to inquire into any effort to incite the overthrow of the Government of this country, or all government, by force or by the destruction of life or property or the general cessation of industry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I simply wanted to ask whether that would entail any expense. If so, it ought to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. It will, of course, entail expense, but the committee already has certain powers conferred upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not believe that it has to go to the committee at all. It broadens the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not object at all to the provisions of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be adopted if there be no objection. If there is objection, it will go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to state to the Senator from Utah that we have plenty of authority under the former resolution to conduct this investigation. It may require an additional clerk; that is all, because the employment of the clerk we now have is limited to 30 days, and we may ask for an additional clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is adopted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to offer the following resolution and have it read, and I ask that it may go over under the rule.

The resolution (S. Res. 437) was read, as follows:

Whereas it is the duty of the Attorney General of the United States to enforce the laws of the United States, and particularly those for the punishment of crimes of violence, treason, sedition, and insurrection, or aiding and abetting the same; and

Whereas vigorous performances of this duty by the Department of Justice, of which the Attorney General is the head, is especially important when the country is in a state of war; and

Whereas a peculiar obligation rests upon the executive branch of the Government to preserve order in the District of Columbia and to protect the seat of the Federal Government from force and violence; and

Whereas advocacy of the use of force for the overthrow of Government and existing institutions is criminal and unlawful and "adherence to the enemies" of the Nation constitutes treason; and

Whereas in the city of Washington at Poli's Theater on the evening of February 2, 1919, and at the Old Masonic Temple on February 3, 1919, public meetings were held at which public speakers advocated the cause of the present Bolsheviki government of Russia, which is now at war with the United States, and publicly approved methods of force and violence in the affairs of government practiced by the present Bolsheviki rules in Russia, and advocated the use of such methods in the United States for the subversion of the Government of the United States and the establishment of Bolsheviki principles and methods in its place: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Attorney General report to the Senate what, if any, steps he has taken to investigate the meetings referred to, the speeches made therein, the names of the speakers and those supporting them, and what, if any, steps he has taken to enforce the laws of the United States in the premises.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over as requested.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is said that a meeting was held at the Poli Theater Sunday afternoon which advocated the overthrow of our form of Government and the substitution in its place of a form of government known as the Soviet government. If the reports of the papers be correct, I take it that we are to conclude that was the object and purpose of the meeting. It is but fair to say, however, that the statement has been made to me that so far as the advocacy of the overthrow of our Government is concerned, no such doctrine was preached at that meeting, that it was a defense of the Soviet government in Russia under the conditions and surroundings which there confront the people of that country. The claim is made by some present that while they were defending the Soviet government in Russia it was not contended that it should supplant our Government. This statement has been made to me. But, Mr. President, if the propaganda which seems to have been fathered at that meeting be the beginning of a movement in this country, we may well consider how we are to meet such a serious situation.

I can not say that I was surprised at the meeting, even though it advocated all that the paper claims that it advocated. A few days ago in a running debate I made the remark that Bolshevism was not to be confined by national lines, and that we would in all probability have to meet that proposition in this country at no distant day. That statement was seized upon by a number of papers throughout the country as wholly sensational and without any justification whatever, and as indicating upon my part a lack of faith in the American people, their good sense, and their poise in such an emergency.

I do not complain, Mr. President, of the views which the papers took of the matter. I was greatly in hopes that they were correct and that there was really no occasion for being uneasy about the situation, and that those who had thought that such a condition of affairs might confront us in this country were in error. I am inclined to believe that there was more justification for my remark at the time than those around me seemed to think. It has been my fortune to know something of this spirit in this country for the last 15 years. I have known something of the reservoirs of propaganda, which have been filled with this feeling for some time, and I felt that the psychological conditions, superinduced by war, were calculated to feed it instead of diminishing it. This now seems to be the opinion of many able Senators, and that it is a real situation with which we shall have to deal.

I perfectly agree with those Senators who have inveighed against this propaganda. There is no possible reason for appealing to violence, to disorder, in this country. We have fortunately under our system of Government the method pointed out and provided for by which changes can be brought about in an orderly and lawful way. The ballot is in the hands of the people, and there is no occasion under any circumstances or conditions for an appeal to lawlessness, an appeal to the spirit of disorder, whatever the objects or motives or purposes may be or the ultimate aims to be accomplished. I have not a particle of sympathy with any such movement. There can be no justification for any class of people under any circumstances spreading the spirit of disorder and lawlessness in a Government where it is within the power of the people to work such changes as reason suggests and orderly public opinion supports in an orderly and legal fashion.

So I join with those who inveigh against any preachment of lawlessness, and especially with those who are opposed to any system which through any violent method would overthrow our form of government.

We believe in this country, Mr. President, in an orderly, manly, regulated liberty. It is this, sir, which distinguishes the American Republic from all spurious republics with which history has had to do. There have been instances in which so-called republics have been set up, but the method of accomplishing changes and working reforms in government were so restrained and circumscribed that the people did not have the power to effectuate their purposes. But they have here that which distinguishes us from all other republics which have ever existed heretofore and far more perfectly than exists anywhere else at the present time.

Mr. OVERMAN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that a bill has been introduced to repeal the espionage act, and our committee is considering legislation for the repeal of that act. If we repeal the espionage act under the resolution introduced and we do not enact some other legislation in its place, there will be no law upon the statute books that can stop any of this propaganda. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that if we repeal the espionage act at this time we must have some law in its place.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are laws and laws. The espionage act, in my judgment, will not effectuate what the Senator from North Carolina and I desire in this country. There are offenses which should be defined, and the violation of such a law should be punished, but arbitrary power has been from the beginning of time until now the source of violence and disorder. There is an orderly and regulated method by which to deal with these subjects which will effectuate what we all desire.

But, Mr. President, I am opposed to Bolshevism or internationalism whether they are in tatters and rags or whether they are found clothed in broadcloth, whether they come to us in the garb of a Soviet government or in the form of a superstate based on force. It all means the same thing, so far as the life of this Government is concerned. It is wholly immaterial to me from what source the attack comes upon the American Republic. These men at the Poli Theater may be hammering and battering away with pickax and dynamite at one pillar of the Republic while other men in more powerful places are battering and hammering away at other pillars of the Republic. One would destroy it by demobilizing its moral forces, the other by sterilizing the national spirit.

Senators say we must meet this question. How? I think one of the best ways to meet it, and meet it early, is to begin to preach Americanism from every rostrum in the United States, and thereby increase and augment that great body of national affections which bind the people to their Government.

The Soviet government has its enthusiasts throughout the land and throughout the world, and this and that new scheme have their enthusiastic supporters, but who in this hour is preaching Americanism and the great fundamental principles of representative government? They held a meeting at the Poli Theater! The league to enforce peace will begin its campaign in Boston upon the 6th day of February, and, if they succeed, they will ultimately land us precisely where the Bolshevists would land us, and that is under the control of internationalism. They would tear down the fundamental principles of this Government in the end just as successfully and just as effectually as the men who met at the Poli Theater.

When you transfer the sovereign power of this Government to make war or peace to some superstate, some tribunal not responsible to the American people, and thereby internationalize this Government; when you take its most vital powers out of the hands of our own people and put them beyond their reach and control in a tribunal the majority of which is controlled by foreigners; when you give to some tribunal which we can not select or elect the power to take our sons from their homes and put them in Russia or in Turkey or in Asia, you finally arrive at the same ultimate goal to which the disciples of Lenine and Trotsky would lead us. You destroy the sovereign independence of this Republic and take away the self-governing capacity of our people. Now, it is immaterial to me whether you do that in one way or the other; it is the ultimate result that I look at and that I reject now and forever.

What we need in this country, sir, is the fostering and strengthening of the national spirit, a rebaptism of national pride, a reconsecration to the purposes for which we organized our Government. Preach the doctrines of the fathers for a while and see how the American people like it. Come home and take care of our own institutions. Strengthen them in the hearts and minds of the American people. Work out more just and humane laws, effectuate a more equitable distribution of our prosperity, and fill with greater national interests our whole social life. Tell our people anew how we are distinguished from all the peoples of the nations of the earth, the liberty, the prosperity, the independence, the initiative, the individuality, which we enjoy as compared with other nations or peoples. When you have done that you will plant in the hearts of the American people again and anew that which Bolshevism can not uproot.

When this league to enforce peace goes across the country holding its meetings it will not talk much about our history and our traditions and the distinguishing principles which have brought us to our present glory. They will not say much of Washington and his teachings, for these are now ancient and out of place. They will pass by Jefferson, who warned us to stay out of Europe and warned Europe to stay out of the Western Continent. They will generalize about the Monroe doctrine. Instead of those things they will tell you that a new era has come; that we must police Europe; that we must finance Europe. They will plead for an international army, an international navy, an international tribunal. They will preach internationalism, the highest and loudest note sounded at the Poli Theater. They will accept the fundamental principle of Bolshevism, to wit, the compounding of all nations and all races under one international control and thereby the destruction of the national spirit everywhere.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask the Senator if it is not a fact that every socialist and anarchist from the days of Karl Marx has been an internationalist?

Mr. BORAH. I presume so; and every man who advocates the league to enforce peace is an internationalist. That is where it lands. You might just as well say, "I will stop midway after I start over Niagara Falls," as to say, "I will advocate a super State, but I will not accept internationalism."

Mr. President, I speak perhaps with some harshness upon this matter; I am satisfied it will be so interpreted; but I never felt more sincerely in my life than I do upon this subject; we are all disparaging and discouraging the great national spirit which alone will protect us from just such evils as we fear at this hour. There is no other defense, there is no other shield, there is no other protection. Washington knew it; Jefferson knew it; Lincoln knew it; the saints of liberty who have gone before us all knew it; and in this hour of difficulty and turmoil let us get back to the religion of the fathers. Let us preach it like Peter the Hermit, with a tongue of flame. If we do so, we are safe. If we do not do so, you may pass all the laws you choose, you may have your arbitrary power, you may have your repression in the form of prosecution and persecution, but unless there lives in the hearts of the people a deep and abiding national love and a perennial national spirit, unless they are convinced that there is something in the Republic which is worth more than all else, you will never extinguish it by mere force.

Mr. President, when the Russian soldiers went back to their country after the retreat and fall of Napoleon they carried with them the sentiment of freedom and of liberty. They had imbibed it from the French people. They began to hold their meetings and to discuss the subject of more freedom, of a liberal government. The Czar's government began its system of repression. It began its system of extermination, of killing them off. These men who believed in a greater freedom and a freer government held their meetings after the midnight hour in secret and hidden places, had their little printing presses, which they concealed from the public, and when the Czar would capture a number of them and exterminate them, they would spring up tenfold stronger. So it went on for a hundred years, until now we see in Russia the fruits of the repression of a hundred years. You can not destroy the spirit of liberty by repression. You must say to the people and convince them that this Republic is something that is worth all other forms of government. You have got to implant in their minds and hearts again the spirit which has made us great and which alone will keep us great.

Therefore, Mr. President, if you would check Bolshevism and anarchy and I. W. W.-ism, preach the true faith, the only way of salvation. Let us when this Congress adjourns upon the 4th of March, every man in this Chamber, volunteer to go to the rostrum and teach Americanism from every quarter of this Nation and have a revival of faith in our republican institutions, the faith which has through all these years made us invincible and which has excited the emulation and admiration of the whole world.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is so much that is splendid in what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said that I regret more than I can express his disposition to look to the past instead of to the future. I regret to see the great abilities of the Senator from Idaho arrayed in opposition to the international effort now being made to enter into the new era that spreads before a new world.

Mr. President, we are slow in realizing the fact that the old world is dead and that we are in the very midst of the scenes accompanying the birth of a new world. We have seen, as we have studied the history of the past, that the world moves from one age to another. The golden age of Greece passed away; the age of the Roman Empire came, distinguished for its strength, its dominance, and its conquests. When the Roman Empire fell the world entered into the Dark Ages, which lasted for centuries, and were only driven away with the revival of religion and of literature. We saw the world, Mr. President, pass into an age of chivalry, in which it enjoyed a great moral uplift. We saw the feudal ages, with their military power, come and go.

Now, I verily believe that we who were born in one age are going to die in another. A new world has come, and the objections and the arguments which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and others have stated, while valid before the 1st day of August, 1914, are to be swept away as no longer good.

Mr. President, what is the great fact of history which has stood in the way of the longing of human beings for peace? The great fact is that since the dawn of time the world has been cursed with the lust for conquest. Throughout all the ages we have seen great empires ruled by autocratic governments in which a few men had the control of war or peace. We have seen those empires inspired with the supreme thought of conquest. Those imperial ambitions have been the causes of the great wars that have come upon the world and brought with them the horrors which we seek to escape.

Before the 1st day of August, 1914, I might have agreed with the Senator from Idaho that an international effort to put a stop to war was doomed to failure; but I say to him now something has occurred since that time which makes possible the things that were before impossible.

When this war began, of all the great conquering empires that the world had known, with their might and their dream of conquest, only three remained. Great Britain had become a democracy, practically; France had become a republic, on the plan of our own great Republic; Italy had become a constitutional monarchy. The neutral nations were of similar character. Of all the great nations of history dreaming of conquest, three only remained—Russia, with her autocrat and her plan of conquest to the Pacific Ocean and down toward the south; Austria-Hungary, which in our own day had swallowed up Bosnia and Herzegovina, and which was still pressing to the east with her dream of conquest; Germany, which in our own day had seized Schleswig-Holstein from Denmark and Alsace-Lorraine from France, absorbed for more than a quarter of a century with the dream of conquering the world—those three great empires were all that remained of the historic conquering nations of the world. Where are they now, Mr. President? They lie in the dust, dead forever, gone. With their disappearance from the world has disappeared the last lingering obstacle to international peace, perpetuated by an international agreement. So I say to the Senator from Idaho, what could not have been done by an international agreement before this war has now become possible.

Mr. President, shall this great Republic, which has led the way in establishing in the world the right of man to govern himself, hesitate to back its President in the magnificent fight he is now making in France to bring about a new era?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I did not refer to the President's league, for I am not yet informed as to what it is; but I was referring to the league represented by an ex-President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that is the unfortunate circumstance, Mr. President. These attacks which are made upon the floor of the Senate and throughout the country, calculated in their result, if not designed in their purpose, to hamper the President by conveying to the Old World the thought that America is opposed to his effort—these attacks are all directed against an imaginary league of nations that is not seriously proposed, except as a straw man to be knocked down.

Mr. President, I can not conceive, and no real friend of the league of nations can conceive, of the possibility that the United States would enter into an agreement the purpose of which is to create a giant international Frankenstein, with army and navy so powerful that it might destroy the United States. I can not conceive that Great Britain or France would ever enter into an agreement for the creation of such a monster, which might destroy one of the nations joining in its creation.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WALSH in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KNOX. I regret that I can not give to the Senator from Nebraska the exact date of the speech of the President of the United States, but I read from it only this morning the thought that the United States stood for a league of nations that would have back of it the major forces of the world to such an extent that they would outnumber any alliance that any combination of nations could make against them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I do not know to what speech of the President the Senator refers, but I am very clear in my own mind that the supreme force which will stand back of the league of nations, which is now being born, will not be an army, it will not be a navy, it will not be military power, but it will be the great moral power of the world. I want to say to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] that when great nations like the United States, Great Britain, France, and the other nations that will join in this league enter into a solemn agreement to do a certain thing, it will not require armies and navies to force compliance; in fact, no army or navy could force the United States to do anything; but the power of public opinion in the United States and the power of public opinion throughout the civilized world will be the supreme power, the moral power, which will naturally bring compliance with any agreement duly made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I desire to ask the Senator if he believes that there is any issue between himself and anybody else on the question of moral force in the world? Does the Senator know of anybody who is opposed to the exercise of moral force, or does the Senator know of anybody who is opposed to peace brought about by moral force and public opinion?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, I do not know, Mr. President. What I am here reprehending and condemning is the idea that the President's efforts can be belittled and nullified by attacking something which he is not seeking to bring about.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. As I understand, before the President left here he announced very plainly to representatives of the league to enforce peace that he was opposed to their proposition. I have not this direct, but almost direct; and I read in the press dispatches after the President arrived in France that he disbelieved in their theory and in the principle upon which their league was organized. Therefore, how can I and those who agree with him in being opposed to that be opposing the President? As I said a moment ago, I do not know what the President's plan for the league is, but I referred to the fact that this league to which I have referred is about to hold its meetings throughout the United States, to begin on the 6th of February. Now, it is certainly not amiss for a Senator, in connection with other meetings which are being held for the purpose of destroying the Republic, to discuss those meetings also. If the press reports are correct, the President has done precisely what I did; that is, he has said that he was opposed to any such principle.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the disclaimer of the Senator from Idaho. The trouble is that the speeches which are made in the Senate attacking the league idea are sent out as attacks and criticisms upon the President's efforts and tend to handicap and embarrass him in the struggle he is engaged in. I do not understand that I am compelled in supporting the league of nations to decide to give away any part of the sovereign power of the United States any more than I am when I subscribe to an international treaty which may be made. Yet that surrender of national sovereignty is held up as a bugaboo.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield again to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. Will the Senator from Nebraska be good enough to tell us what the President's league is? Then we may join with the President and the Senator from Nebraska in acclaiming it. The difficulty is we do not know; and if the Senator from Nebraska does know what he is so enthusiastically supporting, will he not take us into his confidence?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania very well knows that he has exactly the same sources of information that I have, and the Senator from Pennsylvania ought to know that, when the time comes that this country is to take a position on the matter, the President will lay before the Senate what he asks the Senate to do. I do not have any idea that the President could have done that before he left the United States and before he came in contact with statesmen from the other countries, but I have not any idea that the President will undertake to commit the United States before he consults the Senate of the United States.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, certainly it would not be the position of the Senator from Nebraska that "we do not know what it is, but we are for it." That would hardly be a proper attitude for a body like this to assume.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I may not know exactly what the league is to be, but I know what it is not to be. It is not to be the monster that Senators on the other side of the aisle are attacking, and they must know it is not to be that sort of a league.

Mr. BORAH. Then, why, pray, does the Senator find fault with us? We are not attacking anything that the Senator stands for; we are not attacking anything that the President stands for, so far as we know; but we are attacking a proposition which a most distinguished member of our own party stands for. Does the Senator object to our family quarrels?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have not any very deep interest in what the Senator terms his "family quarrels," but I have a very high respect for ex-President Taft in his effort to bring about a great good to the world. I have withheld my support from what he proposes, but until I have something myself definitely to propose I shall not stand here and denounce him or his plan. He is not in any representative capacity; he has the same right that any other citizen has to propose a plan for the alleviation of the conditions of war. I object to attacks on the Taft plan which are so made as to injure the President's plan by giving the impression abroad of antagonism in the Senate.

Certainly, Mr. President, the evils of war are great enough to warrant a great effort to free the world from them. Certainly this country, which fortunately was only in the war a short time, has learned by sad experience that a world war is a terrible thing. We will be for generations paying the terrible toll which that war has levied upon us, and humanity in Europe will be centuries recovering from the awful disaster. Now, shall we not join in an effort to make a recurrence of such an evil impossible? Shall we stand here and criticize, condemn, and embarrass before we even know the terms of the remedy that is proposed? Is it not better for us to give every encouragement, to extend every help, to the President, who is making that fight in France?

Mr. President, to me it is an inspiring sight—that battle that is going on in France. It is an inspiring sight, because I see a mighty conflict between the old that is passing away and the new that is coming. I see a mighty contest between the sordid materialism represented by the statesmen of the past and the ideal represented by the statesmen of the future. It seems to me appropriate that the United States, which is a Nation of ideals, a Nation of altruism, a Nation which has already become a world benefactor, should take the lead. We helped to create the Cuban Republic. We are even now generously giving a new civilization to the millions of people in the Philippine Archipelago, in the very shadow of Asia. It seems to me that this Nation of ideals, this Nation of an altruistic record, that first proclaimed 140 years ago the Declaration of Independence, is the one to lead. Our forefathers then proclaimed that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and in order to secure these rights governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed—it seems to me appropriate that this Nation, with this history, should now take the lead in bringing about the new era of the world.

Mr. President, when those principles of the Declaration of Independence were proclaimed one hundred and forty-odd years ago, they no doubt sounded to the Old World like the vagaries of a visionary mind. They probably sounded just as impossible as the league of nations sounds to the statesmen of the Old World and the benighted statesmen of this country. Why, I can imagine that those principles were considered by the people of the Old World as the suggestions of an iridescent dream; and yet those principles, laughed at and scoffed at by the people of the Old World, have become the solid foundation of this Republic, and they are going to become the foundation stones of all the nations in the world as the result of this struggle.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator please explain this fact? He says that we are in favor of a league of nations to maintain peace—I am rather in favor of it myself, as I think the Senator knows—and disarmament, as we see in the morning papers. How does he reconcile that with a request that Congress shall make an unparalleled appropriation, $700,000,000, to increase our Navy away beyond anything we ever dreamed of before? Is that necessary to maintain the peace of the world or the league of nations?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, undoubtedly it will not be necessary if the league of nations becomes a going concern. If the league of nations becomes established, and the great nations of the world follow the example of the United States, and solemnly agree to do those things which will make war impossible, solemnly agree to abstain from conquest, solemnly agree to reduce their armaments, solemnly agree never to have war unless the representatives of the people vote it, solemnly agree to carry out the pledges which they make, undoubtedly wars will cease, and preparations for war will cease, and not only will every country be relieved from the prodigious expenses and the enormous burdens of war, but when a mother looks at the face of her baby boy in the cradle she will not have to think that it may be that the nation will some day seize him and put him in the front to be shot.

Yes, Mr. President, these preparations for war which have been going on, these enormous costs of war which we have encountered, this awful toll of life in war which the other nations have had in a greater degree than we have had, will all become unnecessary in the new era; and I believe, Mr. President—I am sanguine enough to believe—that the world is marching into a new era just as completely as it marched into the age of chivalry. Just as certainly as it emerged from the Dark Ages, so it is emerging now from the dark ages of war into the final period of perpetual peace.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, in the discussion of this subject, inquiries have been repeatedly propounded by opponents of the plan of a league of nations, with a perfectly obvious attempt at irony, as to what is the President's plan of a league of nations, what are its provisions, and what are its limitations?

Up to the present time no one has been able to speak authoritatively in answer to inquiries of that character. Some 30 days or more before the President left on his great mission the public press carried the statement that in a few days the President would announce his plan for a league of nations. I hastened to counsel him at that time—I rarely venture upon anything of the kind—not to make any public declaration whatever concerning his plan of a league of nations if he had any. I found it was entirely unnecessary. He had no thought of making any publication at all.

Why, Mr. President, I have not the slightest doubt in the world that with all the opportunities the President of the United States has since had to benefit by the thought of the great minds of the world that have given this great subject their earnest thought and consideration for years, his ideas have been much matured, so that it would have been exceedingly injudicious in him to have given out a plan. It would have been injudicious from any point of view for him to devise a plan and go over to Europe and endeavor to enforce that as the plan that would ultimately be adopted by the organization.

Mr. President, that is not the way the Constitution of the United States was adopted. That is not the way it was framed. When the delegates gathered together for the purpose of devising our fundamental and organic law, the delegates from Virginia, Mr. Madison and Mr. Randolph, brought with them a plan of a union, but they were, I was going to say, so silly as to proclaim from the housetops before they left upon their mission the plan they had in mind for the organization of a union. Mr. Hamilton had a plan for the organization of a union. It was kept a profound secret. Nobody knew anything at all about it until years after the Constitutional Convention had concluded its work. The delegates from New Jersey also had a plan to propose.

Mr. President, no one of these plans was proposed by its originator as a completed scheme of government which he was going to insist upon and urge before the convention as the only plan that would solve the difficulties then confronting the country. He simply brought it along as a working plan, as a basis, as an outline, as indicating in a rude and a crude manner his ideas as to what kind of a constitution the convention should adopt. If the President of the United States took with him to Europe a plan for a league of nations, I am perfectly convinced that it was in that spirit that he did so. I am perfectly convinced that he had an open mind, freely open to suggestions from any quarter, and that is what he is over there for. So I dare say that Senators will have to possess their souls in patience concerning the President's plan for a league of nations.

Why, Mr. President, we are not in the dark—that is, not in complete darkness—concerning how the thing is being operated. Commissions have been appointed from the delegates from the various countries for the purpose of studying the various plans that are proposed, from whatever source they may come; and out of these they are going to draft an outline, and that outline will eventually be submitted to the conference for consideration, and the completed work will undoubtedly emerge from the conference in much the same form that the Constitution of the United States emerged from the Constitutional Convention.

I do not think we shall get any very definite information until that time concerning what the President's views are concerning the details of a league of nations.

SUPERMAN GOVERNMENT AND SELF-GOVERNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to address myself to the pending question; and, preliminary to that, I will try to discover what the question is that is before the Senate, before going any further. Like the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX], if I could discover the peace league in some definite form, I would soon be ready to decide whether I would vote for or against it. At the present time it seems to be compounded of moral suasion and coercion by threat, backed by a Navy costing about $1,000,000,000, including the present Navy, which shall be held in terrorem over all the civilized nations of the world. Along with this comes the international conscience, and necessarily connected with that is the question of the freedom of the seas.

What is that? Sea law has been made by the strongest power on the sea. It is made during war and usually not during peace. Just what the sea law will be, connected with the new freedom of the seas, I do not know; but I know what the alleged Metternich of this Vienna conference in Paris believed about it the last time he was heard from. He believed the Navy was to be used for no other purpose than to meet another hostile navy upon the high seas and engage in battle. Under his version of the freedom of the seas there is to be no blockade of the ports of an enemy country; there is to be no capture of merchantmen. A blockade such as Great Britain enforced upon Germany during the last war will be impossible under the freedom of the seas believed in and advocated by Col. House. His utility was recognized in that unfortunate occurrence not long ago where it appears that the report of his death was "greatly exaggerated." I am copying now a quotation from Mark Twain. When his friends once heard that he was no more, and, meeting one of them a short time afterwards, he inquired about the occurrence, Mr. Clemens made the answer that I have quoted.

On January 20, 1919, the London Times published an unfounded report of Col. House's death. It is probably a good thing for us to be able to hear our own obituaries. However, it is not vouchsafed to very many of us so to do. But among others of the great blessings that have fallen upon Col. House in his lifetime was an obituarial appreciation of his services to Germany by the late distinguished Teutonic patriot who resided at this Capital, known as Von Bernstorff. The Tageblatt, of Berlin, under this date (Jan. 20, 1919), published an appreciation of Col. House by ex-Ambassador von Bernstorff when he heard the report, thinking it to be true, that the colonel had passed to his final reward. He said he was personally acquainted with the colonel; that he was the eyes and ears of President Wilson—and Bernstorff knew through his own experience how well Col. House kept President Wilson informed on the European situation. Even his first trip to Berlin—

Which was in 1915—as I remember it—was undertaken in the interest of peace, as Bernstorff can testify from a personal conversation with Col. House.

There were two trips, by the way, Mr. President. One, I think, was in 1915, and the other in 1916 or 1917. Continuing:

In the winter of 1916 and 1917, when President Wilson proclaimed his program of peace without victory, Col. House was the President's earnest collaborator. "No more honest pacifist ever existed," says Count von Bernstorff. "He was just the man to fight for Wilson's peace program. He hated war because he considered it contrary to human ideals. He considered the war profiteers a most despicable lot, and never bought any munition stocks.

"He told me repeatedly he had just as energetically protested in London against the British blockade as the U-boat war, and couldn't believe either method would lead to a decision. The result would be nameless hatred, neutralizing all efforts for peace. I, as a German, must admit that House was quite correct in much he said in this respect.

"The war psychosis spoiled many honest people's judgment, but I can't believe that House looked at the peace problem from a different point of view previously. He was too matter-of-fact, too passionless. We may, therefore, assume that he stood for peace, justice, and an international league till the last moment.

"The supreme cause of conciliation among nations loses in House its stanchest champion. I deeply deplore that I did not see this dear friend once more, and that he did not live to see the perfection of his grand ideas."

COL. HOUSE TAKES A DRIVE.

PARIS, January 20, 1919.

Col. E. M. House, who was confined to his bed last week, was so improved to-day that he was able to take an automobile drive. He expects to resume his duties in connection with the American peace delegation within a few days.

I will put the whole of this remarkable obituary in my remarks before I close. I note now from Herr von Bernstorff and from other German authorities that all of them favor the 14 points of peace, and favor the freedom of the seas as enunciated by Col. House. So I anticipate that they find in it much that is of advantage to them. That, however, was not the original purpose for which this discussion was precipitated to-day. It grows out of a meeting, I assume, at Poli's Theater, in which certain ideas were advanced somewhat inimical to the peace and good order of the District of Columbia or the United States.

What complaint could be made if they were arrested under the espionage law? A violation of law would be, of course, the charge. I read from an act of March 4, 1913, "an act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1913 and for prior years, and for other purposes." After providing certain items to cover deficiencies, it contains the paragraph which I have quoted several times:

That hereafter the Executive shall not extend or accept any invitation to participate in any international congress, conference, or like event without first having specific authority of law to do so.

I next read from a proclamation dated December 23, 1918, abrogating, annulling, and rescinding certain regulations prescribing the conduct of alien enemies. The body of it I do not care particularly for, but it concludes:

In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Paris, in the Republic of France, this 23d day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

FRANK L. POLK,
Acting Secretary of State.

These are two matters of documentary evidence that connect themselves, one prohibiting the President from being at the Paris conference and the other attesting an official document done outside the borders of the United States while the Chief Executive is accepting an invitation or upon his own motion is at a conference in violation of the statute made in 1913.

Bolshevism is nothing but organized crime. Without that organization it is mere sporadic offenses without connected purpose, but when all of them are acting in concert, pursuing a common end, it becomes no longer a mere private conspiracy susceptible of indictment, but it becomes a movement against the organized powers of stable government. It becomes, in other words, a question whether civilized society can survive or whether that of Bolshevism can be substituted. Therefore, in the substance of it, it is lawlessness as opposed to the orderly processes through which organized government exercises its powers.

The United States Government is no longer, Mr. President, a Republic of self-governed people. It is the rule now of the alleged superman at the head of group or class aggregations seeking their own advantage. Neither is it a Government of law. It is the rule of some men, selfish, ambitious, greedy, impractical, and dreaming. Some chase phantoms in the boundless realm of idealism. Others build a class despotism founded on spoliation. Again, another group, similar to the one at the theater, possibly, shout revolution and pillage unrebuked in public places. The preacher of discontent demands an enforced equality of property and income, ignoring the individual differences in thrift, industry, and ability. All reach the same result. Pulling down the successful from the higher level of achievement to the beaten plane of mediocrity is hailed as progress. To have succeeded in private pursuit is become a badge of infamy and the target of every blatant defamer the Government can discover and drag from obscurity into public office. To have failed is an emblem of distinction and fitness of itself, dispensing with further examination in this civil service of incompetency and lawlessness.

Free institutions are to be developed by degrading everybody to the condition of the improvident and ignorant. Confiscation and bankruptcy are to be made the reward of merit. Self-indulgence and instant enjoyment are asserted to be the right of all. Earning, saving, deserving, and wisely investing are denounced as archaic folly. The old New England virtues are behind the times. Sudden wealth and the supposed easy life and lavish expenditure of great affluence are the aim. The ostentation of vulgar and sometime ill-gotten wealth emphasizes the desire. Few of the mad throng covetous of ease and plenty stop to learn that most fortunes are the result of ability and hard work. They jeer at one and will not practice the other. At middle or old age every able-bodied failure likes to be told by some statesman that he is a victim of society's injustice instead of his own disobedience of those immutable economic laws that lie at the base of individual or national success. He is ready to vote himself a noncontributory old-age pension and tax the frugal and industrious to quarter himself on the productive and saving energies of the country. It is that element that joins with Bolshevism to reach a common goal. Names change, but principles endure. This reprehensible trait of the human species is as old as history. Standards of living are glibly invoked to justify unrestrained desire.

We are told the world will never be what it once was. In what particular will it be changed? Will human nature change? Are we to be exempted from the laws that surrounded our ancestors? Hardly. Standards of living may change, but the methods of securing the wealth or means to meet those standards will never change. The insatiable desire for an automobile, silk underwear, and Perfecto cigars by those of adequate tastes and inadequate incomes is assumed to be guaranteed by the Bill of Rights. In metropolitan centers other friends of humanity in guttural accents demand free beer or blood. Ease and luxury are become included in the pursuit of happiness mentioned in the Declaration of Independence. Fewer automobiles and more use of human legs would add to our national thrift and toughen our muscles for the next war.

Our country hovers on the borderland between peace and war. Some of our soldiers fight in the far north of Russia under the Arctic Circle and others shovel coal and do day labor in French camps across the sea.

Why our soldiers are in Russia, I hope, will be discussed in due time on this floor. I have an opinion of my own upon that subject which I shall submit seasonably. While they risk their lives and endure hardships in alien lands our President spends nine weeks in ceremony, banquets, and visitings with kings, the powerful of the earth, in endless stately palaver. It is the old story of magnificence and misery, of splendor and suffering, of selfishness and sacrifice. While he coins new phrases and chases infinite abstractions into the empyrean heights of impossible human yearnings, the American Nation drifts. We drift in Russia. We drift in Mexico. We drift on the brink of war and peace. We drift on industrial reconstruction. We drift on domestic policies and internal peace. The only definite goal visible is profligate expenditure and huge taxes. The only voice in the dismal wilderness is an appeal from time to time to the mob to complete the ruin misgovernment has already begun.

The entire system of collecting revenue is not an apportionment among all, each paying much or little according to his means. It is avowed imposition of all taxes upon a... arbitrary classification between great wealth and small wealth. The distinction once made, we have committed ourselves to the flood of Bolshevism. Bolshevism is no new name, neither is it a new principle. It is an organization to take what others have without earning it and without due process of law. It may run in longer cycles here, but its end is inevitable at last. When great wealth is all taken, small wealth must finally be resorted to. It turns on itself, and only a Napoleon can preserve the remnants. The superman always succeeds the proletariat. There is no difference between the despotism of a king and the despotism of a mob. First the commune and then the dictator. Only the orderly processes of government by law build the impassable barriers between private right and injustice, confiscation, and violence.

The President has long appealed to groups and classes to govern the country. He is Chief Magistrate and superman by virtue of a usurping minority. He runs true to form by developing the plan to which he owes his election. Nothing but the grossest of egotism took him to the peace conference, where no executive of any other civilized power sits. He can not resist the lure of the limelight. The groups to which he panders applaud and the average man looks on in silent but undisguised disgust.

Group government eventually extinguishes the middle group or class. It destroys the State governments and all their reserved powers. It concentrates that power in a centralized Capital, and the States become mere provinces. It is the propelling power back of all Government-ownership schemes. Subconsciously the employee shouting for political ownership feels he and his group will dictate the terms of their own service. The employment service supported by taxes is thereby degenerated into a perverted instrument to unionize every employee in the United States. Scarcely one can work for the United States now in any skilled manual labor unless he belongs to a union. This condition is created by appointees of this administration paid out of public taxes. This is the first net result of group rule.

To remain safe at home we must turn from the distribution of wealth to its production. The first imperative duty of the Government is to take its restraining hands off private enterprise. No superman is equal to managing the country's business. It is the task of all. American initiative is dormant. It will spring to renewed life if the paralyzing menace of Government seizure or interference is removed. Banish the alien scheme to make Government here the support of everybody. Return it to the only true purpose of any free Government—to regulate and protect everybody while he is supporting himself. The unfortunate only in such a plan may be supported at the common expense. The idler and the spendthrift, the profligate and vicious are not a constituency for such a free Government. They breed out of proportion in cities. The sharp contrast between destitution and wealth, utter want and affluence, presents them as a gulf of misery reaching out from the great sea of population. They are ever the dark border of the genuine suffering and misfortune the kindly but discriminating hand of charity must distinguish and separate.

When the Uriah Heeps of politics, the Pecksniffs of a sensational press, the Dick Swivelers of business, and the Jack Cades of economics raise their hue and cry; when Tartufe and Mephistopheles, Falstaff and Prof. Stiggins, when the demagogues and blackmailers, the obsequious pilgarlicks who wriggle in spoils and the vermin that thrive in the fetid sewers of municipal vice and misrule, the ex-convicts and the crack-brained poets, the I. W. W.'s, and the hairy visionaries in sociology, when the petticoated adventuress from foreign parts and the cocksure American armed with nostrums and panaceas for every public ill taking his first dip in politics, all cast their eyes to bolshevism and civil commotion; when this variegated and ungodly herd begin to cream and mantle like a standing pond, to prate of what society owes them, and belch their corrosive influence upon public opinion, then is no time to claim their methods and creed are based on injustice and their tumult can be stilled by yielding to their clamor. When the priests of Baal and the false prophets of evil fill the land with the bray of their trumpets is the time for Senators to steer by the compass and not by the wind if we be safe pilots for the craft committed to our care.

I believe and charge that the Government now keeps its heavy hand on private enterprise to discourage and deaden its efforts. No person of sense or prudence will venture far under present uncertain conditions. When the Government has acted the dog in the manger a while the charge will be made, is made now, that private ownership has failed and the Government must undertake it all. Take off the restraints, repeal all war legislation affecting industry and agriculture, curtail expenditures, reduce taxes, protect our own markets, and a resurrection of peaceful prosperity will follow. The Government has fallen into the habit of taking things that do not belong to it. Like the habit in private life the lawful owners do not grow accustomed to it. What encouragement is there now to develop and build, to give of the best in our race? When one succeeds and his enterprise he watched and wrought by toil and unceasing care is raised to solvency and stalwart size the Government seizes it, its owners are ejected from their offices, their desks are rifled, their effects taken away by an official martinet, and the owners are strangers on their own premises and compelled to turn to new occupations for employment. Such are war powers abused for Government ownership purposes in peace.

Years ago in a country village a fluent wayfarer with a hypnotic eye and a prominent nose frescoed otherwise than in water colors gave a free lecture on the thousand natural ills that flesh is heir to. With other rural youths I was spellbound by this good Samaritan who tarried a brief season with us. He possessed remedies for every disease known to the medical fraternity and many they never heard of. He exhausted the pharmacopoeia with his compounds and the healing art lay bankrupt before him. A roomy vehicle provided a platform from which he discoursed to the multitude. It conveyed him and his elixirs about the country so suffering humanity might hear him and be cured. A sleek span of gaily caparisoned horses delighted the eye and promoted confidence in this philanthropist. The scene was illuminated by a generous torchlight which brought out in light and shade the tree-filled little park and the eager faces of the perishing invalids who hung upon his words.

With facile tongue and a copious medical jargon he sketched an astonishing variety of human ailments. Their symptoms were so graphically portrayed that many hardy rustics who consumed vast quantities of pork and beans and innumerable pies daily, instantly felt a dreadful malady gnawing their vitals. Unless this friend of the smitten multitudes relieved them a premature grave yawned for their disease-riddled frames. Fortunately before we all expired on the spot he produced from the inner recesses of his wagon marvelous potions and unctions that would snatch us from the jaws of death. A fervent sigh of relief went up and the mortality average was kept at normal figures. The medicines were all sold at cost; profiteering was scorned. Everybody bought something and the same brand had the convenient virtue of curing many fatal diseases. To convince the skeptical, free trial doses were dispensed. Some of the people always have abnormal yearnings for anything free. Throat spraying, nasal douches, and physic were administered lavishly with amazing results. The few scoffers who ornamented the fringe of the crowd became interested and abated their ribald comments. The next morning the son of Esculapius and his blooming nasal organ had hied him away to fresh fields awaiting the exercise of his talents. Several notices in the county seat newspaper referred to the departed Samaritan as a faker. It was intimated his medicines were compounded of camphor, chalk, senna, squills, and rain water. A profit of several thousand per cent rewarded the genius who knew how to assemble the material. From that day I have doubted any nostrum or person that cures everything, whether of the human body or the body politic.

A universal genius claiming to be without limitations on his accomplishments or knowledge in public or private station challenges analysis. Henry Ford says he has mastered mechanics in earth, air, and water. The sources of motive power are all known to him as are metal, chemistry, motion pictures, tractors, agriculture, patent law, finance, transportation, including car building, Pullmans, locomotives, iron and steel making, tracks, grades, bridges, and equipment. He has solved every problem in philanthropy, applied charity, and government. He can produce the best hospital and so reform society and the laws of nature it will have no patients but the victims of others' accidents and a few disabled by old age. Sociology is to be handled like his manufacturing scheme. The more ignorant a person the better. Educate the machine instead of the human being. How simple! Put the animated blockhead before a cultured machine, give him high wages, short hours, food, and clothing for almost nothing, good roads, an automobile costing $23, and turn him loose to uplift society and perpetuate the human species. Henry's idea of civilization is for everybody to have an easy time, enjoy all he wants, and be happy. Self-denial is all a mistake. The human mind is negligible; the pocket and the stomach dominate in his plan. This simple formula will eradicate avarice, vice, and crime, and make everyone healthy, sufficiently wealthy, and wise enough to run one of his educated machines. Of course this will end all wars. The Turks will quit killing the Armenians directly they hear of it. The Russian Bolsheviki will be so fascinated they will emigrate to Detroit if Ford does not build a plant full of educated machines in Petrograd. Lenine and Trotzky now slay all the bourgeoise having any sense; they may tolerate a cultivated machine because it will not issue a proclamation. The I. W. W. will drop their desire to commit sabotage on a machine that will do their work without effort on their part. The German will lose his arrogance and ambition and be content to sit meekly at Henry's feet and learn how to be happy with a 20-acre peach orchard paid for out of a rural credit farm mortgage that never falls due.

The laws graven on tables of stone and delivered by Jehovah to an ancient race on the cloud-wrapped summit of Sinai have not accomplished so much in 3,500 years. The gentle spirit incarnated in the Nazarene carpenter's son, his Sermon on the Mount, his matchless code of human morals, the labors of his inspired apostles, crowned by the divine tragedy of the Redeemer exemplified in the sublime shadow of the crucifixion have not wrought out for mankind in 20 centuries what this singular megalomaniac proposed to do by being elected United States Senator. When an automobile builder calmly tells the world he will perform on its peoples what elemental forces, human and divine, have not been able to produce in 6,000 years, may it not at least provoke a mild spirit of incredulity?

This astonishing creature has a contempt for history. It teaches nothing, he says. It teaches him nothing is the meaning. He must ignore history to secure credibility for his prospective achievements. One whose actual success is confined to producing a serviceable low-priced automobile in an age prolific of similar mechanical devices strains human credulity by his prospectus of reforms. His grasp of public affairs is measured by his peace-ark voyage to command peace by the mere majesty of his presence and the exemption of his son Edsel from military service when many thousands of the best of our race were voluntarily offering their lives for the country Ford slandered before the war. An alienist would say such a man's orientation is bad and no more fit to sit in this Senate than the son was willing to go into the Army.

Ford is not the first who, because he can do one thing successfully, thinks he can succeed in everything. He has seen his factory grow and wealth result. A large pay roll obeys his nod. Megalomania is not confined to monarchs. Smaller fry catch it. Because in office and great factories he dominates, he labors under the hallucination the public will follow him like the Pied Piper of Hamelin. Ford's peace-ark pilgrimage grew out of his basic inability to understand the difference between his Detroit office and the capitals of Europe. When such a man adventures in politics, unless he promptly learns the difference between his business subordinates and the voting public, his obsession amuses everybody but himself. In his business orders are orders and nobody talks back. In politics nobody takes orders and millions talk back. Of course Henry Ford is beginning to feel dazed. At the outset he would not make a single speech, even if he were beaten, and he was. Now he is vocal with cries of corruption, and every one of his vehicles protests in coughs of gasoline against the deep damnation of his taking off.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). The Chair will have to tell the occupants of the galleries that the Senate has a rule which opposes manifestations on the part of the galleries. The Chair, in common with the Senate, trusts the occupants of the galleries may enjoy their visit; but he is compelled to call their attention to the fact that the proceedings of the Senate may not be disturbed by demonstrations. The Senator from Illinois will proceed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Ford even proposes to found a newspaper to destroy an unfriendly press. Now, a contest is under way to enable him to annex the United States Senate to his jitney works. This effort to reform the Senate would not have been started if the President had not asked him to, he gravely states in an article under his name in a well-known magazine. It at least has become a classic in the art of egotism. I had as well give this excellent magazine the credit which is due to its efforts. It is known as the World's Work, and its light ought not to be hidden under a bushel. It contains two most remarkable articles, one by a magazine writer and another by Mr. Ford himself. It is the rule of the superman running through the entire article. He makes an important discovery, which ought to be cabled to Paris, if it has not already been noted by that vigilant guardian of international rights, Col. House. All wars, he discovers, are caused by misunderstanding. Maeterlinck before the war wrote, "Hell is a place of infinite misunderstanding." Gen. Sherman remarked war is the same kind of place. Things which are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. Ergo, argues Henry, misunderstanding is hell, hence war is misunderstanding. The Belgian outrages and the Lusitania's piratical murders were misunderstandings. President Wilson soothed us nobly, encouraging everyone to be calm and neutral in word and act. This was another misunderstanding, for some of us thought if American women and children were to be murdered by German submarine pirates while our President sang the requiem, "Keep cool," they ought to stay at home. If the United States Government refused to protect American citizens' lives on the sea, remain within our own borders and be safe, instead of going upon the sea and losing their lives, unprotected and unavenged. Representative McLEMORE and others misunderstood. Our people were killed for two years contrary to the international law obeyed by all civilized powers. Every murder called out a President's note to Germany and a lullaby to us to be tranquil. The summit of misunderstanding was scaled in warning the allies there must be peace without victory. During this time Henry Ford was spending his money to close our markets to Great Britain and France, denouncing American munition manufacturers as avaricious brutes and crying out against preparedness while prepared Germany struck at unprepared Europe. Ford even tried to deprive the sorely beleaguered allies of supplies in our markets and shrieked the war was waged by capitalists for bloody gains. Take the profit out of war and it ends, he argued. Because people make money out of war, war occurs. The senior Senator from Mississippi will now exalt Ford into fit material to be Senator from Michigan, while he demanded that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] be expelled from the Senate for offending much less. Another misunderstanding!

Mr. Ford remarks:

> People could not be made to hate each other if there were absolute freedom of intercourse between them, if they were not lied to by those with selfish interests to serve. There are no real differences except those caused by environment and opportunity between the people of America and the people of the rest of the world.

I have given this some thought, Mr. President—a most remarkable statement. It leads me to this conclusion: A Bedouin Arab would make a perfectly good mayor of New York City if his environment and opportunity were the same as a zealous adherent of Tammany. Whereas if a blonde Chicago alderman were transplanted to the desert, given a camel and a bag of figs, he would become a brunette chief, recite the Koran, and practice polygamy. Race, ancestry, religion are negligible. Ford avows he cares nothing for any of them. Edmund Burke was likely right in saying one who does not care for his ancestry will not care for his posterity, with the single exception I have already noted. History is the philosophy of life teaching by example. This gas-engine savant despises its lessons or limitations. He will abolish history by doing it some other way.

When he became a candidate by Executive order, the President neglected to specify what primary ticket he must run on so he took no chances in interpreting the order and ran on all of them. None of the parties wanted him, so in the shuffle he naturally fell into the bosom of the Michigan Democracy. It is in Michigan the residuary legatee of every Ishmaelite anyhow, and so it drew Henry to an indifferent hand and tried to look happy. The whole theory of government he teaches is turn it over to a superman who knows everything. When he dies or quits the Bolshevists divide what is left and riot until another superman comes along. At any rate, the President wanted him to be Senator and he believed the people of Michigan were eager to give the President anything he wanted.

Somewhere there was another misunderstanding. It was agreed, and Mr. Ford loudly proclaimed last fall, there was no partisanship in this contest. Party shibboleths—and I have it from this same article—during the war were extinct except among professional politicians, and for them Henry expressed a profound contempt. He had absolutely no sense of limitation on his own power in politics to do whatever pleased him. This self-sufficiency commended him to the President, who insists on having men about him who can do anything even in defiance of the laws of nature and of common sense. So he entered the campaign scorning politics and breathing lofty aspirations. He would not, he says in this article, walk across the street or spend a dollar, neither would he make a speech to be nominated or elected. Away he went aboard a nonpartisan Oskar II, voyaging the autumn seas toward the November election. Trustful soul destined to a rude awakening amid a tempest that drove him a hapless wreck to defeat! The President, like Ford himself, knows no limitation in politics. He therefore issued his proclamation in October, 1918, calling on the American people to elect none but Democrats. This deranged Henry's nonpartisan plan of navigation and he sank under an adverse majority before the Michigan Democratic central committee could revise his sailing orders. Another misunderstanding!

In 1916 Ford spent money fighting preparedness. His paid whole-page advertisements in newspapers are preserved in my files. Those newspaper advertisements said the Kaiser's criminal ambition did not cause the war. It was the avarice of the munition manufacturers. Preparedness in our country was bred by their greed and they were traffickers in American blood. Mr. Mooney, in California, accepted this view. More practical than Ford on public measures, he or his sympathizers concluded to murder those who favored it. Two souls with but a single thought! Mooney and Ford's hearts beat as one in those days. The query naturally arises, Do these kindred thoughts have any relation to the President's persistent meddling with the Mooney case in California through the Board of Mediation, through the head of the Employment Bureau, Mr. Densmore, and through other Federal officials who have gone into California, some of whom could not now go inside the State for fear of being arrested by the State authorities? Mooney practiced what Ford preached. Be careful what you practice, but say what you believe. There are many who will not say what they believe in the Senate Chamber because they must be elected. That is the curse of American politics that some think more of their seats than they do of their convictions. How much Ford's crusade paralyzed preparedness can not be measured. We heard its echoes when Haig fought with his back to the wall. Within the limits of his power and money Ford sent us into the war with Germany with no soldiers, no transports, no guns, and no airplanes.

That was the necessary effect of the crusade, and he meant it to be so. How many American graves he filled can never be told. Mooney with his accomplices sent 10 American citizens to their California graves and 40 wounded to the hospital as his protest against preparedness. It must have seemed a ghastly inconsistency to the President to hang Mooney and send Ford to the United States Senate. He had granted Ford absolution for his sins as part of a political plot to carry Michigan. Therefore he bestirred himself to save Ford's wretched dupe from the hangman's noose. So he meddled and sent his agents to balk or intimidate the administration of justice in the State courts of California. The whole scheme was concealed by disguising it as a labor agitation. It was in its inception and in its original propelling power a political scheme. If union labor should make it a political issue, so much the better for the authors of this plan.

In the twinkling of an eye Ford emerged from a pacifist to a warrior for the liberation of mankind. He beat even the President and broke the record for speed in changing coats. The President ran for reelection as a pacifist. His campaign posters shouted from every billboard the same maudlin drivel as Ford's advertisements. They were louder and even more numerous. The President did not really grow scared about it until after he was reelected. Ford did not start out to free the whole human race until the President asked him to. Humanity would have remained in bondage indefinitely if Henry had waited to liberate the world on his own motion. The next morning after the metamorphosis he entered the fray armed cap-a-pie with Government contracts for costs plus 10 per cent and the battle to liberate mankind opened around the world. Sir Galahad had arrived. I wish a modern Cervantes were now on earth, that he might trace the genesis, the exodus, the evolution, and the exit of this great Don Quixote of humanity.

The President told us to be neutral in 1914 and 1915, while Ford cried out against preparedness and demanded an embargo on war munitions and food, closing thereby our markets to the allies. Belgium was invaded, and the treaty signed by Germany guaranteeing her safety became a scrap of paper. Aircraft dropped shells upon hospitals, schools, and private homes. Noncombatant sick and aged men, women, and children were barbarously killed and mutilated. Whole civilian populations were deported in violation of the laws of civilized warfare and subjected to unspeakable outrage. Belgium, eastern France, and Serbia were desolated by a brutal soldiery. War, harsh as at best it is, became indescribable savagery by the deliberately planned frightfulness of Germany and the resulting pillage and murder. The invader's heel crushed the innocent and the helpless with unparalleled ferocity. The slaughter of Armenians was renewed by Turkey, the Asiatic ally of Germany. The Lusitania went down with over 100 Americans. Many of our own merchant ships were sunk with all on board. Germany avowed her purpose of waging a piratical submarine war on every sea. During the entire chapter of provocation those in this Capital in whose hands rested peace and war looked on with stolid unconcern from August 3, 1914, to February, 1917. Every repeated outrage evoked another note. The President repeatedly entreated us to be calm, tranquil, cool, and neutral in word and act. He suggested then that we were "too proud to fight." An Executive message addressed to the Congress, but evidently intended for the allies, admonished that there must be peace without victory. How strange this sounded to the English and French, to the Belgian on the brink of destruction, to smitten Serbia, wasted by overwhelming force. If after their sacrifice and suffering no victory crowned their struggle, the god of battles seemed indifferent to justice. Nothing, however, could awake the President and his advisers. No moral indignation was aroused by the outrages.

Suddenly Germany, in the insolence of her power, declared she proposed to drive American commerce from the seas. All of us could either stay at home within our own shores or fight. The few who had heretofore ventured abroad and been destroyed provoked no defense by their Government. Now Germany ordered the United States flag to leave the oceans of the world. There was no escape. We knew that we must either fight Germany alone to save ourselves or join with the allies to save all of us.

I believe the United States soldier and sailor of this war has served with as fine a spirit of self-sacrifice as any known in history. His endurance and his heroism are a lasting memorial of our country. He fought to make safe the free governments of the world, and I believe he has done so. To him let the unselfish purpose and unsullied motive be given. He rose to the high level of the mighty crisis. In him lived again the soul of the Revolution, of John Paul Jones, of Lawrence, and of Perry. In him blazed the spirit that rose triumphant at Yorktown and Saratoga and walked on the bloody slopes of Gettysburg.

It makes me somewhat skeptical of motives to hear so much among civil officers of making the world safe for democracy. Why prate constantly of our lofty ideals in official life? We never reached that exalted level of altruism or adamantine resolution to relieve suffering humanity until our own national life was threatened. A strict regard for historical accuracy requires the truth now to be told. In the pantheon of nations we can not merely pose when posterity returns its solemn verdict of future years. Let those who guided the executive powers and resolved on our foreign relations cease their humanitarian platitudes. They deceive nobody. The taciturn Englishman smiles and goes on; the happy, impulsive Frenchman bows politely and admits that our ideals were high, but is not deceived. It is well enough for us to prate, but these people know, and the world knows, too, the difference between lofty aspirations to liberate mankind and the prudent dictates of self-defense.

To return to the theme: Ford discovered another way to end war permanently is to give everyone in the world a chance to get what he wants at a price he can afford to pay. "We all want things for ourselves, and we want to get them with as little trouble as possible. I am for that. I think it should be made as easy as possible for people to get what they want." The Creator blundered in the universal plan. The noble metals are valuable because it is not easy to find and separate them from base alloys. If they were common as pewter, they would command the same price. An orchard apple is a cultivated fruit. Only constant effort keeps it from reverting to the aboriginal seedling type.

Beef and dairy cattle now represent several hundred years of painstaking development. Milk, butter fat, and meat are substituted for horns, legs, and skeleton. Left to themselves they return to the primitive ruminant, chased up and down the earth by changing seasons and famine. A packing house would become a button factory and a stock farm a wilderness. Mr. Ford's system turns humanity and its possessions back to seedlings and crab-apple bovines. I have strong suspicions that Henry himself is a seedling. Both of these I have enumerated are the easiest to raise and the hardest to live on. The climate easiest to live in, where clothes and shelter are negligible factors, and food is had in abundance by lying under a tree and waiting for it to fall on the tropical Micawbers, never produced a race noticed by the history Ford ignores. They mostly interest naturalists, inhabit museums, and serve as examples of the finished product of Mr. Ford's idea of making everything we need easy to get. His scheme spells decay. The other puts fiber and mentality into the body and mind.

The historical truth is that the story of human progress is written in the difficulties overcome. Ease, luxury, sloth are the familiar steps of the downward way. The urgent text now is simpler living, saving and investment, building a surplus for the dependent, and the inevitable rainy day. This is old-fashioned, and still no nation can live and ignore it. The dominant characters of every generation are not the men to whom things came easy. They fought with adverse circumstances and conquered the toils that fortune cast around them. The idle beneficiaries of inherited, putrescent wealth prove nothing. Tax such accumulations if need be. They never must be made the argument to attempt to avoid the changeless laws that govern individual energy and its achievements.

If there were no profits, there would be no wars and an everlasting peace would brood over a sinless world. We were constantly killing each other for money, we learn from Mr. Ford. The shades of Attila, Martel, and Gustavus Adolphus can almost be heard across the Styx while listening to the voice from Detroit. Some of them thought religious difficulties kept them busy while here. The historians made a mistake. The Thirty Years' War was not fought because of religion, but because somebody was trying to rob another of his gold. The histories must be revised to correspond with this gentleman's idea of the basic facts that animate the human race. The lust of dominion made the Napoleonic wars and the late Kaiser's. Unconsciously Ford exposes himself pitifully by insisting that nations and individuals slay each other only for gold. He reduces everything to a footpad basis. Give up your money and save your life. Hand every one plenty, with easy or no effort to acquire it, and crime and all evil vanish from the earth. On this argument there ought to be more crime among the poor than among the affluent. Still, facts refute it.

In this same article, Mr. President, while I am speaking of the superman and his Government, comes a new evangel of real estate. Everybody must have a chance to own a piece of land. No one shall have more than he can work himself, or can cultivate to the limit of profitable productiveness. The single-taxer said as much long ago, only he wants the Government to take all land, farmers' and all, and lease back only as much as the tenant can till or occupy himself. He won't be allowed to hire anybody. That's wage slavery raising its hateful head. It gets everyone back to the man with the hoe. That is progress. It is with poets, but it is not with anybody that has to feed his family or help feed the world. We become a Nation of garden-patch owners, unless the Fordson tractor rescues us. In the magazine article referred to he advertises his automobile and tractor more than the redemption of mankind. He claims to make both for humanity's sake only, and 20 per cent to 200 per cent dividends, and $150,000 annual salary to his 24-year-old son Edsel. What exemplary philanthropists are they!

The back-to-the-farm movement is solved. Buy a Ford, live in the city, and motor out to your piece of land, having previously bought one of his tractors. He will soon perfect one that will run itself. While it is doing the spring breaking, the farmer can be reading one of Ford's essays on how to live without work. The salvation of agriculture depends on buying one of Ford's machines. All roads end in that. Last year he tried surreptitiously to draft the governors and agricultural departments of some of the principal States into indorsing and advertising, free, his tractor. They caught him at it and repudiated him. The schemes Henry hatches for publicity without paying for it shame the fertile expedients of the theatrical world, except that he never loses anything, not even stage money. He has done everything except lose his diamonds and fall off the pier.

About the same time that it became bruited about that he would become a candidate for Senator, by Executive order, he thought it well for the Government to boost his tractor. Competitors were crowding, so Secretary of Agriculture Houston volunteered. Houston is another one of the most capable men the President ever knew. He knows all about everything that grows out of the earth, having been raised in Texas under the tutelage of Burleson, who got his start in cotton raised by convict labor. These other friends of humanity were instinctively recognized by Ford when he wanted more free advertising. The Department of Agriculture, presided over by Secretary Houston, sent a tractor expert to Dearborn, Mich., to report on Ford's tractor. This was for the benefit of farmers, and was done at public expense. It was a scheme to enable them to know what the superman could do if he were given a chance. Henry was delighted. An advertising boom, gratis, would convey to an oppressed public a precious boom, with 200 per cent dividends hid away from vulgar eyes. The report was made and suppressed. It has never seen the official daylight from the time it was lodged in the Department of Agriculture. The farmers who have bought and are still buying it have never had the benefit of this investigation at public expense; and Henry's advertising scheme, like his Eagle submarine chasers, did not arrive as expected. His mechanical experts, to say nothing of the report in detail, a copy of which is available, have either passed off some blue sky on him or he has appropriated it on his motion.

All terrestrial things are reduced to a Ford car as common denominator. Such good material is put into it, it is the lightest and most durable car made; and so doth Henry say. Modesty unspeakable, defying the analysis of moral philosophy!

Apply the same principle, remarks he, to railroads. Cars and engines must be built lighter. I hope, now, I would have no such unique idea myself. Far be it from me to masquerade in any stolen plumes. Freight cars weigh too much and passenger cars weigh more than the people whom they carry.

A Pullman sleeper, he observes, weighs 150,000 pounds. Its full passenger weight carried would not exceed 10,000 pounds. A terrific waste of power in hauling weight of equipment, it strikes him. Lighten the car, burn less coal, lighter rails, less expensive roadbed, trestles, and bridges. Trains could run faster if they weighed less. This is all so while they stay on the track. A Ford car is light, and can make speed. Every time, though, it runs over a goose or a bulldog it upsets and finishes up with a coroner and the obituary of the deceased. Henry's cuff-button freight and passenger cars, built on his scheme, would jump the track on every curve. The porter would have little trouble waking passengers in the light sleeping car he proposes, particularly if they were roosting in an upper. Slumber would be impossible. There is not an expert railway man in the country who would not regard Ford's scheme as wholesale manslaughter.

Another way of cheapening freight is by water transportation. He has tackled that, and here, we learn, he will build barges and carry freight at impossible figures on canals and rivers. Just as soon as he gets his Eagle boats done he will turn his shipyard to barge building. It is hoped the barges will be produced faster and leak less than the Eagle boats; otherwise no relief from freight congestion is in sight. There is a remote hint he drops—he does not develop it, but he suggests—that he intends to build an airplane that will carry hay and live stock at incredible speed for almost nothing. Earth, air, and water thus yield him dominion. It behooves us, however, to choose our nurse and surgeon in advance. With his autos upsetting everywhere, his Fordson tractors bucking over backward and killing farmers, his marine craft taking in water like a sieve, his airplanes are apt to turn somersaults and spill passengers and freight out of the sky, to the damage of peaceable inhabitants below.

President Wilson says bolshevism in Russia can be stopped only by feeding the murderous ruffians who plan to prey on the industry of the world. That is the reason why the newspaper is published referred to by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. That is why the magazine to which I referred some days ago, the Liberator, which is a cry for blood, is published, unscathed, passing through the mails. That is why such meetings were held as were held on last Sunday in Washington, calling together the disorderly from everywhere, and presenting to them the plan of revolution and division. The President says they can be stopped by feeding. Here, again, is another misunderstanding. Ford, in the article, says that he can cure a Bolshevist by moving pictures. He proposes to show, in a moving picture, a Ford car doing a tail spin through a village, with a constable possessed of fierce whiskers in pursuit.

The Bolshevists will recognize the whiskers as the tie that binds, and harmonious relations will result. Another scene will portray his tractor with gang plows turning furrows 26 inches deep, while numerous proletariat refresh themselves from lunch baskets visible in great abundance. The well-filled baskets will attract more attention than Henry's marvelous device. Next to murdering, eating is the chief occupation of Trotzky's constituents.

As a good imitation of Dante's Inferno on earth, Mexico claims priority over even Russia. Our course with that power has been vacillating and a continuous humiliation. Ford sent Carranza a Fordson tractor last fall and word by the delegation of Mexican editors that he would at once spend at least a million dollars on a tractor plant there and in educating the natives in its use. By so developing their resources, he states, if a sufficient number of the people can be established as small farmers on their own land and industries established to give employment to the rest, it will end Mexico's troubles forever.

It will end the troubles in any country in the world if you can give everybody a small piece of land, induce him to move on it and raise his sustenance from it, and put to work those that will not till the soil by establishing factories, so that there will not be an I. W. W. in all the land, or a Bolshevist, and everybody self-supporting and happy, and the head of his own family. If you can produce that ideal condition that has not existed from the days of the patriarchs, when they pitched their tents and kept their flocks in far-distant Asia, you have cured everybody's evils in this world.

Henry, unfortunately, knows not either the Mexican statesman or the native. One at present has a talent for confiscating property, and the other for doing things to-morrow. The only things on time there are revolutions. A land where a majority cease effort when they own a pint of beans and enough tortillas to come out even will be indifferent to the lure of Ford's minimum wages of $6 a day gold. It would be such affluence that the native would retire from industrial pursuits at the end of the first week, pension off his family, buy a lottery ticket and a fighting cock, and spend the rest of his life in voluptuous ease. Pulque is cheap. Our prohibition friends, including many of my associates, do not know the difficulty in carrying prohibition into foreign parts. Anybody in that country can start his own brewery by cutting the pulpy heart out of a maguey plant and waiting for the juice to run into the cavity. Nature does the rest. All you have to do is to drink it.

Everything comes there as easy as Ford says it will here when he has sold us his tractor, a car, and given us a piece of somebody else's land. Mexico is the endless land of easy indifference, with no care for to-day or thought of to-morrow, except as the only proper time to keep a promise. If Ford is right that a man's environments determine his character, he will not do much with the Mexican. This trustful and ambitious descendant of the Aztec is happy the way it is. He is like a bad trust—all he wants to do is to be left alone. These sons of the Tropics will never take to his machinery. They are not fond enough of motion to chase away their lives in jitneys. They can have a much better time asleep any day in the week. Let him try his experiments in factory building, water power, and instructing them how to get what they want with the least amount of labor. The natives know more about that now than anybody else in North America. What they can teach Henry in this line will astonish him when he stays among them awhile.

Ford's contracts with the Government attract attention. The Eagle boats originally were to cost $275,000 each, I learn from the contract. The usual miscalculations increased this to $400,000. Add $112,000 for armament and the $25,000 per boat profit to him and incidentals bring the cost to $550,000 each. The original 100 Eagles have been since the armistice reduced to 60 to be completed, costing the Government $33,000,000. In the magazine named one a day is promised, with a blare of trumpets, and no profits to Ford. I read the whole contract, because of an inquisitive turn of mind. Why he signed a contract for 10 per cent profit on cost and abandoned work and limited his liability for breach of guaranty on material, workmanship, and performance to $1,000 liquidated damage on each completed vessel, except as commendable thrift, is not explained. It is hardly in keeping with his philanthropic claims, however, made both in the campaign and in this magazine article.

Instead of one a day turned out and 93 done by December 15, 1918, 7 Eagles emerged from Henry's nest, and they could neither fly, run, nor swim. That is the gospel truth, Mr. President, read from the records of things undone.

Competent shipbuilders credit Ford with being a fair engine builder. The hulls he overlooked. Expert sailors unanimously agree that a boat without a water-tight hull lacks something indispensable for successful navigation. Shipbuilding is a business, and he has found his limitation. Why the Navy is to have him complete 60 Eagles no one explains. The boat is worthless for merchant uses. Its mission is to destroy submarines. The machinery maintenance cost is $9,000 annually, in addition to the pay roll of 7 officers and 68 men for each. They are fit, therefore, only for the next war, which is to be abolished by the peace league. Why the Government pours millions of taxes into this useless venture is a mystery. We hope it may be illuminated by Ford when he cashes in on his contracts.

I learn that he made more Liberty motors than any other concern, more ambulances, motor trucks, tin hats, and steel shrapnel helmets than anybody else. He has no limitation on his volume of production. Like the old Greek mathematician, if you gave

Henry a place to stand, he would move the world with his lever. He beats everybody. The earth is only 25,000 miles in circumference. That is very unfortunate, Mr. President. If it were more than that, Ford would have room to really spread himself and let loose his real activities. This pent-up Utica is too little for him. When I look up the records, however, this colossus is exceeded by several manufacturers, who advertise less but deliver more.

Ford distrusts the professional expert in every line. The unskilled man, if given a free hand, will nine times out of ten do a given thing better than an expert. The denser the clodpate, the richer asset for Henry. That is the essence of superman government—that nobody knows anything except a few. That is the beginning of an oligarchy, and an oligarchy always ends in a dictatorship, because the members of it kill off everybody but one, and he remains as the superman government.

The training of the architect, engineer, and even physician is a handicap and limitation. Dissolve the endowments of universities and cancel school taxes. Some of the faculties need cleaning out in the universities, but it hardly justifies the radical conclusion which Henry's argument would have us draw. He says he does nothing by rule. Experience is the father of rules. When some one's experience has shown by rule the fittest way to do something, he can devise a better way with his eyes shut and start an amateur on his way to beat the expert to it. If Henry broke his leg, he would have the bone set by a single taxer. As he believes in doing nothing by rule, if he got it on backward, no matter; one leg would balance the other and locomotion would gain in novelty and pose. As a candidate he could run both ways at once, just as he did in the Michigan primaries.

I draw from the gigantic storehouse of things promised that the President would like to have in Congress at least one man accustomed to grasping big problems and solving them in a big way. The redundancy of township politicians in Congress decided Ford and the President to inject some one with a thinking apparatus as a refreshing variety in the Senate.

That is the conclusion I draw from the article. This interesting pair has observed that there are too many lawyers in office. Ford has a contempt for lawyers. The obscurity and villainous complexity of laws are devised by that contentious gentry, so as to keep courts busy and annoy common-sense people by tangling them up in absurd rules. Henry dislikes lawyers because they follow rules. He scorns rules, and believes in getting what he wants the shortest, easiest way. So does the superman and Bolshevist. For instance, when he decides a patent covering a device made by a business rival is void he appropriates the invention. If the courts decide against him, he believes it a fit case for a recall of judicial decision.

This illimitable one has the largest motion-picture mill in America. Every week a thousand feet of film is fed out to theaters. It is not advertising; it is an educational institution teaching people how to live and make over the economic framework of society. It is a crazy quilt of individualism now. The motion pictures show how all human affairs will be as alike as two packages of breakfast food. The miracle is wrought by his car and tractor. The tractor has claws, and will climb trees like an overgrown tomcat. The car will have wings; if the roads fail, fly a while. It is difficult to resist the belief that Enoch's translation was not achieved in a vehicle made by the gentleman from Detroit after one gazes at the maneuvers of the mechanical boons he is about to shower upon mankind. The reconstruction of society and the redemption of suffering humanity depend on the machines sold by Ford at about cost. Here is the proper place for the profane historian to insert that December 31, 1918, the Ford Motor Co. declared a dividend of 200 per cent on the capital stock of $2,000,000, of which the Ford family drew $2,225,000. Coincident with this relief of suffering humanity Edsel Ford, 24 years old, was elected president of the company, at $150,000 a year. He has been acting president since the draft episode beat the record on lifelike reels in demonstrating how the whole family loved dividends and hated war. I hasten to explain that the son entered the shops when he was 16. He has eight years' experience. If he was an amateur and without any training, he would be much more valuable, and his salary would be a quarter of a million at least if the sire's theory is workable. Thus we are permitted to view of how a reconstruction of society works out in the Ford family. The soldier shoveling coal and doing stevedore work in France at $1 a day whose letter I read in this Chamber a few days ago may not appreciate the dazzling perfection of the new scheme for regenerating society.

Except running for Senator, Ford's crowning achievement in public life was as angel to Rosa Schwimmer. Rosa appeared in Washington in 1915. She bore a bundle of mysterious documents; she hinted from the warring nations that an olive branch was much desired by the belligerents. If somebody would wave it, the boys would all be out of the trenches by Christmas. The savants about Washington restrained themselves, as we were chloroformed by neutrality advice from the Executive anyhow. Rosa bobbed up in Chicago. No one wished to invest, but a prominent citizen, with a humorous turn, suggested Ford as a bankroll purveyor who might be hooked. The next train carried her to Detroit. Cassie Chadwick is no more, but her exploits fade away beside Rosa. Oskar II was soon provisioned and booked with as motley a collection of human beings as ever rose and fell on salt water. It came nearer developing a sense of humor in Germany than anything else in history.

The Labor Peace Council and other pro-German affairs indorsed the voyage. Even Bernstorff had a smile, which looked like a neuralgic pain in his face when he heard of it. The boat left the Hoboken pier with the band playing, "I didn't raise my boy to be a soldier."

I am taking the local historian, I am only quoting now. At the very last moment, the local reporter records, the steward ambled up the gangplank lugging a squirrel in a cage tagged "To the good ship Nutty." The curious thing was that it reached the ship without any other direction on the tag.

When the expedition was well on its way some of the leading spirits desired to inspect Madam Schwimmer's documents emanating from the crowned heads concerned in the war. They were not forthcoming. Some suspicious souls intimated Henry had been handsomely goldbricked. The suspicion increased until finally the letters of credit carried by the guests were recalled, but not until Madam Schwimmer had shown that she was still a genuine daughter of Eve, for she managed to lay in an $8,000 wardrobe at Ford's expense.

The wardrobe was magnificent. She is now doing diplomatic honors representing the new Hungarian Republic or some other potential nation not as well acquainted with her as Ford. She is still carrying her wardrobe with her. Day before yesterday a cablegram, which seemed to be of enough importance, came from Berne, Switzerland. It said Rosa had left precipitately the scene of her activity, and also left behind her unpaid bills in the sum of 60,000 francs.

It was time to go back to the ship; the credit slips were choked off, or the proletariat would have been arrayed like Solomon in his glory before the trip ended. The entire passage, so Benjamin Karr, of Cleveland, who was a newspaper man on board, and deserves immortality for his history and humor of the voyage, says, was one continuous controversy. Outside of seasickness, eating, and sleeping, it was an endless round of resolutions and debate. The boat docked at Copenhagen. Ford got a cold in his head and deserted his aggregation. He never reached the responsible rulers of the belligerents. The first boat headed for the United States carried Henry back home, and the boys spent Christmas in the trenches. So ended one great public undertaking.

"We want to end the war in Europe," remarked a distinguished member of the party. "We started more than one war of our own. We breathed an atmosphere of suspicion, of intrigue, of jealousy. Jealousy was our meat and drink. Mr. Ford left us a few days after landing, left us without a word of explanation or farewell, left us secretly in the small hours of the morning, after telling us at night that he would certainly continue the journey next day." Ford's kind heart could not bear the scenes of separation from his beloved ones, neither could he stand the aggregation he had assembled. If he could not bear them, how will he endure the Senate six years? Thus ended another superman government.

Ford said he would move his whole force from his motor works to the Senate if necessary, and "then they will know I have arrived," he commented. Where his outfit will be stored if he obtains a seat in the Senate is causing some anxious inquiry to the superintendent of the building. Barnum said years ago "The American people like to be humbugged." Wise old showman! But he changed his show. He went from Tom Thumb, as I remember my boyhood, to the wooly colt, and from the wooly colt to the mermaid captured in some far-off tropic land. He changed his show all the time. Henry never does. It is time Ford changed his, for the public has seen it not once, but several times. Trying to break into the Senate by creeping under the canvas in a partisan contest here, when he could not get past the doorkeeper on his ticket in the November election, may attract attention, so his show may be switched. But to adopt one of his phrases, at last it is a matter of political technique. I borrow that phrase from the article. So it will be when the politicians for whom he says he has such a magnificent contempt are asked to shut their eyes and lift him into the seat denied him by the voters of Michigan. If the acid test invented by the President for use in Wisconsin were applied to him, he would melt under it like a pewter dollar. An internal-combustion engine is his only vital political organ, but it can not become the propelling power of either great party in this country.

He believes in the rule of the superman. He thinks from him everything ought to come. He rejoices when the great middle class of the country are obliterated and everyone becomes dependent upon him. The superman grudges any prosperity not falling from his hand. Any plan of government he does not devise and operate is a wretched makeshift, to be borne only till he comes to relieve middle-class stupidity. The horn of plenty echoes famine unless he holds it and dispenses its magnificent stores. A dependent and grateful people must always be shouting hosannas to the superman from whom all terrestrial blessings flow. The great American middle group are self-supporting. They are the bourgeoisie robbed, exiled, and murdered in Russia. Here they are the enduring rock of self-government and civil liberty. In war they make the solid lines of military strength. Their government in peace is for all, not for groups. It is not based on class war and confiscation. They choose rulers for all and maintain their rights of free men. They scorn to accept life, liberty, or property as the gracious gift of a superman. They know these are of common right and were theirs before constitutions were framed or statutes enacted. The sheltering headlands of free government only guarantee and sanctify them. They do not flow from the bounty of a benignant superman or rise from class conflicts in an effort to despoil those who have for the benefit of those who have not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I have been wondering if the Senate is not now willing to consider for a while the business that is before the Senate. I ask the Senate to resume the consideration of the Post Office appropriation bill, and that the Secretary read section 5.

BRITISH PROHIBITION OF AMERICAN PRODUCTS.

Mr. WEEKS. Will the Senator from Alabama yield to me to submit a resolution to go over until to-morrow?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. WEEKS. I ask that the resolution be read and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 438), as follows:

Whereas during the war with the Imperial German Government Great Britain placed prohibitions on the importation of certain American products; and

Whereas the British Government has recently placed a prohibition on the importation of additional American products, to take effect on and after March 1, 1919, which is detrimental to the employment at their full capacity of our manufacturing industries; and

Whereas this action of the British Government is in direct conflict with point No. 3 of the 14 points of peace proposed in the message of the President of the United States to the Congress, of January 8, 1918: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, what steps, if any, have been taken by the Department of State to request the British Government to modify or suspend such prohibition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go over as requested.

PRINTING OF THE REVENUE BILL.

Mr. SMOOT. I send to the desk an order and ask for its immediate consideration. I will state to the Senator from Alabama that it will not take more than a moment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield for that purpose.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That there be printed for the use of the Senate Document Room 2,500 copies of the bill (H. R. 12863) "An act to provide revenue, and for other purposes," as agreed to in conference.

POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13308) making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAY in the chair). The pending amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Section 5, which the committee proposes to add to the bill, reads as follows:

SEC. 5. That the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road which is now used, or may be made suitable, for the transportation of the United States mails, excluding every street and road in a place having a population, as shown by the latest available Federal census, of 2,500 or more, except that portion of any such street or road along which the houses average more than 200 feet apart.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] offered the following amendment to the amendment which has been agreed to as in Committee of the Whole:

Provided, That section 6 of said act be further amended so that the limitation of payment not to exceed $10,000 per mile, exclusive of the cost of bridges of more than 20 feet sheer span, which the Secretary of Agriculture may make, be, and the same is, increased to $20,000 per mile.

An amendment is pending to section 5 offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to strike out on line 22 the word "or" and insert the word "and."

Mr. JONES of Washington. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Jones, Wash.	New	Sterling
Calder	Kellogg	Nugent	Sutherland
Colt	Kenyon	Overman	Swanson
Culberson	King	Page	Thomas

Mr. LEWIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] are absent on official business.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending amendment offered by me is on line 22, page 36 of the bill, to strike out the word "or" and insert the word "and." There seems to be an objection on the part of some Senators, thinking that is too restrictive in its character. It has been suggested that I withdraw that amendment and offer the following amendment: After the word "road," in line 22, page 34, strike out the following words: "which is now used, or may be made suitable," and insert the words "used or to be used," so that the section will read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, is hereby amended to provide that the term "rural post roads," as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road used or to be used for the transportation of the United States mails, etc.

The present difficulty, as has been stated, is that sometimes there are 4 or 5 miles or 2 or 3 miles in a link of roads as to which we do not know whether they are going to be used as rural free delivery or as star routes. Consequently those 3 or 4 miles of road really prevent the improvement of the remainder of the road. It can not be improved under the construction which has been placed upon the law by the solicitor of the Agricultural Department; and I can not say definitely, but that was possibly followed by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

The fund could only be used provided the Postmaster General stated that he contemplated using some portion of it as a post road. Unless a letter to that effect could be obtained from the Postmaster General, the Road Bureau of the Department of Agriculture could not improve the road. The existing law uses the word "may," and when that language was inserted everybody thought it was broad enough to cover cases such as the one to which I have referred; but it is because there has been a restricted interpretation placed on the language that this change in the law is desired.

It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama is a wise one, and will get rid of that difficulty without opening up the matter to the unlimited degree suggested by the Senator from Colorado. His proposition is to limit it to roads that form a small part in a link of roads to be used for post roads. That would obviate the difficulty under which the department now labors.

There might be 50 miles of good road, and just beyond it 40 or 50 miles more of good road, and there might be 3 or 4 miles between the two sections of road not used as a post road. This legislation is proposed in order to get rid of difficulties like that when the Postmaster General is enabled to say he is going to use those 3 or 4 miles of road for a post road. I would suggest that the Senator from Utah hear the amendment read as now proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

I have read the amendment which the Senator from Alabama has suggested, and in a moment I will ask the Senator to read it to the Senate.

Mr. SWANSON. The phrase "to be used" would not be any better than the word "may."

Mr. SMOOT. It seems to me that the words "to be used" present a definite proposition. The Postmaster General will know whether or not a road is to be used as a post road, and as soon as it is declared that it is to be so used the appropriation will apply.

Mr. SWANSON. Under the present law, in which the word "may" is used, the Postmaster General is required to state that he contemplates that the road may be used for a post road.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think that any road in the United States that is not to be used as a post road should not be built under the provisions of this bill. The only excuse for the measure at all is that it is to assist in the building of roads over which the mails of the United States are to be carried. I think Senators ought to guard well that point; and, at least, if we are going to spend Government money for the building of roads it should be expended on roads which are to be used by the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me to state a case: Here is a line of a post road, and the rural mail carrier has to cross 2 miles to get into another post road. As to those 2 miles of unimproved road, or it may be half a mile, which connect the two roads until the carrier gets on the other road, unless the Postmaster General sends a letter stating that the connecting portion has been designated and will be used as a post road the road can not be improved. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama simply authorizes the money to be used in the improvement of small connecting links of roads.

Mr. SMOOT. The words "to be used" in roads, or the connecting links of roads, simply mean that, as long as there is a post road running from any other road, and that road happens to go to another post road, it can be built under the provisions of this bill, no matter how long that road may be and no matter how short the part of the road may be which is used by the Government as a post road.

I think there ought to be some good common sense used in the expenditure of this money, and that the legislation ought at least to be so guarded that there will not be a general use of the money upon roads over which the Government has no business whatever.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I desire to give the Senator from Utah one illustration of a project within my own State. A trunk line and a post road run over the greater part of it but crossing an Indian reservation for, I think, 10 miles. We brought that project before the department, but the Postmaster General refused to approve it because the 10 miles upon the Indian reservation would not be a post road. The improvement was for the direct benefit of the Indians, and it ought to be the business of the Government to provide roads upon those reservations; and yet the State is not permitted to spend half the cost of that road upon the Indian reservation because under the present state of the law it can not be used as a post road.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator from Wisconsin ever tried to get a direct appropriation for the building of that road across the Indian reservation?

Mr. LENROOT. I have tried many times, but I have now given it up.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has failed in his effort?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. That is one illustration which I think ought to be taken care of in some way.

Mr. SMOOT. But I will say to the Senator that, even under the provision which is now suggested, there would be no authority whatever to improve a road over an Indian reservation.

Mr. LENROOT. It would not require a letter of authorization from the Postmaster General in that event.

Mr. SMOOT. That is about the only respect in which it would be improvement of the present law.

Mr. SWANSON. I will say to the Senator that the road bureau to some extent have been inclined, in some cases, to confine this appropriation too much to general roads instead of the other roads, as was at first contemplated. They have been very insistent on this for the simple reason that there are a great many roads which are absolutely ruined for the lack of 3 or 4 miles to connect them up. We have no objection to limiting the legislation so that these links may be closed and that we may have a good roads system.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest to the Senator from Virginia that if the amendment which the Senator from Alabama has just handed to me as a suggested amendment may be limited to a certain number of miles, there would be perhaps a good reason for accepting it. In order that the Senate may know just what the suggested amendment is I desire to read it. It reads:

Rural post roads, as used in section 2 of said act, shall be construed to mean any public road a major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link of any road or roads now or hereafter used.

I would suggest in that connection an amendment to the proposed amendment so that the amendment would read as follows:

A major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link, not to exceed 4 miles, of any road or roads now or hereafter used.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I can not accept a limitation of 4 miles, though I am willing to accept a fair limitation.

Mr. SMOOT. What would the Senator from Alabama think a fair limitation would be?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I would say 10 miles.

Mr. SMOOT. Did not the Senator suggest 4 miles?

Mr. BANKHEAD. We could not agree to make it that, as it would not amount to anything.

Mr. SMOOT. Four miles is quite a connecting link.

Mr. SWANSON. Some of these roads will not be over half a mile in length.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Alabama that I will withdraw my amendment and offer the following amendment; but in doing so I wish to have it distinctly understood that I am opposed to section 5 as a whole, and when a motion is made to strike out section 5, even though the amendment which I intend to propose be agreed to, I shall vote to strike out the section. I want that understood.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, before this little matter is adjusted can not the Senator from Utah give us some information? I have been waiting patiently to obtain from somebody a statement as to the amount of roads which have been constructed under the former appropriation by Congress.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is published in the report of the committee. The Senator from Iowa will find the number of miles stated there.

Mr. KENYON. I understand it to be about 49 miles.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that the report of the committee shows the amount.

Mr. KENYON. It does not show it very clearly.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been a limited mileage, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; very limited.

Mr. LODGE. Has it been but 49 miles, may I ask?

Mr. KENYON. It is only 49 miles.

Mr. LODGE. How much was appropriated for the purpose—$50,000,000?

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator from Iowa is mistaken as to the number of miles which have been constructed. About 8,000 miles have been constructed.

Mr. KENYON. Eight thousand miles have been constructed or accelerated?

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will permit me, I desire to state that the report of the Agricultural Department, which deals with this whole question, states positively that 7,869 miles of road have been improved.

Mr. KENYON. Those have been stimulated, but not constructed out of the appropriation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; they have been constructed.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator from Alabama state that that many miles of road have been constructed out of the appropriation?

Mr. BANKHEAD. They have been constructed or are under contract.

Mr. SMOOT. They have been improved. The department is not building new roads.

Mr. BANKHEAD. These roads have been built or are under contract.

Mr. LODGE. But the money has been spent?

Mr. KENYON. The money has been spent, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. It is all gone.

Mr. LODGE. That is the main thing.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I now suggest a modification of the amendment, which I trust the Senator from Alabama will accept. I propose that the amendment read:

A major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link not to exceed 10 miles in length, of any road or roads now or hereafter used.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer that amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 5, page 36, line 22, it is proposed to strike out the words "which is now used, or may be made suitable," and in lieu thereof to insert:

A major portion of which is now used or forms a connecting link, not to exceed 10 miles in length, of any road or roads now or hereafter used.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Senate will not adopt section 5. The money which has already been expended, appropriated in former appropriation bills, has been used on roads that were actually in use as post roads. There are thousands and thousands of miles of such roads that need improvement quite a much as the roads which have already been improved.

It seems to me that in appropriating money for a purpose of this kind the only excuse that can be found is that the money is to be expended upon roads used by the Government for post roads; otherwise, the appropriation would be unjustifiable and contrary to every policy of this Government, and never should be made by Congress or the precedent established.

If section 5 is stricken from the bill, then the existing law remains, and the money can be expended, with a simple amendment to section 6, for the very purposes named in the original law providing the appropriation for the betterment of post roads.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if he is in favor of section 6?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not in favor of section 6, and I will say to the Senator that I am going to offer a substitute for section 6. I am simply saying now that, even though section 6 be adopted by the Senate and becomes a law, the money ought to be expended under existing law and should not be expended under the proposed amendment of the present law, which is designed to broaden the class of roads upon which this money shall be spent.

Mr. KENYON. I agree with the Senator; and I merely wished to make sure that he was not making an argument for section 6.

Mr. SMOOT. No; as I said a moment ago, I am going to offer a substitute for section 6.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not understand why the Senator regards section 5 as broadening the scope of these roads.

Mr. SMOOT. It broadens it in this way: Even under the amendment which has been offered, the money can be expended on roads, not exceeding 10 miles in length, forming a connecting link between a post road and some other road. Under existing law and under existing regulations of the Post Office Department, the only roads that the money can be expended upon are those actually in use as post roads.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I do not think that that broadens the scope of the provision to any very great extent.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah does not mean exactly what he says. The provision in regard to the improvement of roads not exceeding 10 miles in length is intended to be confined to roads which are connecting links between post roads, and to no other roads than post roads.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I have already explained, there is hardly a post road used to-day between which and some other post road there is not a connecting link. The link begins at one post road and ends at another. There are very few post roads in this country that extend for five miles, say, and then stop without a connecting road continuing until it reaches another post road. Upon that basis I made the statement. The Senator is perfectly right in saying that the amendment provides that the link must be between one post road and another, but the link may be used for other purposes than a post road. It will always, however, lead to a post road.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like just a moment to explain the situation as I see it. For instance, an improved post road starts out from a town or a city and proceeds 25 miles. From another city, in the opposite direction, another post road starts, proceeds for 25 or 30 miles, and then comes to a point where it leaves the main road between the two cities and goes outside of the communities that are on the main road. That is the point. In order that such a road may be made a continuous post road, this amendment provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may expend some portion of this appropriation on a stretch of road between the two post roads not exceeding 10 miles. Perhaps in most instances it would only be a couple of miles, or 4 or 5 miles. The roads leading from the two towns may not be continuous post roads, but under this amendment those roads may be connected for the few intervening miles and provide a service where up to this time no rural service has been established. Perhaps along that road the country may be very sparsely settled and they may not want rural service. The purpose of this amendment is simply to overcome that difficulty and secure a continuous road between the important towns over which the mail may go when the improvement is made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the contention of the Senator from Alabama was also the contention of the Senator from Virginia when the bill was under consideration day before yesterday. It is true that the amendment covers just such a case, and it is true that that perhaps was the reason for suggesting the amendment to the existing law, but there is not a doubt, in my mind at least, that the amendment offered to existing law and adopted by the Senate just now will cover precisely such cases as I have mentioned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to ask the Senator if the amendment which has just been adopted—the amendment to section 5—does not amount to about this, that so long as two post roads are within 10 miles of each other, they may be connected at Government expense?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that is exactly what it means, although not wholly at Government expense.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Partially at Government expense.

Mr. SMOOT. Partially at Government expense, one-half being paid by the Government and the other by local taxes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Just one other question. The Senator from New York does not know much about the post roads in the Rocky Mountain States, but east of the Mississippi River is it not the opinion of the Senator from Utah that there is no point on the average rural delivery route which is more than 10 miles distant from the next rural delivery route?

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is the case in every State east of the Mississippi River, perhaps with the exception of some of the Southern States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So that the amendment just adopted practically includes all the country roads in the more thickly settled portions of the United States?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it; and I wish to say to the Senator that in the form in which the amendment was reported by the committee it embraced every road in the United States.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And the amendment now takes in most of them.

Mr. SMOOT. The amendment will not cover all the roads in the West, but it will embrace all the roads in the thickly populated centers of the United States.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. May I call the attention of the Senator from New York and of the Senate to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture under this amendment can only spend one-half of the money necessary for the work? The State or county must match it and put up the other half. Of course, if they do not want a road built and improved, they will not put up their half.

Mr. SMOOT. That is true; and that is so in the case of every road to be built under this bill; and it is so in the case of every road that has been improved under the original appropriation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. My inquiry is simply this: The restriction which the Senator from Utah appears to favor would hamper the spending of the money, would it not?

Mr. SMOOT. That is the object of the amendent.

Mr. LODGE. Then, it would hamper the primary purpose of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the original law was not broad enough; it did not reach as far as the proponents of the amendment desire.

Mr. President, I am going to reserve the right, if the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] does not do so, to make a point of order against section 5, if it is agreed to, when it reaches the Senate. The ruling a few days ago of the then Presiding Officer of the Senate was so contrary to the rulings made in this body in the past, that I think, if we had a ruling now upon the section as being general legislation it would be held to be general legislation. I recognize the fact that, according to the precedents of this body, the question has been decided both ways.

The late Senator from Arkansas, Mr. Clarke, in a decision when in the chair as President pro tempore of the Senate, held that a point of order could be reserved, to be made when the bill reached the Senate, notwithstanding it had been raised when the bill was being considered as in Committee of the Whole; but he added the statement that he thought one Presiding Officer would recognize the ruling of the Presiding Officer who first made the ruling, and would not go so far as to rule adversely to the decision of the one first ruling upon the question, even though he thought that ruling was erroneous. I should like to have the question decided; and perhaps it would be just as well to decide that point when this bill reaches the Senate. So I am going now to reserve the right, Mr. President, to make a point of order to section 5 when this bill reaches the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say a few words as to the proposed appropriation. I heard the other day the closing remarks of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] when he was discussing this amendment, and I think their serious character must have been appreciated by all Senators who heard him. The picture was not at all overdrawn. But all I rise for now is to make a protest against the manner in which we are piling up these enormous expenditures at this time.

This is not an expenditure that emergency demands, any more than emergency demands public buildings, which we have put aside during recent years. It has even less claim than river and harbor improvements, which we have wisely cut down very considerably from former figures. There is no emergency about it at all, and yet we are to appropriate $200,000,000 out of the Treasury. We have a debt, incurred owing to the war, of some thirty billion dollars. In the revenue bill, the conference report on which will be presented in a day or two, in the amendment put on by the Senate to give soldiers an extra month's pay we have a provision which will take $400,000,000 out of the Treasury. Something like a billion dollars must be provided in order to take care of the difference between the market price of wheat and the price which the Government pledged. The Department of Labor is proposing a revolving fund of $2,000,000,000 to build houses, not because they are demanded for occupation, but to keep men employed in building houses. I am receiving, and I presume other Senators are receiving, requests with which one can not help but sympathize, to give six months' or a year's extra pay to the Army. Six months' extra pay would amount to $1,200,000,000, and a year's extra pay would amount to $2,500,000,000. We appropriated $100,000,000 the other day to relieve suffering and starvation in Europe.

We have a bill that carries $6,000,000,000 of taxation which will presently be passed by the Congress, the heaviest taxes ever imposed in any country. They are so heavy on business and incomes that they actually imperil, in my judgment, the business of the country in the ensuing year, because out of the earnings of 1919, which is going to be a poor year, with no large profits or great returns, we will have to meet these enormous taxes falling upon a year when there were large profits and business was abnormally active owing to Government expenditures.

Mr. President, that is an enormous burden of taxation to place upon the people. We have thirty billions of debt. That is an enormous burden to place upon the people. Our interest account, I think I am not mistaken in saying, will reach a billion dollars a year. All that money and all this money that we are now throwing into roads and in every other direction must come out of the people. It must come either by taxation, which is already enormous, or it must come from debts, loading the future and piling up the annual interest.

I can only say that it seems to me the first duty of the Senate is to exercise a wise economy in all expenditures and not to enter upon any new expenditures that are not absolutely necessary.

We are moving toward vast expenditures of money in a way that is positively alarming to anyone who has had occasion, as I have had on the Finance Committee, to consider the condition of the finances of this country. I think it is unpardonable to project this country at this time into any great expenditure which is not absolutely demanded by the emergency.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question before he takes his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. LODGE. I do.

Mr. KELLOGG. I notice a bill introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] for the purpose of stimulating public works, which proposes an appropriation of one hundred millions, and three hundred millions from the War Finance Corporation, for the purpose of aiding in public improvements, among other things to enable the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army to proceed with the construction or repair of roads which the Secretary of War shall certify to the board to be of strategic or military value. If we are to be asked to aid in the construction of roads, would it not be better to have some appropriation of which the States shall pay one-half, at least?

Mr. LODGE. The force of the argument that because one bill asks for three or four hundred millions for roads, therefore it is well to ask for two hundred millions more in another bill, does not impress me. I think that all this road building and all the public-building expenditures ought to be restrained at the present time. They are not immediate emergencies, and we ought to see where we are and where we are going. Debt and taxes are piling up and we are spending money as if we could catch it out of the air.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] has referred to a bill which I introduced, and inasmuch as I am opposing an appropriation of $200,000,000 in this bill, I want to say just a word.

The bill which I introduced was purely an emergency measure. The work to be done under that bill was solely because of labor conditions in this country. The work could be done only under a certificate from the Secretary of Labor that it was essential because of a condition of unemployment. That is merely a temporary purpose. I do not know that the Congress shares in any way the belief—I rather think perhaps it does not—which some of us have entertained, that there is a serious time ahead of us as affecting unemployment in the transition period from war to peace. The Secretary of Labor, before the Committee on Education and Labor, has emphasized that fact. While not an alarmist in any way, as he says—and I certainly am not an alarmist—and expressing his belief that there will be an era of great prosperity in this country, he believes, as I do, that there is a sort of a hiatus to bridge over between now and that period, six or eight months in the future.

Now, we may be wrong about all of that. The bill to which the Senator refers makes an appropriation which will not be used unless that situation arises. It is in the nature of an insurance against unemployment. The $300,000,000 referred to is to be loaned by the War Finance Board to the States, under arrangements made with the States, and interest at the rate of 5 per cent is to be paid, which is sufficient safeguarding of the fact that the loan will soon be taken up by the States.

Mr. LODGE rose.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senator from Massachusetts wish to ask me a question?

Mr. LODGE. I was going to ask the Senator from Iowa a question in a moment.

Mr. KENYON. I was just explaining that bill.

That is what that bill is. As to public buildings, it carries no extra public buildings. As to the States, it carries no extra public works. It is simply to go ahead and carry out the works which already have been authorized by the Federal Government and by the State governments. There are some 150 public buildings in this country that are now delayed and have been during the war, very properly, and are delayed now because the material can not be bought. Somebody has to start ahead on that enterprise. Private capital is holding back. Private capital is afraid, on account of the enormous sums that must be paid for materials. If the Government starts it is the signal that "All is well; go ahead." That was the theory and the philosophy of that bill.

I realize that it is open to the charge that it may be used as a pork barrel. I have tried to safeguard that. None of the money can be expended except to carry on these public works where the Secretary of Labor certifies that they are essential because of unemployment. I am not in the habit of advocating pork barrel bills.

Mr. LODGE. What I desired to ask the Senator was this: I agree with him entirely that, whatever may come afterwards, there is a period of readjustment, which is on us now, when there is a great deal of distress and shortage of employment; and I wish to ask the Senator whether it would not be well, instead of putting the whole burden upon the Government, so to relax the laws or change the laws as to give opportunity to normal industries to go to work?

Mr. KENYON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. I have in mind what was stated here the other day with great force by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES]; and I have had specific instances brought to me. Foreign countries will buy ships of us now, at this moment. They are ready to pay the additional cost of tonnage in order to get them at once, so severe has been the destruction of tonnage. That opportunity to contract for foreign account will soon pass. It is here now. The other day I saw the manager of a big yard in Buffalo who said they could take on some of those contracts and employ great numbers of men who are being laid off, but the Government will not allow them to do it. Then we have to come in with the Government and make work when there is work like that that can be had if the Government will take off the prohibition. I do not know why the prohibition is there, unless it is to be used in some way in our negotiations; but there it is.

Moreover, nothing is done in regard to immigration. When we are said to have a shortage of employment in this country we are leaving our immigration laws untouched and we are leaving our whole labor market open to an influx of labor from every part of Europe. There is a great desire, in view of the disturbed conditions of many parts of Europe, to come here now. I think the Government ought to do something to prevent an influx of labor until we get our Army back and get our men placed and give the normal industries a chance to resume their normal activities.

Mr. KENYON. I am glad the Senator has said that, and I agree with him. There is no use of our hiding our heads in the sand and saying that we are not close to serious labor troubles in this country. My thought was to provide this sort of a buffer, or rather reservoir, to take care of this labor condition during the next few months.

I wish that we might, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts, get rid of some of these restrictions and try to get back to a normal basis, but this bill under consideration does not help materially in that respect. As to the $50,000,000 to be spent for the year ending June 30, 1919, that argument might possibly be made; but as to the two other items of $75,000,000 for the two succeeding years it can not be made, though the report, on page 10, says:

> It is the consensus of the best thought of the Nation that public improvement of all sorts should be vigorously pushed at this time, in order that labor and industry may be given maximum opportunities for continuous employment and operation.

That is true as a statement, but this bill helps but little, if at all.

Under this bill there must be certain conferences carried on with the States. That is going to take time. It is all some way in the future. It is not going to help, as I view it, this labor situation one particle, and that is the distinction between the position I take as to the bill I have introduced and this measure. I think it is unjustifiable at this time of our national finance and the taxes that are being placed upon the people of this country to vote away this $200,000,000 on a proposition that certainly rivals, if it does not far exceed, the river and harbor bill in all the complaints and criticisms that have been made of that measure in the past. It ought to be known as the "rural pork road bill."

I know it is unpopular to apparently oppose anything looking to the construction of roads. I know it is an unpopular thing. I believe the States ought to do the most of this work of road construction, stimulated, perhaps, to some extent by the Government. We all know, of course, the argument that roads develop our civilization, make better schools, better churches, and better communities, and all of that, and it is true; but where are we going to end on these Government appropriations? Is there never to be a stopping place in taxing the people?

I wish the whole people of the United States might have heard the address of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] on this subject last week; and I think if the entire membership of the Senate had heard it probably this $200,000,000 appropriation could not be passed. It is unjustifiable at this time to pass this measure, and I shall vote against it.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] one question.

The thought that comes to me at this time is that we are appropriating beyond our power to pay. I do not mean to say that the Federal Government can not borrow money to pay any debt that it may contract; but it seems to me that we are now approaching a point—and I speak because of the many appropriations to which the Senator from Massachusetts has just referred—when we are likely to have to pay on the next liberty loan more than the 4¼ per cent interest which we have been paying in the past. If the next liberty loan shall fall upon a market that is unduly bad, I do not know that we can float our bonds without paying more than 4¼ per cent.

It has been suggested that it makes no difference as to what financial conditions confront us; that we have the credit and we can borrow. But I want to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if in his opinion there is not danger that if we are compelled to increase the interest which we have to pay on the next liberty loan to 4½ or 4¾ per cent—even 5 per cent has been named—we shall find that the withdrawals from the savings banks of the country, which generally can not pay over 4 per cent, will bring about conditions that may seriously disturb our financial situation and leave us in a condition which closely borders on a panic? We do not know where we are going to land if we disturb the complex relations which are so closely interwoven with the multitude of savings banks, upon which the prosperity of our country so largely depends.

I should like to have the Senator from Massachusetts tell us what he thinks about this feature of the situation.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree entirely with what the Senator from Vermont has said. I did not go into the details in regard to it, but we have a loan now coming of about six billions, I suppose it will be. It falls upon the country at the same time with the heaviest tax bill ever paid by any people, which will take six billions from this country in one year, most of it in the form of direct taxation. I fear that there may be difficulty in floating the next loan; that we may be compelled either to raise the rate, or—which would be, in my judgment, much better—to give the bonds a nontaxable character. But, in any event, I think the outlook as to the next loan is a very grave one; and we are providing now, by these extravagant expenditures in every direction, for another loan. Our revenue is not going to begin to meet our expenses in another year.

Mr. SMOOT. It will not half meet them.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it will meet them by half, as the Senator from Utah says, and next year there will have to be another $6,000,000,000 loan; and what we are spending here, in this $200,000,000 and in the other millions that we are appropriating, is the credit of the United States. We are not spending our revenues. Those have gone long ago. We are spending the credit of the United States. We are putting these things on the backs of posterity—things that could perfectly well wait, many of them.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in connection with what the Senator has just stated, I wish to say that there seems to be an impression going out through the country that because of the fact that we have proposed to repeal certain laws appropriating money for certain specific purposes to the amount of $15,000,000,000, and the papers carrying the proposed repeal in a form that convinced the people that that money was going back into the Treasury of the United States, hereafter there will be no necessity of any further loans.

If there is any criticism to offer in relation to the repeal of the appropriations amounting to $15,000,000,000, it ought to be along the lines that they were not as much as ought to have been repealed. I say that because I want to call the attention of the Senate at this time to the fact that our appropriations made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, amounted to over $36,000,000,000; and the members of the Finance Committee will well remember when Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo appeared before the committee and said that all that would be required to meet the obligations of the Government was $18,000,000,000 for this fiscal year, and stating that there had been appropriated at least $18,000,000,000 more than would be required during this fiscal year. We find now but $15,000,000,000 being repealed, instead of $18,000,000,000. Now, if $18,000,000,000 is all that the obligations will be then we could well have afforded to have made a repeal of $3,000,000,000 more; and when that bill is before the Senate I want to place in the RECORD a detailed statement showing that to be the case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator remind the Senate when the Secretary of the Treasury made that statement or estimate.

Mr. SMOOT. It was in November, right after the armistice was signed; and I will say to the Senator that at that time it was figured that that was all that could be expended by the Government.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now, will the Senator tell us whether that estimate of eighteen billions included anything for wheat?

Mr. SMOOT. Nothing whatever.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Did it include $700,000,000 for the Navy?

Mr. SMOOT. It included about $2,000,000,000 for the Navy, the regular appropriation asked for, but not the $700,000,000 referred to by the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask if it included the expense of 500,000 troops in the German occupied territory?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate was given that the whole Army of the United States by the 1st day of July would not be more than 500,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And did he estimate how much that would cost?

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate was made, Mr. President, of what that would cost, and I will say to the Senator that it was arrived at in this way: There was an estimate made of $19,636,000,000 for the War Department for the year ending June 30, 1920, and that was based upon an Army of 5,000,000 of men—soldiers and officers—and after the armistice was signed the estimate was revised by simply taking one-tenth of the 5,000,000 men and officers, amounting to 500,000, and cutting the appropriation of $19,636,000,000 down to one-tenth of the amount, or $1,936,000,000. That is how the estimate was arrived at.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not like to unduly interrupt the remarks of the Senator from Utah, but the Senator will remember that the War Department has sent to the Congress a bill which provides that the President shall have authority to recruit the Regular Army by volunteering up to 500,000 men; and it is stated that those 500,000 men are to carry out the responsibilities of the United States immediately following this war in order to permit the return of the troops from Europe, except those who may volunteer to remain, and to send over to Europe those who may volunteer in this country to stay in the Army for another year.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. And it seems to be generally understood that those 500,000 men, with some exceptions, are to constitute our share of the force which is to occupy some of the German territory until the terms of peace are finally not only agreed upon but carried out. Now, it costs, I am informed, $2,000 a year to keep one American soldier in France or Germany; and if we are to have an Army of 500,000, the cost will be $1,000,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the Secretary of War, when he appeared before the Committee on Finance, had no idea that there would be 500,000 American soldiers in Europe by July 1. His statement was that they were to be relieved and sent back home just as quickly as it was possible to do so, and he had no doubt that there would be less than 500,000 men in Europe on July 1, 1919.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That may very well be. I am not saying that the whole 500,000 will be kept in Europe. Many must be at the Panama Canal; some will be in Hawaii; some will be in the Philippines; some will be in our garrisons here and maintraining, for some time to come at least, these immense installations that have been built in the United States.

Mr. SMOOT. The estimate that was made for one billion nine hundred and some-odd million dollars was the expenses of the War Department on a basis of 500,000 men.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I venture the assertion that an Army of 500,000 men can not be supported here or in France for that sum for one year.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I believe that I am naturally an optimist. I am inclined to look through spectacles that are fairly high colored. I believe this country has a wonderful future before it. I do not believe anything can stop or long delay or hinder its great growth. But I want to say, in all candor, that looking facts and figures squarely in the face, I have at least a little fear of serious financial disturbances. I say this because I can not see why we are not making appropriations so enormously large that we may find it difficult to borrow all the money we shall require without disturbing the finances of the country.

I do not think I have a right to act from a selfish standpoint regarding this matter. The fact has been brought to my attention that Vermont is being urged to support this proposition, because under this bill it is said that we are going to get from the Federal Treasury three times as much as we pay out. If I were purely selfish touching this appropriation, I could perhaps reach the conclusion that Vermont should vote for this appropriation, but having in view the general good and what I believe to be the serious condition of our national finances, I see no other way but to cut our coat according to our very small pattern of cloth until we can see a change in our country's present very unsatisfactory financial situation.

I do not want to protest against any proper expenditure for good roads. I think there is nothing that contributes more to the welfare of this country. I am for good roads; and I want to praise the Lord because my own little State of Vermont pays all its bills for highways as it goes along. We have not a dollar of bonded indebtedness for highways, and I hope we never will have. When it comes to a point where I doubt whether I am going to have enough money to pay my honest debts I want to make prudence my guiding star. I want to delay the voting of these immense expenditures until we see where we are coming out. A few months will tell the story. Probably three or four months will determine as to our ability to float, satisfactorily, the next liberty loan. With this loan out of the way we may feel more liberal.

I do not like to oppose the idea of the Senator from Iowa, and if we need funds to keep our boys at work we must find some way—I do not quite know how—to take care of them. I think it must be upon some basis which does not compel an expenditure of four or five dollars for expensive and perhaps extravagant material in order to utilize $1 of labor. We ought to find some way to be just without extravagance.

I hope the amendment will not be adopted at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, very many times I am not disposed to follow the recommendations of the heads of departments, but there are some recommendations made in the letter of the Postmaster General transmitting to the committee the result of his examination which are of some value. They were referred to by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] a few days ago. I wish to put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the recommendation from the Postmaster General as follows:

> Recently, being desirous of ascertaining the result of this experiment, the Postmaster General gave directions to the chief inspector that he make a selection of one of our ablest postal experts, with directions to him to associate with himself a sufficient number of assistants to make a thorough investigation of these motor-truck routes. Mr. Robert H. Barclay, inspector in charge at Cincinnati, Ohio, was selected by the chief inspector to conduct the investigation, and the following instructions were given him—

Which I will omit.

Pursuant to that the report was made by these post-office inspectors, and the recommendation referred to by the Senator from New York that the appropriation of $300,000 be reduced to $70,000 was made. This, in the discretion of the committee, was not followed. The bill ought not to appropriate $300,000. This instance is one of the cases where I think the recommendation of the head of the department carries some weight.

The appropriation of $200,000,000 at this time can not be justified, Mr. President. I have said a good many times that I would vote for a reasonable appropriation by the Government in aid of State enterprises. All of those ideas of mine were made during peace periods. Many of us have revised our opinions in view of war conditions, and I find myself in common with others compelled to do so. If it were ordinary peace times, when our expenditures were within the old-time limit, or what will be, I hope, the peace limit in a few years, I could very cheerfully support the appropriation of $200,000,000 as distributed here.

My own State of Illinois has voted $60,000,000, to be paid by the taxpayers of that State by direct taxation, outside of what is collected from the automobile and vehicle fund, for the development of a good-roads system. We would be entitled to our share for the three years named of this $200,000,000 for the construction of highways inside the limits of that State. In view of present war conditions, the great burdens that we carry, the immense obligations that are upon the Treasury, we must, in order to reduce taxation to a reasonable limit, begin the curtailment at some place.

I shall not support a public buildings bill in any form outside of the immediate necessities of this year. For a large part of the time the public buildings bill has grown in its appropriations to be a twin sister, I may say, of the river and harbor bill. The river and harbor bill this year ought to be defeated. There are very few meritorious items in either the river and harbor bill or the public buildings bill. We have stately piles of brick and stone scattered all over the country, at cross-roads villages of 500 to 1,000 population, with janitors and attendants and a subforce. No doubt as soon as there is an electric light and power house in any such place there will be installed a janitor or two, with an elevator man and a full set of attendants.

We have got to make economies at some place; we must begin with some appropriation bill, and I am prepared to begin with the public-roads fund, although I know that the States of the several Senators here would receive a proportional part. I must take the chance of explaining to those who are concerned why I do so. I am willing to provide that my own State shall expend the $60,000,000 they have voted to expend, raising that in direct taxation through a series of years. By direct taxation and by bond issues it will all be provided. We can stand that and start the system of public highway improvement. It will give employment. But I am not ready at this time, with the burdens on the Public Treasury, to vote $200,000,000 in the three appropriations named, scattered through the years for the same purpose. I think this ought to be postponed to some more opportune time.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has spoken about the burdens that we must meet. The first thing that we have got to do is to pay our debts, and pay day is coming. When the pay day comes and we have not the money, unless we raise additional sums by taxation, we have to that extent discouraged private industry that must have assistance if we are to have any relief from the conditions that will prevail in going from a high war level down to a peace level. We must get ready for it now, and I think it is a good time to begin a curtailment of the expenses and the appropriations that are named in these items. When the river and harbor bill and the public buildings bill come, with other department bills, they ought to be cut to the lowest possible limit in line with this curtailment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that the vote about to be taken is on section 5.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As amended.

Mr. LODGE. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Kenyon	Nugent	Sutherland
Beckham	King	Page	Swanson
Calder	La Follette	Poindexter	Thomas
Curtis	Lenroot	Pollock	Townsend
Fletcher	Lewis	Pomerene	Trammell
France	Lodge	Sheppard	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	McKellar	Sherman	Wadsworth
Gay	McNary	Simmons	Warren
Henderson	Martin, Va.	Smith, S. C.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Smoot
Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer

Mr. KING. I wish to announce that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT] are detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is no quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KIRBY and Mr. SHAFROTH answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is perfectly evident that it would be difficult to secure a quorum to-night, and I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. POMERENE. I shall object to taking a recess. There is morning business that I think should be attended to, and there is not a quorum here, so that a recess can not be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Nothing is in order except a motion to direct the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators or a motion to adjourn.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I move that the Senate adjourn until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of a quorum, only an adjournment to the usual hour of meeting can be taken, the Chair will state to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 5, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 4, 1919.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and most merciful God, our Heavenly Father, look down with compassion upon us, forgive our shortcomings, our weaknesses, our sins, and impart unto us wisdom, strength, grace, that whatsoever we do, here, now, and always, may be in consonance with the eternal fitness of things; and Thine be the praise, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATIONS.

On motion of Mr. DENT, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was presiding over this Committee of the Whole yesterday, but he seems to be absent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] will take the chair until the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] comes in.

Mr. GARD took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, before the Clerk reads I would like to offer an amendment to the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to returning to the preceding paragraph for the purpose of offering an amendment?

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the language of the last proviso stricken out on a point of order, down to the word "direct," in line 16, with an addition which I will ask the Clerk to report.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 34, line 10, insert the following:

"And provided, That hereafter, when any machinery, apparatus, implements, supplies, or materials which have been heretofore or may hereafter be purchased or acquired from appropriations made for the support of the United States Military Academy are no longer needed or are no longer serviceable, they may be sold in such manner as the superintendent may direct, and that the proceeds shall be turned into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. DENT. I have no objection to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have two amendments to correct the text of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 32, line 25, after the word "uses," strike out the colon, insert a semicolon, and add the following: "that the Secretary of War is hereby directed to transfer without charge one 10-ton, 3-wheel road roller to the quartermaster of the United States Military Academy."

Mr. MANN. This is a new paragraph, I take it?

Mr. DENT. This is a new paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Before that amendment is presented I move to strike out the last word of the preceding paragraph, for the purpose of asking whether we have corrected the reference to House bill numbered 11185.

Mr. DENT. That is at the bottom of page 33. The amendment now offered is at the bottom of page 32.

Mr. MANN. Very well. That is an amendment to this pending paragraph?

Mr. DENT. Yes; and then I have another amendment to correct the language at the bottom of page 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, which has been read by the Clerk.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DENT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer the other amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A further amendment is offered by the gentleman from Alabama, chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DENT: Page 33, line 25, after the word "in," strike out "House bill No. 11185" and insert in lieu thereof "the act for the support of the Military Academy approved June 27, 1918."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, since this item was under consideration yesterday I have taken occasion to inquire whether the appropriations as carried in last year's bill for these respective amounts for construction have lapsed. I am informed—and it confirms the position taken by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]—that when we appropriate money for public buildings the amount appropriated remains available until it is expended. The covering-in act of 1874 does not apply to public buildings, lighthouses, river and harbor improvements, pay of naval officers and the Marine Corps, and one other class, which I fail to recall at this moment. There is no question whatsoever that the authorization of last year is available and will continue available until Congress rescinds it.

Mr. DENT. If that is true there is no necessity to carry it in this bill, but I would like to make some further investigation. It can not possibly do any harm.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is mere surplusage.

Mr. DENT. If that is the law it can not do any harm to repeat it in this bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I think this appropriation stands in somewhat different relationship to the rule than the ordinary public building bill, because under the proviso on page 34, line 2, it is—

Provided, That for the purpose of accounting only, all funds hereinbefore appropriated under the titles "Current and ordinary expenses," "Miscellaneous items and incidental expenses," and "buildings and grounds" shall be disbursed and accounted for by the disbursing officer, United States Military Academy, as "Maintenance, United States Military Academy," and for the purpose shall constitute one fund.

Now, I rather think that there is a different condition with respect to the buildings at West Point, because that fund is added to by these other items, and they all constitute one fund.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the proviso which the gentleman has just read relates to a change in the method of accounting. It has no reference to the validity of authorization for construction purposes carried in the last Military Academy appropriation act. There is no question but that the covering-in act which specifically excepted public buildings, river and harbor improvement, pay for the Navy and Marine Corps, and lighthouses, does not apply to the building project as authorized in the last year's bill.

Mr. DENT. "Grading and granolithic pavement"—that is not a part of the building program.

Mr. STAFFORD. Well, this is merely surplusage; and, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HULL of Iowa: Page 34, line 19, after the word "derived" add as a new paragraph:

"To provide the necessary buildings and other improvements to accommodate and care for the increased corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy, as provided by the act of Congress approved May 4, 1916, and in general accordance with the plans submitted by the board of officers convened under authority of act of Congress, making appropriations for the support of the United States Military Academy, approved August 11, 1916, $3,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended, $3,000,000."

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve a point of order.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, we might as well discuss the point of order now. If it is good, there is no use in discussing the merits of the proposition. As I look at it, this is in order. Congress amended a law or enacted a law, which was approved June 3, 1916, practically doubling the number of cadets that were sent to West Point. That is in the act known as the national-defense act. On August 11, 1916, you approved of an act which authorized the Secretary of War, or directed him, to appoint three officers of the Army whose duty it shall be to investigate and make report to Congress on the first Monday of December, 1916, of what is necessary to be done in the way of buildings and other improvements to accommodate and care for the increased corps of cadets as provided by the act of May 4, 1916, together with the probable cost thereof.

That report came back to Congress and was approved of by Congress. For two years you have been making appropriations on that continuous program. I am very much surprised that the question whether it is in order should be raised at this time.

Mr. DENT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will.

Mr. DENT. The gentleman does not mean to say that the report of the Army officers has been approved of by Congress?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It certainly has; it came back to Congress.

Mr. DENT. Does the gentleman say it has been approved by Congress? I think the gentleman is mistaken in his facts. There never has been any action taken by Congress.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Do not you approve it when you make appropriations in line of that report?

Mr. DENT. We did not make any appropriations in line with the report.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. In the act of June 27, 1918, you appropriate for Quartermaster Corps $10,000 for a garage. That is in their report. There are a lot of other items for enlarging the Military Academy to accommodate the authorized number of cadets; constructing cadet buildings at headquarters to be located south of the area of the south barracks, $500,000. It is under construction now up there. It is a part of the program. We will demonstrate that clearly when we get to the merits of the case.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new construction and has never been provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. DENT. That this is new construction and has never been provided for by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to allow any corporation, company, or individual to erect on the United States Military Academy reservation at West Point, N. Y., a hotel, in accordance with plans and specifications to be approved by the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy and to enjoy the revenue therefrom for a period of 50 years, after which time said hotel shall become the property of the United States; that said hotel shall be conducted under such regulations, including the rates and the charges for accommodations thereat, as may be promulgated by the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy under the direction of the Secretary of War: Provided, That in view of the long and distinguished service of Col. S. E. Tillman, he having had 46 years' service before retirement, 31 of which were as head of an important department of instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., besides other unusual distinguished service, and having been recalled to active service in June, 1917, at the age of 69, to take charge of the Military Academy at West Point, N. Y., where he is still serving, the President is hereby authorized to place that officer on the retired list of the Army as a brigadier general, with the pay and emoluments of a retired officer of that grade, and to grant him a commission in accordance with such advanced rank.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. KAHN. Will not the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the gentleman from Wisconsin will not insist on his point of order so far as the hotel provision is concerned, at least. The hotel at West Point was built, I believe, in 1818. It is now a disgrace to the Government of the United States. Very few improvements have been made there during all the years that it has been on the grounds. When the parents of the young men who are at the Point for instruction visit their sons they are compelled to stay at this old ramshackle building. There is a party or corporation, I understand, that is willing to put up a new modern hotel building on the grounds without a dollar's cost to the Government. They will have the privilege from the Government of conducting the hotel under such regulations as the War Department will establish, and at the end of 50 years it will become the property outright of our Government.

To me it seems almost intolerable to continue that old building on the grounds. Even the Board of Visitors at West Point, the Members of the Senate and House who are compelled to go to West Point to inspect the institution, all recognize the fact that this present building ought to be torn down and a new hotel put up. If private capital is not to be allowed to do it, then the Government ought to do it. The hotel is in no sense modern or up to date. It has no heating conveniences except old coal grates. The charges are high enough, God knows, to have a splendid hotel, but under existing conditions I am sorry for the relatives of the young men who have to find accommodations there during the brief time they may be visiting their sons.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Does the gentleman know who has the placing of the location of this proposed hotel, and will it be placed where the present building is?

Mr. FIELDS. It was so stated.

Mr. KAHN. Right near there, and I think that is a good location for the hotel.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. The gentleman is familiar with the old hotel there at the present time, and that it is the scenic view spot of the academy. Would it not be better, in view of the fact that the academy is to be enlarged and more ground is desirable, that the hotel be placed in some other location?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, that is one of the problems that the engineers have had a great deal of difficulty with. West Point is situated upon the side of a mountain, and every acre of ground has to be made, except that low, level space which is used as a parade ground and on which the principal buildings are located. To make additional ground is a very hard matter and a very costly matter, and so I suppose that the present location is as good as any ground that can be secured.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. It is certainly desirable for a hotel location, being, as I said, in the view spot of the academy grounds; but the gentleman is cognizant of the fact that ground is at a premium there, and it would materially increase the capacity of the camping ground, the parade ground, if that could be occupied as a part of active military maneuvers, and the hotel put some place else.

Mr. KAHN. I presume in the final analysis the War Department in locating the hotel will take all of those facts into consideration and would select a desirable spot for the hotel.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Just one further observation. The bill is silent as to who shall locate this hotel. Would it not be wise to put in a provision there that it shall be located under the direction of the Secretary of War or some one else?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that is necessary. Of course, the Secretary of War or the Superintendent of the Academy would be authorized under the bill to negotiate for the construction of a hotel, and doubtless he would take into consideration the matter of its location also.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Who owns the present hotel?

Mr. KAHN. The United States Government.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it run and conducted by the Government?

Mr. KAHN. No; a lady conducts it. She is the lessee. She pays only a nominal rental, but I understand at that that she has a great deal of trouble in making both ends meet.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If this should go through and be incorporated in the act, it will not do any harm to anybody's property rights, will it?

Mr. KAHN. No; and it will very much enhance the conveniences at the academy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has again expired.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the hotel company pay the Government anything for the use of this land?

Mr. KAHN. No; they will put up an entirely new building and run it for 50 years, and then it will revert to the ownership of the Government.

Mr. LITTLE. What is to be the cost?

Mr. MORIN. The last plan submitted to the committee was $400,000.

Mr. DENT. Four hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. LITTLE. I notice the gentleman spoke of the visits to the students. What proportion of the students are visited by any of their kin in a year?

Mr. KAHN. There are a great many visitors during the term, and in addition to that, at graduation there are hundreds of visitors at the academy.

Mr. FIELDS. There are a great many visitors from foreign countries also.

Mr. MORIN. There are a great many of the kin of the cadets who come back after one visit.

Mr. LITTLE. Is it not a fact that 90 per cent of the boys never have any visits from their kin in all the time they are there?

Mr. MORIN. And in case of sickness they are visited.

Mr. LITTLE. I never heard of anybody from my country going there.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, this is subject to a point of order, but, like the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], I hope that the point of order will not be made as to the hotel proposition at least. This is a subject that the Military Committee annually has to wrestle with. There is no question but that the hotel at West Point now is a disgrace to the Government. That is the uniform testimony upon the subject, and we finally reached the conclusion that this is the only solution that can be made of the proposition. Of course, as a general rule I do not agree with the idea that private people should put up buildings on Government property, but there have been exceptions to it. We have made exceptions during the war. We have allowed the Young Men's Christian Association, the Knights of Columbus, and other organizations to erect buildings upon Government property. After many years of wrestling with a proposition of this kind, we have reached the conclusion that this is the only solution by which you can get a hotel at West Point.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. WELLING. If the hotel is built there it will not involve any additional expense to the Government?

Mr. DENT. Not a dollar in the world.

Mr. WELLING. Will it involve any additional expense to the patrons who now visit the hotel at West Point?

Mr. DENT. It will not, because a provision is carried that the Secretary of War, through the superintendent at the Academy, will have absolute control of the charges and prices to be made by the owners.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENT. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. And the very opposite from a business proposition or a commercial speculation is involved in this proposition. It is more in the shape of a memorial to the past cadets, erected by some of their families and friends, and, while it is to be a practical thing, yet it will be run with sentimental overcast, at least, that will take it altogether out of a money proposition or any speculation on the part of the people who propose it.

Mr. DENT. Absolutely so.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DENT. I will.

Mr. MANN. My attention is called to a letter, which is found in the hearings on page 98, addressed to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MORIN], in which there is proposed by Mr. Edward M. Flexner, apparently of Louisville, Ky., to present to the Government, if the Government will accept it, a hotel, to be called Pershing Hall. Now, would that be authorized under the terms of this language?

Mr. DENT. I think so.

Mr. FIELDS. I think we were told in the hearing that is the very purpose of this legislation.

Mr. MANN. I think that would be a very desirable thing to be done if somebody will construct a new hotel there—probably could not get a better name for it than Pershing Hall, although I do not think the name is so important—and present it to the Government. It seems to me that would be very desirable, although I do not think the language now in the bill would permit it.

Mr. DENT. I do not see why it would not.

Mr. MANN. The reason why it would not—and it can be easily corrected—is that under the language of the bill whoever builds this hotel will have to operate it for 50 years, and the Government would only accept it at the end of the 50 years. It would be very easy, if the language remained in the bill, to add a provision to it at the end providing that the Government might accept title to the hotel at any time.

Mr. DENT. I am sure nobody would object to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am sure nobody would object to that amendment if the rest remained in. If that is the only purpose, of course that ought to be covered.

Mr. DENT. I think so.

Mr. MANN. If we can get a fine hotel there presented to the Government in place of the present hotel—about which personally I know nothing; I have never been there, except as Members tell me—it would be a very desirable thing, it seems to me.

Mr. DENT. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman. I withdraw the point of order so far as it relates to the hotel proposition, but I shall make the point of order on the proviso beginning line 7, page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the point of order so far as the proposed erection and maintenance of a hotel are concerned, and makes the point of order as to the proviso beginning line 7, page 35, to line 19, inclusive.

Mr. DENT. Of course, it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that request or the amendment until the gentleman from Illinois can again offer his amendment to perfect the language of the hotel provision.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding, after the word "States," in line 2, page 35, the following: "Provided, That the title and ownership of said hotel may be accepted by the Secretary of War on behalf of the United States at any time."

Mr. DENT. I accept that.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman kindly prepare his amendment.

Mr. MANN. It is not long; the Clerk, I think, has got it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 35, line 2, after the word "States," insert:

"Provided, That the title and ownership of said hotel may be accepted by the Secretary of War on behalf of the United States at any time."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I merely want to get a little more information here from the chairman of the committee or the ranking minority member. I notice this clause here says that they are authorized to erect the hotel and enjoy the revenues therefrom. Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some provision that the hotel should be maintained and operated? Now, a man might erect a very flimsy structure, even if he followed the plans of somebody else, and if it did not do well he might let it run down so that at the end of the 50-year period it would be so dilapidated it will not have any value.

Mr. DENT. I call the gentleman's attention to this paragraph, which reads as follows:

That said hotel shall be conducted under such regulations, including the rates and the charges for accommodation thereat, as may be promulgated by the Superintendent of the United States Military Academy under the direction of the Secretary of War.

I think that gives absolute authority.

Mr. LITTLE. Perhaps it does, but it seems to me if the bill simply stated that he should not only erect but maintain and operate it we would have him tied up so that there would not be any room for any other construction. I just offer the suggestion.

Mr. DENT. I think that clause takes care of it. Mr. Chairman, in view——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas withdraw his pro forma amendment?

Mr. LITTLE. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. DILLON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Would his amendment permit the Secretary of War to accept this building project before it was completed?

Mr. MANN. Well, it might.

Mr. DILLON. Suppose irresponsible parties were in control of the project and might throw it up, could the Secretary go in and accept it and compel the Government to go on and complete that expensive building?

Mr. MANN. It would not compel the Government to complete it. However, I apprehend the gentleman will not make any mistake about that, that if somebody starts to build a $400,000 building and spends $200,000 and breaks up and if there was no safe bond requiring the completion of the hotel it would not stand there that way forever and maybe the Government would have to complete it.

Mr. DILLON. It is pretty easy to unload on the Government——

Mr. MANN. I assume the Secretary would require a proper bond.

Mr. DILLON. It is pretty easy to obtain the consent of the Secretary of War in these immense enterprises and cast the burden upon the Government. I only am directing my thought to the point as to whether it is wise to put in this amendment.

Mr. MANN. It certainly would be better that the Secretary of War should have the right to take the ownership of an uncompleted hotel than to leave it there while belonging to somebody else. I do not think there are any two sides to that.

Mr. DENT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and ask him a question, if it would not be better for his amendment to come in after the word "war" on line 6 of page 35?

Mr. MANN. I thought of that, but it comes in where the title is referred to.

Mr. DENT. Then the subsequent paragraph ought to be an additional proviso.

Mr. MANN. It does not have to be. It has a period, and it commences with a new sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has finished the reading of the bill.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROSE, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days on account of important business.

THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, and pending that I would like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] as to what may be agreed upon for general debate.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, since a conversation with the gentleman from Tennessee concerning the length of general debate, I will say that I have requests here that will cover six hours, and gentlemen are asking now, as the chairman will see, for more time. While I desire to hasten the consideration of the bill as much as possible, if agreeable to the gentleman I suggest to him we allow the general debate to go along without fixing any limit upon it now. We can consult later in regard to limiting the time.

Mr. PADGETT. In view of the statement that the gentleman has requests for six hours of time, I think we had best postpone agreeing to time for debate for the present.

Mr. MANN. The demands are sure to increase.

Mr. BUTLER. A gentleman just now asked me for time that certainly will cover 40 or 50 minutes additional. We can not fix the time now. I have no other remedy to suggest than that we may go ahead with the discussion of this bill, and perhaps this evening or to-morrow morning we can agree on a limit of time for general debate. I am very much inclined to give gentlemen an opportunity to speak on this bill.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, just for the present, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, and will ask that I may control one half of the time and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] the other half; and we will not fix a limit for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks that he control half of the time and the gentleman from Pennsylvania the other half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to attempt to make a set speech or to engage at this time in a lengthy discussion. I submitted, on behalf of the committee, a report explaining at length and in much detail the various provisions of the bill. And I shall be content at this time to call attention in a general way to the provisions contained in it and then to answer as best I can such questions explanatory of the bill as may be submitted.

The estimates submitted through the Treasury Department, which were made out while hostilities were going on and before the termination of the war, and submitted upon a war basis, aggregated $2,644,307,046.05. The committee conducted very extensive and particular hearings, having before it the chiefs of the various bureaus of the Navy Department having cognizance of the appropriations and expenditures. The bureau chiefs reduced the appropriations as originally submitted through the Treasury Department very largely, and the estimates as submitted by the bureau chiefs in their hearings amounted to $1,414,064,090.15.

While the hearings were progressing the committee furnished to the Secretary of the Navy, as each hearing was had, copies of the stenographic report of the hearings, so that he could keep advised as they progressed and be the better prepared when he came before the committee to submit his recommendations upon a review of the entire situation.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Can the chairman give to the House in the course of the day the number of men we have in the training camps, the training schools, the Naval Reserves, and those who are enlisted in the Regular Navy? Would that be possible?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; it is set out in the hearings, and I will call attention to the personnel as I go along.

Mr. LITTLE. I think the House would appreciate it if it is not too much trouble.

Mr. PADGETT. I shall be glad to do it.

The estimates, as revised by the Secretary, aggregate $975,903,621.28. Upon consideration of all the hearings, taking up item after item, the committee made large reductions, and the aggregate reported by the committee is $746,457,440.33, making a reduction by the committee of the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy upon his revised estimates of $229,446,180.95.

The total appropriations for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1919 aggregated $1,685,379,553.82. The amount recommended for the fiscal year 1920, for which this bill is providing, reduces the amount appropriated for the current fiscal year by $938,922,113.49.

I wish to state that it was the policy and the purpose of the committee to reduce and to make appropriations for the lowest amount compatible with an efficient administration of the naval service. If the committee made any mistake, it was, in my judgment, in making severe reductions of estimates. However, the committee in going over these estimates reduced them, as I have stated, very largely and very substantially, making a reduction of $1,998,000,000 under the original estimates submitted through the Treasury Department, and $938,000,000 under the appropriations for the current year, and $229,000,000 under the revised estimate of the Secretary of the Navy.

The committee pursued a policy also which I think it is necessary and proper that I should call to the attention of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. On shore stations we reduced the appropriations to the very minimum, allowing only for those items which we felt were absolutely necessary to the operations of the stations during the fiscal year. The committe declined to report any purchase of land, any new projects or extensive enlargements, feeling that the appropriations that had been made during the current year and the preceding fiscal year were so large that the shore stations could well afford to wait until conditions were adjusted more to a peace basis and the Congress could see what the exact status was, and what were the precise and urgent needs.

The estimates for the personnel are based upon an aggregate of enlisted personnel for the Navy of 225,000. Of that number under existing law 131,485 is the established permanent personnel, and in addition 6,000 apprentice seamen, 350 for the Flying Corps and 5,720, as I remember, for the Hospital Corps, making in round numbers 143,000 in the permanent Naval Establishment. The difference of 82,000 was regarded by the committee as being necessary for the operation of the Army transport troop ships and the ships furnished by the Shipping Board and operated by the Navy. A number of German ships, 20, as I understand, were recently turned over to this Government for commercial purposes, to be manned and operated by the Navy. We inserted, however, a provision that as the number used in transport and Shipping Board service is reduced below the 82,000, that number shall be discharged from the service and the enlisted personnel to the extent of that difference reduced, so that as the requirements for the operation of the troop service and the Shipping Board ships reduces automatically, the number of men in the Navy will be reduced out of this temporary increase that is provided.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asked a moment ago about the personnel. As I remember, on the 11th day of November, the day when the armistice was signed, the total number of enlisted personnel in the Navy was 497,030, so that it will appear that in the provisions made in this bill it is reduced more than half.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FOSS. I wanted to ask whether or not this personnel of 225,000 will provide sufficient men for all the ships that will be in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, sir, that is a matter that is very much disputed. Officers in the Bureau of Navigation insist that it will not afford a sufficient number to give the complements on the ships which they insist there should be. But the committee considered all of the surroundings and circumstances and the fact that we would be in peace time, feeling that the complements upon the ships should not be so large as they were during war time. We feel that the 225,000 will take care of the real needs of the personnel. But I will say to gentlemen that a number of officers strongly controvert that position.

Mr. FOSS. What does the Navy Department propose to keep in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. In the hearing of the Secretary of the Navy he sets it out. He proposes to keep in full commission all of the ships from the beginning of the dreadnaught class. That would be the Michigan and the South Carolina and all the ships subsequent to those. I believe they embrace 16 such ships at the present time. Another one is about being put in commission—the Idaho—and two others during the fiscal year, making 19 of that type. Then there will be others that will be kept in a reserve commission. Then he proposes to keep a considerable number of destroyers in commission.

Mr. FOSS. We have a large number of those, have we not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; 342, as I remember, will be the number of destroyers, but all of those will not be kept in full commission.

Mr. FOSS. And of the submarines we have a large number, have we not.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but not all of those will be kept in full commission.

Mr. FOSS. And we have a large number of submarine chasers. Is it proposed to keep them in commission?

Mr. PADGETT. Not all of them. They are proposing, as I understand, to sell some of those, and those chasers and Eagle boats are to take the place of the gunboats in the service in shallow waters and in the river service and in the Orient and in South and Central America. And I will state that there were ordered about 112 of the Eagle boats. The Secretary canceled the contracts down to 60.

Mr. FOSS. How many of these Eagle boats have already gone into commission? Those are the Ford boats?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I believe it was either five or seven. I believe it was five that were put up.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman feel, taking into consideration all of these vessels that he has referred to, that he has made ample provision for manning them in recommending 225,000 men?

Mr. PADGETT. Instead of using the word "ample" I will use the word "economical." We have made economical provision for them.

Mr. FOSS. Although at the present time the Navy has over 400,000 men, the gentleman says.

Mr. PADGETT. Four hundred and ninety-seven thousand on the 11th of November, but a large number of those have been discharged.

Mr. IGOE. How many have been discharged?

Mr. PADGETT. The number varies from day to day, but I think more than 100,000 have been discharged.

Mr. BUTLER. The Secretary of the Navy has ordered the discharge of more than 40 per cent.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; but they have not all been discharged.

Mr. BUTLER. The order is out to discharge more than 40 per cent—nearly 50 per cent, according to my recollection.

Mr. IGOE. That was 40 per cent of the reserve, was it not?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. Will the chairman of the committee explain that?

Mr. PADGETT. The reserves are not discharged. They are placed upon inactive duty, which is the same as a discharge. To grant a discharge to the reserve would be to disintegrate and destroy the reserve. The reserve is essentially a peace organization. It is an organization composed of men distributed through civil life, engaged in civilian occupations in time of peace, but to whom the department have a string, so that they can call these men into the service in time of war or in time of national emergency proclaimed by the President under authority of law. Now, if you were to discharge those men, you would disrupt and disintegrate the reserve force. When they were called into active service during the war they received the same pay as the regular Navy and became a part of it. But when the war is over, when the President puts them back, they go back to their peace basis, like they were before the war. They are enrolled, and they receive the pay of $12 a year, called their retainer pay. Then they are required to drill two months out of three years in order to keep in touch and in practice on a ship; so that the Navy has this reserve that is available, that it can call without having the expense of maintaining so large a force in active service when they are not needed.

Mr. HARDY. Is that $12 a year all that the men in the Naval Reserve receive?

Mr. PADGETT. That is all they receive, except that they get full pay during the two months that they are in active service in time of peace. In time of war they get the same pay as other men of their ratings in the Regular Navy.

Mr. HARDY. They are paid for the drilling time?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. They get the pay of their regular rating.

Mr. McKENZIE. While we are on the question of personnel, I want to ask the chairman of the committee one question.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course, we understand that this appropriation is a peace-time appropriation. That is, it will take care of the Navy from July next until July, 1920.

Mr. PADGETT. That is what it is purposed to do.

Mr. McKENZIE. If I understood the chairman of the committee, in discussing the question of personnel, he said that a certain number of the men in this personnel would be used to man the transports, including those taken over from the German Government. What I desire to ask the chairman of this committee is in regard to the policy of the Navy. Is it to be the policy of the Navy to enlist young men into the naval forces of our country and then use them to man merchant and commercial ships in time of peace?

Mr. PADGETT. Those ships were turned over to the Navy. The Navy did not ask for them, when they were turned over to them, but the Navy were commanded to operate them, and they put on the official and the enlisted personnel to operate them, and they have done so during the war. I got a letter, transmitted to me by the Secretary of the Navy from the Shipping Board, stating that they did not intend hereafter to turn over any other ships than the ones that they have, but it comes in an indirect way. The Shipping Board turned them over to the Army, and the Army turned them over to the Navy, and called upon the Navy to come to the rescue of the Army and operate these ships to bring back the men from overseas. Now, the Navy have taken the position, "We have not asked for these ships, but we accept any duty that is placed upon us by authority."

Mr. McKENZIE. Then, as far as the gentleman knows, there is no purpose behind this, and there is no fixed policy to enlist men into the Navy to be utilized in running commercial ships in time of peace.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. McKENZIE. Of course, we all agree that at this time it is necessary to bring the boys back.

Mr. PADGETT. We are in only a quasi peace condition now.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understand that.

Mr. PADGETT. And during the coming year it will be necessary for the Navy to operate a large number of ships for the Army. That will extend through this coming fiscal year, in order to bring back the men who are over there, and the army of occupation, and to bring back the millions of tons of supplies and equipment and all that which we have over there.

Mr. McKENZIE. The chairman of the committee will understand that I am finding no fault, nor am I objecting to that policy in war time or while we are returning our troops and matériel from abroad; but I think it would be bad policy in time of peace.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand that, and as I understand it is not the policy of the Navy Department to take over these ships and operate them for commercial purposes; but the Secretary of the Navy has stated repeatedly to the committee that the question of policy as to that was one to be determined by the Congress, and that he awaited whatever direction Congress should give him.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say further to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. McKENZIE] that this bill carries a provision that when these men now needed for this temporary duty are no longer needed for this temporary duty they are to be mustered out of the service, or an equal number of men mustered out, so it is not the intention to carry it beyond the temporary need for bringing back the men, or supplying the men over there with food and other materials.

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated that fully.

Mr. McKENZIE. I read that in the report, and it was one of the things that suggested the question to my mind as to what was going to be the policy of the department.

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary of the Navy has stated to the committee a number of times, as I said to the gentleman a moment ago, that the Congress must determine the policy as to operating the Shipping Board ships. And I want to say to the gentleman that I think Congress will have a big problem on its hands to determine that policy.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman tell me how many men there are at the Great Lakes Naval Station at the present time?

Mr. PADGETT. About 25,000.

Mr. SNELL. What is going to be done with these young men?

Mr. PADGETT. They are discharging them as rapidly as they can; but let me call the gentleman's attention to the difference between the situation in the Navy and that in the Army with reference to discharging the men. The Army has nothing except its personnel. It has no ships, it has no boats, or anything of that kind. They can discharge a whole unit, a regiment, and that is what they do. We can not discharge a whole complement of the ship and leave it stripped and bare. It takes a certain number of men to operate the ships.

Mr. SNELL. But these men of the Great Lakes are not connected with any special department.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but they are men sent there, being trained.

Mr. SNELL. They are not attached to any ship.

Mr. PADGETT. No; but, as I say, they are being discharged as rapidly as they can.

Mr. SNELL. How rapidly is that?

Mr. PADGETT. I have it in my mind that there has been something over 100,000 discharged since the armistice was signed.

Mr. SNELL. From the Great Lakes station?

Mr. PADGETT. No; the whole number discharged. New men enlist in the Navy and are sent to these training camps, and the men in the training camp that enlisted for four years and their time is expiring are discharged.

Mr. SNELL. Are they taking on new enlistments?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. And sent to the Great Lakes?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; to the Great Lakes and to Newport and to Hampton Roads.

Mr. SNELL. I am interested in getting some young men out of there who are anxious to get home. I received a lengthy communication from the commandant, and when I read it through it concluded with the statement that he would think it over and let me know.

Mr. PADGETT. I got one of the very same kind from the commandant, stating that on account of the need of men—for instance, here is a man doing duty, and some one has to take his place.

Mr. SNELL. I wondered what his duties were and why it was necessary to keep so many young men there.

Mr. PADGETT. It is largely a training camp, composed of men being trained, and it is mixed up with men that are there who are to stay permanently. Some are temporary——

Mr. SNELL. The temporary ones are the ones I am interested in. Why is it necessary to keep them there?

Mr. PADGETT. It might be necessary to keep a man there to take the place of some man whose four-year enlistment is about to expire, and they want to discharge him. All these things can not be done in a day or in a week. I got a similar letter to the one the gentleman got.

Mr. IGOE. How does the gentleman handle that?

Mr. STAFFORD. These are circular letters with the name of the Member inserted.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it is a circular letter.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will examine closely, he will find his name inserted in a very nice way so that you would hardly detect that it was a circular letter.

Mr. PADGETT. I did not notice that it was.

Mr. SNELL. What portion of the men there now want to be discharged and what number are permanent?

Mr. PADGETT. I could not tell the gentleman; they are shifting every day. They are turning the temporaries out and are taking in others. They told me the other day that there had come in a thousand or twelve hundred men from all over the country within a day or two. These men are going into the training camps.

Mr. SNELL. I thought if there was a way to get these men out I would like to know it. If there is not, I am willing to take my turn with the rest.

Mr. HENSLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Take a case of this kind: One of these young men has a dependent wife and a father who is looking to the boy to help him. He is getting old. The boy is a tooter of a horn in the Navy. That is all the service he is rendering.

The man over him declares that he can not dispense with his services to the Government at this time. Would the gentleman regard that as being so important that the boy should remain in the service and not be discharged?

Mr. SNELL. That is practically the same thing that a young man wrote me, only he said he was not doing anything.

Mr. PADGETT. I should think that in the case mentioned by the gentleman from Missouri, the boy could be dispensed with, but I can not pass on all the details or the exigencies of the service at the particular time. I found this condition, gentlemen, and I think all of you will verify it. There is more anxiety now about the boys and we are getting more letters now than we did while the war was going on and while it was in active operation.

Mr. DOWELL. Is there not a good reason for that, when they know that there is no need of their being any longer in the service?

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman will wait a moment, that might apply with a broader significance to the Army than the Navy. We have got these men on the ships and we can not abandon the ships. We have got to hold the men on there until an organization is brought down to where they can be cared for. Every fellow thinks that he is an individual, but when you think that these individuals from all over the country are making the same claim, the same argument, and thousands and thousands of them are coming in, you will appreciate the situation. It was stated to the committee, I think, that 50 per cent of the entire personnel were insisting on getting out at once.

Mr. IGOE. What is the personnel? I think we all want to have the transports and ships commanded properly to bring the boys back, because we are all pleading for them to be returned. We have got to admit that the Navy must be manned to bring them back, but what is the total number of men which the Navy needs for their service at this time and what is the total number we have in the service?

Mr. PADGETT. As I stated a little while ago, on the 11th of November the Navy had 497,000 men. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation insists that he could not get along now with less than 350,000 men.

Mr. IGOE. What are these 350,000 needed for? Does that include troop ships, which the gentleman spoke of as having been taken over?

Mr. PADGETT. Troop ships, transports, and Navy ships, and all the ships we have in operation. There are something like 2,000 ships all told with the Navy to-day in operation. We can not abandon them all at once.

Mr. SNELL. My special inquiry is directed in respect to the men who have never been assigned to ships and never expect to be.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And never will be.

Mr. SNELL. And never will be. I appreciate the fact that the ones assigned to ships you have need for and that they must be retained in the service.

Mr. PADGETT. And the gentleman must remember that with 350,000 men needed for the ships, there is a large number of men who are sick, there is a large number of men whose term is expired by limitation, who have the right to go out, and you have got to have replacements. These replacements come from these schools, these training places, and the navigation officers must look forward to what are on the ships, what is required, what is coming off—men who are sick, men whose terms are expired, men who are debilitated. There must be a reserve in these schools for replacements.

Mr. SNELL. You would have that reserve among the young men who intend to remain permanently in the Navy, but as to these 40 or 50 per cent that are going to be discharged some time, who are never going to remain, who are not training themselves especially at this time, I can not understand why we can not get that complement out.

Mr. PADGETT. But the gentleman must remember that on the ships——

Mr. SNELL. But these are not on the ships; these are at the stations.

Mr. PADGETT. On the ships there are thousands of men who have reasons to get out that are more urgent than the young men who are in the schools.

Mr. SNELL. But the commandant says that they are going to let them go.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. When?

Mr. PADGETT. As soon as they can.

Mr. SNELL. That is the thing we would like to get definite information about. If we can not get it here in Congress from the Naval Committee, I do not know where we are going to get it.

Mr. PADGETT. They can not tell you; they are complaining to us. I talked to Capt. Taussig two days ago, and he told me they were letting them out so fast that they were right down to the danger point as to how they would get men to operate the ships.

Mr. SNELL. A lot of these young men at the present time are not doing anything.

Mr. PADGETT. They are in the training schools, and some of those men may be sent to the ships for a while until they can be replaced with permanent men.

Mr. SNELL. Are there not a lot of these young men at the present time who have stopped training since the armistice was signed?

Mr. PADGETT. No.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. PADGETT. I think the men in the schools are all being trained.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No.

Mr. SNELL. I have letters saying that they are not doing the work they did formerly.

Mr. PADGETT. I can not answer that.

Mr. SNELL. I would like to get that information.

Mr. PADGETT. My understanding is that they are still carrying on the training of these men in the schools.

Mr. SNELL. I had a letter from a young man at Pelham Bay the other day, and he said that he was absolutely doing nothing, and had not been doing anything for six or eight weeks. That is the general information that I get from many places. It seems to me that there might be some machinery manufactured somewhere, so as to get that sort of people out.

Mr. PADGETT. They are now turning them out by the thousands, and as to whether the gentleman's particular young man gets out——

Mr. SNELL. I am not interested in any particular young man, but all of these young men who are not doing anything at the present time at these naval stations.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it might help the gentleman from New York to know that after the 1st of July only 225,000 men can be kept in the Navy.

Mr. SNELL. Then we are sure of getting them out by the 1st of July?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Down to 225,000, and if your young man happened to be among the 225,000 who are needed——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman positive about that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. We do not appropriate any money beyond that, and I imagine that will govern.

Mr. SNOOK. When a young man is in the Navy or the Naval Reserve and wants to get out and files an application it is referred to his immediate commanding officer for recommendation. Is that right?

Mr. PADGETT. That is right.

Mr. SNOOK. In my experience I find that some of these commanding officers are very diligent and take up these applications and go over them and recommend that a certain percentage of the men on the boats who are under their command be discharged. Other commanding officers entirely ignore these applications and pay no attention to them whatever and discharge nobody. Ought not some way to be provided where a young man has a good case, like some of these cases that have been spoken of here, where his parents are dying, or where he has a family dependent upon him, in case the commanding officers ignore the applications, so that he could appeal to a board, where he could have the matter retried?

Mr. PADGETT. I have understood that the Secretary has given orders that in all cases where they had declined to grant the application, the papers, with the applications, should be forwarded to the department here for consideration and review. Where they were granted, that is the end of it and there was no necessity for forwarding them.

Mr. SNOOK. Yes, but I have had considerable experience with the department here. When you take up a case with the department here in Washington they say they do not have anything to do with it, it is the commanding officer that must pass upon the application. They will say that they will recommend him to discharge the boy if he thinks it is consistent with the service, or this, that, or the other.

I know of cases where the commanding officer entirely ignored all applications, and it seems to me, both in the Army and the Navy, there ought to be some kind of a court or some kind of a board to which a boy who has a meritorious case can appeal from the decision of the commanding officer and have it pass on his application.

Mr. PADGETT. He could address his communication to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, who is superior to this officer, and call attention to it.

Mr. SNOOK. I have had occasion to talk to the gentleman to whom the gentleman refers, Capt. Taussig, a very fine man, and he gives a great deal of information; but after all, when you talk to the Bureau of Navigation about it, they say it is up to the commnding officer; and if the boy has a meritorious case and his commanding officer refuses to pass on it, there seems to be no way to get around it at all, and there ought to be some board to which the boy could present his case.

Mr. STEENERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. STEENERSON. I have been much instructed by the discussion in regard to the release of men from the Navy. I would like to know if the same rule governs the men from the Marine Corps?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Now, there is this about the Marine Corps: That part of the Marine Corps that is in France, about 25,000 all told, are under the control of the Army and Gen. Pershing. The moment they land in France they become a part of the Army. They are not under the control of the Navy, and they would only come back to the Navy when Gen. Pershing sends them back as a part of his army, or if they should be withdrawn by order of the President. The Marine Corps that are not in France, who are here in the United States, or in South or Central America, or Asia, or wherever the marines are operating, why they are under the jurisdiction of the Navy, and I understand the same rule applies to them.

Mr. STEENERSON. The applications which have come to me lately from my district are young men who enlisted at the outbreak of the war in the Marine Corps and are now in France—some at Brest, some at Bordeaux——

Mr. PADGETT. Those who are in France, they are not discharged, but they would be sent home through Gen. Pershing, and through the military channels.

Mr. STEENERSON. In what way do they proceed if they want a discharge?

Mr. PADGETT. I had had some cases of that kind, and they instructed me that they should address a communication to Gen. Pershing and forward it through military channels, stating fully all the reasons why they are asking to be sent home, and it will be passed upon by Gen. Pershing under military authority.

Mr. STEENERSON. That would be sent through their immediate commanders?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; and Gen. Pershing. That is what I have been informed.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is, they are not discharged, but——

Mr. PADGETT. They would be sent home, and when they came back home they become part of the Navy and under the jurisdiction of the Navy then, and their discharge would be acted upon here by the Secretary of the Navy or the commandant of the Marine Corps.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I will.

Mr. HARDY. I think I understand the idea and policy under which the head of the Navy Department leaves necessarily to the commandant in charge in the immediate locality, or a ship, the ultimate decision as to whether or not he will discharge or grant a discharge upon application——

Mr. PADGETT. Not the ultimate one.

Mr. HARDY. Just one minute, and I will come to that. That is, under ordinary circumstances, he being on the ground, knows the condition and is the better one to judge?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. But if I understand it right, if an applicant makes a justifiable application for discharge, and the commandant should simply ignore it or should refuse without just reason, there is an appeal to the head of the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. PADGETT. I understand so; that they are entitled to have it reviewed by the Bureau of Navigation.

Mr. HARDY. Now, it is the duty of the commandant to send the papers up whether he grants the discharge or refuses it?

Mr. PADGETT. No; I understand if he grants the discharge that is the end of it.

Mr. HARDY. He turns the party loose?

Mr. PADGETT. If he does not grant it, as I understand, he is directed to forward those refusals to the department for consideration here, and that is the reason for their action.

Mr. HARDY. I do not think it would often occur, but it may occur that some commandant utterly ignored that part of his duty and refused to present the matter, then what is the remedy?

Mr. PADGETT. In that case the only thing I can see is for the young man himself to write to the Chief of the Bureau of Navigation or the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HARDY. Then would he be disciplined for going over the head of his immediate superior?

Mr. PADGETT. I think not.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Probably so.

Mr. PADGETT. I think if he should state that he had made his application and that his application had not been considered I do not believe that he would receive any penalty or be punished.

Mr. HARDY. Does the gentleman think the head of the Navy Department should sit down on any attempt to discipline that young man?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think he would be disciplined, sir. I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman sits down I wish to call his attention to some figures set forth in the report. I notice the report states that the estimates for the support of the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1920, as set forth in the Book of Estimates, was $2,644,000,000. I suppose these estimates were submitted in reference to the continuation of the war?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. So they may not be regarded in this connection. I notice the amount subsequently recommended by the bureau chiefs was $1,400,000,000. That contemplated a peace-time program?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What is it that was eliminated from the bureau chiefs' estimate?

Mr. PADGETT. They made those estimates on the basis of 350,000 men, and the committee reduced the number of enlisted men to 225,000. That is one item, and there are many other items along that line.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Let me ask you if there was no addition to the number of ships proposed here for which they wish 350,000 men?

Mr. PADGETT. There were a number of ships proposed, and they had a larger complement for the ships than the committee felt was necessary in peace times.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand, then, that the recommendation of this bureau for additional ships is a recommendation the committee has eliminated?

Mr. PADGETT. We do not think there will be as many ships in operation as would require the 350,000 men.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. In other words, you reduce the number of ships, and you think that the ships will not be built to require the number of men that were contemplated in the estimates of the bureau chiefs?

Mr. PADGETT. A great many of the ships that they have now and are being operated, and that we estimated would be operated during the whole of the fiscal year, will be dispensed with.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. These reductions then, I understand, do not relate to reduction in the number of ships but to maintenance of operation?

Mr. PADGETT. The operation of the ships.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I notice after these bureau chiefs——

Mr. PADGETT. That is only one item that I can mention. A great deal of that was reduced many millions from the estimates for appropriations for navy yards and shore stations, and aircraft, and many things of that kind. For instance, the original estimate for aircraft was $225,000,000. In the estimates by the bureau chiefs they estimated that they could use $85,000,000, and they wanted $85,000,000. The Secretary of the Navy reduced it, as I remember, to $36,000,000, and the committee reduced it to $25,000,000. And that runs all through the hearings.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask the chairman in this connection who are comprehended under the head of bureau chiefs?

Mr. PADGETT. The Chief of the Bureau of Navigation, the Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, the Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, the Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, the Chief of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, and the Commandant of the Marine Corps, with subdivisions under that.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, the recommendations that were made in this connection I suppose were based upon the idea that the proper defense of the country needed the full amount contained in their recommendations?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; they were honest in their recommendations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I do not question their honesty.

Mr. PADGETT. I do not mean honesty in that sense. I mean the conviction that was necessary.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I understand. But I was trying to ascertain to what extent the committee used its own judgment in overriding the judgment of these bureau chiefs.

I noticed the Secretary of the Navy reduced his recommendations for so-called preparedness, which came from the heads mentioned, down to $975,000,000. Now, in what direction and in what details did the Secretary of the Navy reduce the recommendation of these bureau chiefs?

Mr. PADGETT. The Secretary took up the various items and then insisted that they could get along on less appropriation. And if you look on page 901, I believe it is, of the hearings you will find a parallel, itemized statement, where in one column is the title of the appropriation. In the first column after that is the original estimate; in the next column is the amount that the Secretary has recommended, and in the last column the amount that was proposed by the bureau chiefs, parallel with each other, showing every item which he had reduced, and his recommendations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Then the committee differed with the recommendations, first, of the chiefs and then with the Secretary of the Navy, by reducing the bill down to $746,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. Out of the great desire of the committee to reduce appropriations to the very lowest limit that they thought would be consistent with the operation, and curtailing all enlargements and extensions.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And the committee reported what, in its judgment, is adequate defense, and they considered they could eliminate $900,000,000 of what these heads thought was adequate defense and at the same time still preserve our adequate defense?

Mr. PADGETT. Two hundred and twenty-nine millions.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I thought you were making a reduction here of $938,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. That is out of the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I am calling attention to them.

Mr. PADGETT. But the current year's appropriations were made on a war basis.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. As to the $200,000,000 you speak of, is there a difference between the report of the committee and the report of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. And then the $746,000,000 and the $1,414,000,000 shows the difference between the bureau chiefs and the report of the committee.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I notice that the total for the Naval Establishment for the fiscal year 1919 you put at $1,600,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. That is the one I referred to a moment ago.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It provides for that year for maintenance and new construction.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and so does this one carry maintenance and new construction also.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What do you mean by this one?

Mr. PADGETT. This bill. It carries authorization for new construction.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I had not reached that point as yet. I wanted to ask as to the appropriation for 1919—the $1,600,000,000 that is carried for the maintenance of the Navy during that year and for construction during that year.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and for war operations.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What would be the proportion of that $1,600,000,000 that would be for operating expenses, for maintenance, and for construction, as nearly as you can state them?

Mr. PADGETT. If I remember aright the bill, it is set out in the bill of last year, of July 1. In the present bill, I think, we have appropriated for construction about $170,000,000.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. My recollection is that last year the new construction amounted to about $350,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. It is itemized in the bill last year.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And there were some from emergency sources in addition.

Mr. PADGETT. The total increase of the Navy in the bill last year was $184,397,000. That was carried in the regular bill. Now, there were many, many millions of dollars that were appropriated in deficiency bills for authorizations that ran it up, as suggested by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], perhaps to $300,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I will put the question in this way: When the construction heretofore authorized shall have been completed, so that we will have the present Navy plus the ships authorized, what will be the annual cost of the operation and maintenance of that Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. That is a matter that the committee made inquiry about and had estimates about. It varies. Some of them were put up, I think, as high as about $650,000,000. Personally, I do not think it would be that much.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. You mean, without adding a ship under any new authorizations in this bill, when all the outstanding authorizations are completed, and the ships are manned, the annual maintenance and operation charge of that fleet, so composed, would be from $600,000,000, to $650,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. There were some estimates of that kind; yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I notice here that you have another building program.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. On page 3. What is the aggregate cost, so far as the committee can now figure it, of that program? Of course, we understand that the actual figures in the result always run far ahead of the provisional estimates; but so far as the committee can figure out, what will be the cost of the building program on page 3?

Mr. PADGETT. Based on the present cost of ships, the present cost of labor and material, which is a very high charge, it is estimated that the battleships will cost $32,400,000 each.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That would be $324,000,000 for the 10 battleships?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and the scout cruisers will cost about $8,800,000 each. That would be $88,000,000.

Mr. HARDY. Does that estimate include the equipment of the ships also?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes. I am speaking of them complete; and those appropriations would be distributed over about seven years.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That provision contemplates, then, a new building program, an additional and supplemental program, one that will cost, according to the best figures you can now make, about $412,000,000?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. I will state to the gentleman that the opinion was expressed to the committee that there would be a reduction in the cost of materials and of labor under this program before it was completed, which would be distributed over six or seven years—or six years anyway—and as to whether or not that is correct, you can guess as well as I can.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I have had that hope expressed heretofore, but never seen it realized, so far as my immediate experience has gone.

Mr. PADGETT. I imagine that there will be, as we get back to peace conditions, of necessity a decline in the cost of living and the cost of materials and labor. I believe they must go down to a normal basis, and go down proportionately.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Do the figures you have given me put a ship into condition to go into the line of battle?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It includes, then, guns and ammunition, and is a completed ship?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I notice on page 35 of the hearings that Admiral Earle testified that 112 of these Eagle boats are to be completed.

Mr. PADGETT. No; 112 were ordered. The Secretary canceled 52, leaving 60 to be completed.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Admiral Earle says on page 35 that 112 are to be finished. The approximate cost of these boats, as I understand, is in the vicinity of $275,000 each. Is that correct?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is much more than that. The estimate was made originally that they could build them for $275,000 each, but Admiral Taylor, Chief Constructor, stated to the committee that while they hoped to build them for that, they never expected to build them for that, and they expected them to cost much more than that, and if they were built for $400,000 each it would be a very good job and a very fair price.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is the Ford Motor Co. contract?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. But the company made this sort of a contract: It was on the cost-plus plan; they were to be paid the cost of construction and $20,000 on each boat as their profit.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Now, there are to be 58 of those completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Sixty.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Sixty?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. What is the general purpose that those boats will be used for when they are completed?

Mr. PADGETT. Largely as substitutes for gunboats in South and Central American waters, the West Indies, in the Orient, in China, the river service in shallow waters, and services of that kind.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Is it also contemplated that they shall take the place of the revenue cutters?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. The Revenue-Cutter Service in time of peace is under the Treasury. In time of war its vessels are under the Navy. A bill has been introduced, that is pending before another committee, to transfer permanently to the Navy the old Revenue-Cutter Service, now called the Coast Guard Service.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. That is what I am after.

Mr. PADGETT. But that is pending before another committee and has not been considered by our committee at all.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Would these Eagle boats be available for that purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. If the Congress should turn them over, or if the department should transfer them by consent of Congress, I presume they could be used for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Does the gentleman know if the Navy Department has that in view as the reason for asking that these 60 Eagle boats be completed?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. I understand the 60 are being completed because they had progressed so far at the time of the signing of the armistice, in the gathering of the materials and the fabrication and the progress of the work, that it was an advantage to the Government to complete those 60. The 52 had not been completed to that extent, and the contracts for them were canceled.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. And there are two or three or four in commission now, I believe.

Mr. PADGETT. I have it in my mind that five of them have been put out in the water. Whether I am correct on that or not I do not recall. It is a small number.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Is it the judgment of the Navy that those boats are a success?

Mr. PADGETT. Admiral Taylor speaks very nicely of them. He is the chief constructor. He says that they are good boats, and that they will be very serviceable and will be well worth what they will cost the Government.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. They mount two 4-inch guns, do they not?

Mr. PADGETT. I believe they have either 4 or 5 inch guns. I am not sure which.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have one further question that I wish to ask. When this supplemental program is completed, which is to cost $412,000,000, what then will be the annual maintenance charge of our Navy, if we add nothing more?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it would aggregate any more than with the others, because many of those that we now have would be supplemented by these new ships.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Has it been the experience of the chairman heretofore that from year to year the expenses of the Navy have ever declined?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Have we any reason to believe, then, that in the future the experience will be different?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; I think we have reached the point where, owing to the age of our ships, many of those that we now have will go out of service and be supplemented by the larger, better, and newer ships.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. If the chairman of the committee will permit, in answering the question of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] as to the cost of maintaining the present Navy as now authorized, without adding any more ships, the chairman stated that it was estimated by some to be as much as $600,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. I said $650,000,000. That is my recollection.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The only estimate submitted to the committee on that question was a letter from Admiral McGowan, which will be found on page 825 of the hearings. In making that estimate he took into account the ships of the August, 1916, building program and also a duplication of that program. It will be interesting to the gentleman to read that letter. Admiral McGowan makes the statement therein that in the opinion of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts 25 per cent of the original cost of ships represents the fair annual cost of maintenance; and he sets out in that table what the Navy authorized prior to August, 1916, cost, which was approximately $775,000,000. He estimated the cost of the August, 1916, program at $761,000,000, and he estimated that to duplicate the 1916 program would cost $913,000,000, taking into account the present increased cost of labor and materials, and he then gave as the minimum cost to maintain the Navy after the completion of the August, 1916, program and a duplication thereof to be $612,250,000 as the minimum and $806,000,000 as the maximum.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. On the basis, though, of $900,000,000 for the duplication.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes; for a duplication of the 1916 program, which the admiral bases his estimate on.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not want to have the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] confused, because this program is only for $400,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. That is interesting. Then, according to Admiral McGowan's figures, the minimum cost in the situation predicated would be $625,000,000, and the maximum cost would be how much?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. About $806,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. It is pretty safe, then, to figure on $750,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. In making this estimate he took into account the building of another program such as we ordered in August, 1916, and instead of $750,000,000 he estimated that it would cost something over $800,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I was just going to ask this question, if the gentleman had the figures, because if he can furnish the figures I can do a little mathematical computation and get at my results.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. By the time the ships contemplated in the 1916 program are completed, and by the time this supplemental program recommended by your committee is completed, what will be as of that future date the aggregate cost of all of the ships then in the American Navy? If you can give me that, I can divide that by 4 and get at the maintenance.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The aggregate cost of the ships ordered prior to August, 1916, was stated by the admiral to be approximately $775,000,000, and the aggregate cost of the ships of the August, 1916, program is estimated by the admiral to be $761,000,000. But at a later hearing Admiral Taylor stated that that would be $806,000,000. The aggregate cost of the duplication of the August, 1916, building program, as estimated by Admiral McGowan, is over $900,000,000. Instead of authorizing the duplication of that program of 1916, as was first suggested, the only part of that program we have authorized is 10 battleships and 10 scout cruisers, which the chairman states are estimated by Admiral Taylor to cost approximately $400,000,000.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask this question? It is often stated in our body, that when the Congress authorizes battleships and scout cruisers, their construction is always followed by requests for a number of smaller vessels which the Navy needs insist are necessary to make a well-balanced Navy. Hence the moment we begin to build battleships and scout cruisers, then this other construction is a corollary, you may say.

Mr. PADGETT. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit, I will say that before the war our Navy was an unbalanced Navy. We had more capital ships—that is, large ships—and had emphasized that and had been leaving off the small ships. On account of the exigencies of this war, and the operation of the submarines against commercial ships, the thing shifted, and we have now a multitude of small ships and a surplus of small ships, so that the Navy is now unbalanced by having more small ships out of proportion to what we have of large ships. So in this war it changed. For instance, we have 342 destroyers built, building, and authorized. Before the war I think we had between 70 and 80, if I remember the figures offhand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Fifty-four.

Mr. BUTLER. Fifty-four small boats.

Mr. PADGETT. I was perhaps putting it too high. Now, we have the same condition about submarines. We have the chasers, we have the Eagle boats, and various others, so that we do not need small craft at all, and for that reason the committee has not reported any part of the program with reference to the small craft, but we are reporting two of the larger type.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. What the chairman has stated does not alter the rule. He states that we have more smaller ships than we used to have, and that so far as the larger ships are concerned, we will not need so many small ships. With reference to capital ships, it appears just now that we have a disproportionate number of small ships. But that does not meet the question that I am asking. Do our naval experts, the naval heads, consider that when you shall have built the heavy ships contemplated in the 1916 building program, and the heavy ships contemplated in the supplementary program, you will then have such a well-balanced Navy, that there will be no demand for additional smaller ships?

Mr. PADGETT. Well, there is a division of opinion among the naval men. Some insist that we should have more and some say that we have a sufficiency. We have never been able to get an absolute agreement on any proposition.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. May I ask one further question, and then I will not take any further time of the committee. So far as this war is concerned, our heavy ships have played practically no part, is not that true?

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not. The salvation of our cause and the cause of the allies were saved by British big ships.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. But the gentleman does not answer my question. I said "our ships"; I did not say anything about the British ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Had it not been for the big ships Germany would have won the war before we got into it, and we would have had to fight it alone.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. If it had not been for the British fighting men, you may say Germany would have won the war. I am asking the gentleman, so far as the present war is concerned, whether our big ships played any but a comparatively unimportant part in it. The gentleman does not answer the question by telling me what the English ships did.

Mr. PADGETT. We sent over a part of our ships to act with the British Navy.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Our heavy ships were a part of the grand fleet. I am not minimizing our part in the naval war, for I well understand that our smaller ships played a big part in the antisubmarine operations. But is it not true that the big ships of this country made but a small contribution to the naval operations?

Mr. PADGETT. England was very glad to have them sent over there.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Yes, I know that they welcomed our battleships, when our admirals in command reached England. I know that they were splendid ships, and that they would have done well if there had been any fighting to be done. They would have played a magnificent part, I may say, but as a matter of fact our big ships had but little to do, and there were comparatively few on the other side.

Mr. PADGETT. We sent five over at first.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Five dreadnaughts?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; and they went up into the Orkney Islands, and then later we sent seven more, I believe.

Mr. BUTLER. Four more, nine in all.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says four more. They went over.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. I wish to get at the facts. Nine went over there. You say now the British grand fleet were waiting for the German fleet to emerge. As a matter of fact it did not emerge before we got over. They never emerged, save as captives. Our heavy ships were naturally welcomed, but they were not needed. The British fleet was ample to contain the German fleet.

Mr. PADGETT. And were there ready.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And were there ready and waiting for the Germans to come out. Had they come our ships would have fought like bulldogs. That is true, but they never emerged, and never contemplated emerging. The British had enough heavy ships to take care of the German fleet, if it had emerged, is not that true?

Mr. PADGETT. I think so; but ours contributed a very important part in being there.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. And the actual active helpful contributions, so far as opposition to the real naval activities of Germany were concerned, which consisted of submarine warfare, were conducted by our lighter ships.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, certainly; and the English small ships also operated against them.

Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia. Absolutely, but I am dealing with our contribution to the naval warfare, not the part the English played.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to ask a few questions along another line. I notice in the report that the present authorized strength of the Navy is 143,000 men and odd. Can the gentleman give us any idea as to how many men there are in the Navy now?

Mr. PADGETT. I did that. On the 11th of November, when the armistice was signed, there were 497,020 men. I understand that something like 100,000 have been discharged since then.

Mr. SNYDER. I note that the committee recommends for the temporary organization, until June 30, 1920, 225,000 men.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. And it is stated that 82,000 of these men are for the purpose of the Shipping Board and for transports?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. What I am asking is, are these 82,000 men charged up to the Shipping Board, or are they paid out of the Navy appropriation?

Mr. PADGETT. They are paid out of the appropriation for the Navy, and that is a work that the Navy is doing in addition to strictly naval work.

Mr. SNYDER. I appreciate all that, but what I am trying to get at is when the Shipping Board makes their rates for tonnage, do they have to consider in any way the payment of these men in making up their costs?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know what the Shipping Board takes into consideration.

Mr. SNYDER. It seems to me that is a very important question right here now.

Mr. PADGETT. The big part I find is for the Army—operation for the Army—and there are certain amounts that the Army refunds to the Navy, and that goes into the Treasury as general receipts, but there is a large part of it that the Navy bears the expense of and does not get any compensation for.

Mr. SNYDER. I understand that when these ships are brought out of Hog Island, if they ever are, they are immediately manned by men from the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. The Shipping Board turns over its ships to the Army, and the Army then calls upon the Navy to man and operate them.

Mr. SNYDER. The question that I want to clear up, if I can, is this: When the Army or the Navy supplies these men to the Shipping Board, does the Shipping Board contemplate the cost of those men in the rates they give the public for carrying freight?

Mr. PADGETT. I am unable to answer that, because I have no information from the Shipping Board.

Mr. SNYDER. It seems to me that would be information we need here now.

Mr. PADGETT. As to what elements go into the Shipping Board in fixing the rates.

Mr. SNYDER. If the Government is going to supply men and operate its ships and pay those men out of the taxes we are raising for the people, then compete with shippers who are trying to compete with that situation, it seems to me that our whole shipbuilding scheme will go for nothing.

Mr. PADGETT. I agree with the gentleman that it is an element that ought to be considered by the Shipping Board, but they are not under our control or jurisdiction.

Mr. SNYDER. Is it the correct thing for us to do here——

Mr. PADGETT. Our ships are being operated for military purposes.

Mr. SNYDER. To appropriate money in a naval bill for the purpose of operating merchant ships?

Mr. PADGETT. We are not operating merchant ships in commerce.

Mr. SNYDER. You are operating ships for the Shipping Board, and they are carrying merchandise.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, no; only for military purposes.

Mr. SNYDER. They are operated by the Army—by men furnished the Army by the Navy.

Mr. PADGETT. They are for bringing troops back and equipment of war and materials of war.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, there have been several questions asked here this morning upon which I think perhaps I am able to throw a little light, if the gentleman will permit. I have just telephoned to the Bureau of Navigation in regard to the release of men. They have not the figures as to the actual number, but they have authorized the discharge of 20 per cent of those who enlisted for the duration of the war, 10 per cent of those who enlisted for four years and who joined the Navy after April 6, 1917, and 40 per cent of the Naval Reserves. A query was made in regard to the battery upon the Eagle patrol boats. These vessels have a battery consisting of two 4-inch 50-caliber guns, one 3-inch 50-caliber gun, one Y depth-bomb projector, and two machine guns.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, there have been statements in the press that action of the committee was determined, or at least influenced, by secret cablegrams from the President. I wondered whether in this era of pitiless publicity the chairman could tell this House whether that is so or not?

Mr. PADGETT. The papers stated that the chairman had received a cablegram from the President. That is not correct. The President did not cable me nor did I cable the President.

I do not think that any member of the committee did. I think I am warranted in saying no member of the committee did.

Mr. BUTLER. Cable the President, I did not!

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think any member of the committee received a cable from the President. I was going to state this, however, to the House. During the debate in the committee in the hearing, and so forth, there was a diversity of opinion as to the propriety or the need of going ahead with the building program at this time pending the development of the league of nations, the question of disarmament, and what progress had been made, and so forth. That was in the hearing, and I had talked also with the Secretary of the Navy and told him of these various contentions and arguments in the House and in the committee with the membership of the House, and the Secretary of the Navy cabled the President and told him of this situation and asked him if anything had happened over there or if there had been any development—I am giving it in substance—that would change his recommendation as to the three-year program, and the President cabled back in substance—I do not give the words—that he had not changed his mind, that he still insisted and desired very earnestly the three-year program.

Mr. GILLETT. I wondered if the telegram—I do not know whether the gentleman will tell us or not—contained any facts upon which the committee could base its own judgment or whether it was simply an expression of opinion like the similar message on the Panama Canal tolls.

Mr. PADGETT. As I stated, the President stated in substance—I do not give his words—that nothing had occurred over there to change his recommendation for the three-year program and insisted very earnestly that Congress should carry out the three-year program. He stated, however, that if there are developments in the way of tribunals, and so forth, for disarmament and a league of nations, or along that line, that he would be willing that a proviso should be inserted to allow him to discontinue or stop the building program if an agreement was reached internationally.

Mr. GILLETT. And would the gentleman be willing to state whether the alleged quotation in the Washington Post of this morning, "that it would interfere with my negotiations"——

SEVERAL MEMBERS. "Fatal."

Mr. GILLETT. "Be fatal to my negotiations"—whether that was accurate or not?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir; that was not accurate.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman does not feel at liberty to give us the full cablegram, so that the House will have the same information which the committee had on which to base its decision?

Mr. PADGETT. I would not; no, sir; but I want to state that the words which were quoted in the Post this morning were not correct as they were there quoted.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I do not want to give the words——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not asking the gentleman to disclose what the President of the United States cabled, and until this minute I never have admitted to those who have spoken to me that the President even did cable; nevertheless, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs having said he did cable to America something concerning this building program, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not those words which were put to the chairman by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] concerning the effect of the refusal to adopt this program pending negotiations were in substance correct?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated, and I will state now, I will not give the words——

Mr. BUTLER. I am not asking the gentleman to do that.

Mr. PADGETT. But the President was very earnest and very insistent that the three-year program should be carried out.

Mr. BUTLER. Nevertheless, I do not want to stand here, like a yap; I do not want to be considered in the House a sort of a yap, turning in and out, whichever way the wind blows; but the chairman will agree with me in this, that I was opposed to this program——

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. That something was said to me that altered my opinion as to what I should do, and I made the statement to the chairman and members of the committee that I could not, from what was said to me, assume the responsibility of voting against this program, and nothing the chairman said now would change my opinion.

Mr. PADGETT. I want to say, the President was very earnest and very insistent——

Mr. BUTLER. He was.

Mr. PADGETT. That this program should continue. I think I can say that much to the House.

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman will yield, did the President say in substance that the failure of the program would be "fatal to my negotiations"? Did he use the word "fatal"?

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman must excuse me from answering as to the words that were or were not in the President's cablegram. I have stated the substance, that the President was insistent and very earnest that the three-year program should go ahead, and I will not either affirm or deny any word that was used in that telegram.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman think—does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. Does not the gentleman think that at a critical time like this the American Congress should be furnished with all the information which the Committee on Naval Affairs has in reference to a policy vitally concerning the American people in order to enable it to make up its mind? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. All I can say is that the critical time is not limited to here; it is over there also. And it would not be proper, I will say to the gentleman, for me to give the words that were used. If the President wants to give them, all right. I have told the substance. I have told you he was earnest, he was insistent; but I will not give the words either that he did or did not use.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to know, if the chairman will tell me, if this telegraphic communication did not come to the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was that communication then given to your committee?

Mr. PADGETT. It was given to me confidentially, and I told the Secretary of the Navy that what he had given to me in confidence I felt I ought to give to the members of the committee, and I did so, in the same confidence that it was given to me, so far as the language was concerned.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it not true that the information that you conveyed to the members of your Naval Affairs Committee is the one reason that this report here is unanimous?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And the information you gave them influenced them in voting for this program?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; some of them.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This information you say you can not give to the House?

Mr. PADGETT. I can not do it, because it involves more than our own domestic policy.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Do you not think, in view of the situation, in view of the fact that this committee has been influenced to do this by information, that we who vote for this appropriation ought to know something about it?

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated very fully and practically what the wish and insistence was, but I can not give you the language, because it would not be proper that it should be given.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I was going to revert to what is to me a rather pertinent question by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. I recall that he is a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, and I would like to ask him whether or not, in presenting matters to the House, all questions of diplomacy that are discussed in his committee or all information had in his committee is presented to the House?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not aware, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the committee has ever declined to submit to the House fundamental information upon a great policy for which the Congress was asked to appropriate.

Mr. PADGETT. I am giving the fundamental information here very fully and very freely.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas and Mr. MANN rose.

Mr. PADGETT. I first yield to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am sure that during the early part of the discussion here this morning Members were thinking of something besides what was being talked about. They were thinking about this thing. Nothing of greater importance has occurred during my legislative experience in this House. Dispatches from Paris indicate that much progress has been made toward the establishment of the league of nations. On yesterday it was announced from Paris that a progressive disarmament program had been agreed upon. It is announced this morning that secret treaties are to be denounced and are now being exposed. It does not seem to me conceivable that the man who is leading the program for settling international differences without resort to arms, who is leading in a program of a progressive disarmament, and who has insisted upon open diplomacy would secretly ask the Committee on Naval Affairs to insist upon a naval program that the Congress and the country could not understand or know about. Now, are the contents of the cablegram a statement of facts or a statement of the position or opinion of the President?

Mr. PADGETT. I stated to the gentleman and to the House that these matters were submitted to the President as to the league of nations and the disarmament question and postponing the authorization of the building program, and the President insists that we shall go ahead with the building program—the three-year program.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. While he in Paris is leading for a program of progressive disarmament?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir. That is what he is doing.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Urging upon the peace conference disarmament and upon the Congress of the United States an unusual program of increasing its Naval Establisthment.

Mr. PADGETT. An authorization, coupled with a provision that it may stop if a tribunal or tribunals are established that will make it unnecessary to carry on the program.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. What will the gentleman from Tennessee be willing to state to the House with respect to the intent of the President's cablegram? Is it the intention that the Congress, notwithstanding the program of disarmament throughout the world, should give this authorization for an increased Naval Establishment for the purpose of enabling the President to hold that over those with whom he is now in consultation? Is it a threat?

Mr. PADGETT. There was no expression or indication of any such purpose in his cablegram. I will answer that far.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does the gentleman from Tennessee have in mind what the real purpose of the President was in sending this cablegram?

Mr. PADGETT. I think the gentleman can surmise that as well as I can. He sent an answer to a cablegram——

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman to say that the cablegram from the President had an effect in the committee on the naval program.

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Now, while I appreciate the gentleman's position, and I do not think he would be justified in making public a cablegram which was handed to him confidentially, does not the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee believe that if a cablegram comes from the President which not only is designed to but does affect the judgment of the Committee on Naval Affairs that that information ought to be furnished to the House, so that Members of the House will be able to determine their attitude?

And if it was necessary to get a cablegram from the President to have this bill reported out of the Committee on Naval Affairs, should not the Secretary of the Navy make public to the House the contents of the cablegram in order to get the bill passed through the House? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. I think when I told the House that the President had these matters submitted to him and explained what was submitted, and he stated that he still insisted upon his recommendation and that he had not changed his mind as to the necessity and the desirability of the three-year program, and did not want it postponed, but wanted it carried out, I have told the House all that it could expect us to tell and not quote the words of the President.

Mr. MANN. Well, I take it that the gentleman would not be warranted in revealing the telegram to the House, but perhaps he would be warranted in saying whether the report in the Washington Post this morning, which states that the failure to carry out this naval program would be fatal to the desires of the President at the peace table, is correct or not.

Mr. PADGETT. Well, the President did not say a word about the peace table. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. No; nor the purposes of the President abroad. The language quoted in the Washington Post is that—

> Failure to report favorably upon the huge naval building program would be "fatal to my negotiations."

Now, I do not desire to embarrass the gentleman. I wish somebody would tell us whether that, or substantially that, information was furnished to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PADGETT. I stated that those words were not used as that quotation has it; all of those words.

Mr. MANN. I do not wish to embarrass the gentleman, but was it that or substantially that? Here is what I want to get at and what the country wants to know: Whether the Congress is asked in the blind, without information, without knowledge, without laying the cards on the table, as has been frequently suggested by the President, to vote an immense naval program, when the information which would influence Congress is right here in Washington and the administration refuses to take Congress into its confidence and tell it what the information is?

Mr. PADGETT. I have told the House fully.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman has been very courteous to the House as to what he has told us, but the gentleman is not the administration. What we want to know is whether the administration up here will give us the information that is furnished to the Committee on Naval Affairs? [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. I have stated to the House the insistence and the recommendation of the President, and that he renews his recommendation that was made to the Congress, and insists that the Congress shall carry out that recommendation and not postpone it. Now, I think I have dealt fully and freely and frankly with the House.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state, if he can and thinks it proper, whether he was told by the Secretary of the Navy that the contents of this cablegram could not be given to the House?

Mr. PADGETT. It was given to me confidentially.

Mr. DYER. The Secretary of the Navy is the one who is refusing the information to the House?

Mr. PADGETT. No. I am the one that is refusing it.

Mr. DYER. Well, the gentleman was told by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Navy told him in effect, that it was confidential and should not be given to the House?

Mr. PADGETT. No. The Secretary of the Navy sent it to me confidentially, and I gave it to the committee confidentially—the wording. I have given to the House the insistence and the recommendation of the President, but I decline to give the words, to either affirm or deny the words that were used.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman were permitted by the Secretary of the Navy, would he do so?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not think it would be proper to publish it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman state whether the cablegram that the President sent contained the facts upon which the President based his insistence and recommendation?

Mr. PADGETT. It did not.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman answer one short question?

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. Respecting the reluctance of the gentleman to make a direct statement, will the gentleman state to the House why it was that the President did not send a message directly to the Congress upon this momentous issue, as provided by the Constitution, instead of sending it around by the way of the Horn, through the Naval Committee, which, I understand, is not the usual means of making communications by the Chief Executive of the United States to the Congress of the United States?

Mr. PADGETT. I will answer the gentleman's question. The President did submit it to the Congress in a constitutional way, and I will read it:

> I take it for granted that the Congress will carry out the naval program which was undertaken before we entered the war. The Secretary of the Navy has submitted to your committee for authorization that part of the program which covers the building plans for the next three years. These plans have been prepared along the lines and in accordance with the policy which the Congress established, not under the exceptional conditions of the war, but with the intention of adhering to a definite method of development for the Navy. I earnestly recommend the uninterrupted pursuit of that policy. It would clearly be unwise for us to attempt to adjust our programs to a future world policy as yet undetermined.

Mr. SLOAN. What about?

Mr. PADGETT. That was the President's recommendation to Congress, and he adheres now to that recommendation.

Mr. SLOAN. But not through a message. It was his farewell address.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. I believe that the House is more impressed with the fact that the members of this committee were suddenly determined in their action to support a bill when first they refused, and that is the important proposition that the House would like to have light on. For that reason I ask the gentleman if he will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER], who tells us that suddenly in committee his mind was changed on the bill? He can give us light if he is permitted to do so.

Mr. PADGETT. There were some Members who changed their opinion and others who did not.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I personally, of course, shall respect the confidence reposed in me by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, but I want to ask the gentleman this question—and this has nothing to do with what the gentleman conceives it to be his duty to inform the House, or how far he may feel justified in informing the House. But I want to read from the President's last message to Congress, just before going abroad——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. His farewell address.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In which he used this language, which undoubtedly the gentleman heard:

> I shall be in close touch with you and with affairs on this side of the water, and you will know all that I do.

Under those circumstances——

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. PADGETT. I have yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I want to ask the gentleman if under those circumstances he does not think that some official in the executive branch of the administration ought to let us know of this information from the other side?

Mr. PADGETT. I have told the gentleman the substance of the President's cablegram. I did not give the words. I have told the House, though, fully and freely, what the substance was, and that substance was that he adheres to this recommendation and wants it carried out and not postponed.

Mr. LONGWORTH. There are a few Members of the House who do know the contents of this cablegram?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does not the gentleman think, in view of the President's assurance, given to this House on the eve of his departure for Europe, that at all times we would know all that he does, that in asking for an appropriation of this size the membership of the House are entitled to the information?

Mr. SNYDER and Mr. McCORMICK rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman from New York first, and then to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SNYDER. In making up my mind on this proposition I would like to know if the gentleman can say without breach of confidence whether or not the complete cablegram from the President was read to the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. PADGETT. It was.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. I want to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] if he felt that the seizure of the cables by the Postmaster General was not an extenuating circumstance in the inhibition of news from the President in Europe?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I wish the gentleman would ask that question of some member of the Committee on Naval Affairs rather than of me.

Mr. HARDY. In withholding the wording of that cablegram, is the chairman of the committee now withholding the knowledge of any fact from Congress?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not.

Mr. HARDY. So that the House has the information which the President intended to convey to us.

Mr. PADGETT. Now I yield the floor, and will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] to use some of his time.

Mr. TEMPLE. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for one question before he yields the floor?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TEMPLE. Does the gentleman know whether the building program is intended in any way to influence the President's negotiations?

Mr. PADGETT. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I intend in a few minutes to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] to make a speech on this bill; but before he begins his speech, I think I owe something to myself and to my good friend from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR]. He has asked me to state what influenced my mind at the last minute when this naval program was under consideration in the committee room. My friend from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] has asked me to state what influenced his mind. The same statement that moved him moved me, but that statement I will never disclose to anybody. I do not think it is fair to the President of the United States to disclose it. [Applause.] I do not think it is fair to make it public at this time lest it might in some way embarrass the President of the United States. Now, I want, as an American citizen, to have it understood that during these negotiations that are now occurring abroad, and recollecting the great responsibility we placed upon the President of the United States—or at least he has assumed it——

Mr. McCORMICK. That is a very valuable correction. To withhold individual action which might embarrass him.

Mr. BUTLER. Until the last minute I had resolved that I would not vote for this building program. Although our discussions had been absolutely agreeable, yet nevertheless they were sometimes carried on with considerable heat over this proposed building program. If you will permit me to say it, I became embarrassed lest I might be wrong. Gentlemen on that committee were able to judge of the right thing to do as well as I, and therefore I was in doubt whether I was right or not. Yet I would not have voted for it if I had not been influenced by what the President of the United States said to us through the Secretary of the Navy in very great confidence.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. The gentleman says he does not think this would be fair to the President.

Mr. BUTLER. Not when he said it to us in confidence.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Does the gentleman think it would be fair to the country?

Mr. BUTLER. I believe that before the Congress of the United States ought to impose this great burden upon the people it ought to know the reason why. [Applause.] But remember this, that it was not what was said by the President of the United States to us at the last minute that influenced the great majority of this committee. Mr. BROWNING and I stood almost alone in our opposition to this proposed plan. Some of the Democrats, perhaps, were opposed to it, but I shall not speak for them. But I want the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to understand that what the President said in this cablegram did not influence the great majority of that committee, in my judgment. I despise mysteries——

Mr. TOWNER and Mr. BRITTEN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. BUTLER. I think the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] rose first.

Mr. TOWNER. Of course the members of the committee all knew what the desire of the President was, but, as I understand it, in this cablegram the President gave to the committee in confidence some confidential reasons for his advice; so that we are not ignorant of the desire of the President, but we are ignorant of the reasons which he assigned for his wish being carried out, and the committee had disclosed to them the reasons in order to influence their action; but the President was unwilling, or the Secretary of the Navy was unwilling, that those reasons should be given to the House, although the House would be compelled to act upon the bill. I ask the gentleman if that is a correct statement?

Mr. BUTLER. If I understand the gentleman's statement—and I hesitate to speak, lest I may say too much—I do not think there was any reason given in the message, as I recollect it. There was a statement made about this program, but I can not permit you to take from me that which was given to me in great confidence. Mr. Chairman, I despise the mystery which seems to surround this paragraph of the bill. I despise mystery and all things connected with it. I was raised with a class of people who gave us reasons why we should do certain things and leave others undone. But while these negotiations are pending in Europe, while this responsibility is assumed by the President and those who are with him, I shall not do anything to embarrass him or them in any way if I know it. [Applause.] At the same time I anxiously wait for the period to come when I, as a free and independent man, can do as I please without fear of hurting a great cause over which I have no control.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. The gentleman means that it is now impossible to achieve "open covenants of peace openly arrived at"? Let us speak the facts.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not know anything about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMICK. I merely asked the gentleman if he does not mean to suggest that point No. 1 of the 14 points has so shrunk, so dwindled, so shriveled, so faded, and become so exiguous that it has come to be of no consequence? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. We as members of the committee and of the House can realize that the President is confronted with great responsibilities, and if the passage of the $700,000,000 naval bill will support the American contention in Europe, is it not a good thing to pass it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Then why not suspend the rules and pass it?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am in favor of suspending the rules and passing it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Is the gentleman sure that this is the American contention?

Mr. BRITTEN. I am.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman from Illinois ask me a question?

Mr. BRITTEN. Yes. Why not pass this bill if it will strengthen the American contention in Europe?

Mr. BAER. How does the gentleman know it will?

Mr. BUTLER. I want to answer my colleague—and he knows how I feel about this—that the adoption of this item in this bill will not help the situation in Europe one bit. [Applause.]

Mr. BRITTEN. That is not the way the President feels about it.

Mr. BUTLER. I fear to vote against it for fear that it might.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I will.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It appears that a communication was made by the President which has reached some Members of Congress, which has influenced their action, and possibly they are entirely right; but other Members of Congress, acting in the dark, can not avoid having some doubt as to the propriety of their conduct. Now, I would like to ask why it is not possible to have an executive session of Congress or of the House, and communicate to it matters of sufficient importance to control their votes?

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the gentleman's question, we had an executive session in the Committee on Naval Affairs, in which I think there were 18 or 20 members present. I only speak for myself—I did not leak information, but some one did. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. I have more confidence in my fellow Members than that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I want to remind gentlemen of Rule XXIX of the House:

> Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any Member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the Members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

There is always a method provided.

Mr. FREAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. FREAR. The gentleman from Pennsylvania states to us that he has voted and stood for this bill, but that if the bill is passed, in his judgment it will not affect any European situation. Will the gentleman advise the House whether or not he wishes the House to stand with him on his judgment or on his vote?

Mr. BUTLER. I can not advise the House. I do not ask the House to vote for this paragraph because of anything I have said. That is for the judgment of the House. I am thinking about myself only. I regret very greatly that I am unable to tell the gentleman of this committee the reason that moved me to vote for it.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. SLOAN. I want to ask the gentleman if he does not believe that every one of the gallery gods up there knows every word of this telegram?

Mr. BUTLER. If the members of the gallery know it, we will know it to-morrow morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Was the gentleman a Member of Congress at the time the President sent his message on the Panama Canal tolls?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; and I voted against the repeal.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Is it not the same situation, the same mystery?

Mr. BUTLER. The same sort of injunction put on it; but, nevertheless, I am going to say to the gentleman that that only concerned dollars and cents, and this concerns more than that.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman recall the mystery surrounding the $640,000,000 voted for aviation?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I do, my friend.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will remember that we took at its word the committee that told us not to inquire too much, although it was afterwards shown by a Senate committee that we had no combat planes in France. May I ask the gentleman this: Since he has stated to the committee that the passage of this bill would probably not affect the situation in Europe, does he think it would be for the interests of the United States?

Mr. BUTLER. Aside from any international complications?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. None whatever. I would not vote for it. And why? Let me answer the gentleman's question. I believe this program is never to be built, and I do not believe in fooling the people in any way. [Applause.] I do not believe these ships will be built. I can see no real reason, so far as it concerns America alone, for providing a building program that can not be constructed for several years to come, and I can see no real reason, as I have stated to my friends on the committee, for imposing this great burden upon the people. We are a great big band of brethren, working out these problems as best we can. They perhaps took the position that I did, or at least were willing to agree with me, those who thought with me in putting into the bill a condition that it should not be begun for a year from this time.

Mr. BROWNING. It will take 10 years to build it.

Mr. BUTLER. My friend here says that it will take 10 years to complete it. Nevertheless the whole subject will come back to the American Congress before a dollar can be used toward its commencement.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I have always stood with the gentleman for a larger Navy. I think I have supported him every time he took his stand upon that question in the House. I am for that kind of a Navy that will guard the interests of the United States against any other country on earth. Now, I want to ask the gentleman——

Mr. BUTLER. Wait a minute; let me say something right there. I want to know what the situation is that confronts this country after the peace council in Europe is done, and then I am willing to go as far as anybody else, and perhaps further than most of the Members of this House, toward providing armaments at sea. Nobody can say of me that I have been holding back upon naval construction. We have a Navy now in my judgment at this time such as is necessary for all purposes—I mean, when we complete the 1916 program.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Thus far it appears that a vote against this bill would be a vote to embarrass the President of the United States, whose message to Congress has not been read?

Mr. BUTLER. Do not ask me; I do not know.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is the first proposition.

Mr. BUTLER. I have tried to say to my friend, with all the rest of the gentlemen here, as near as I could, without disclosing what I feel I should not tell, the reason why I voted for this. I want to see the peace negotiations in Europe finished. I do not want to do or say anything that will embarrass our people in their attempt to make a peace that will settle down on this world forever. That is what I am after, and nothing else.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman wants to help us to vote right, especially those who have supported him heretofore?

Mr. BUTLER. Do not put it in that way.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I assume the gentleman is going to vote for the bill?

Mr. BUTLER. Oh, I suppose I shall vote for that paragraph in the bill. There are very many things in the bill that I think are of such importance that I propose to express my views on some of the paragraphs. I think, perhaps, there is more money appropriated than we should appropriate. I am now talking about this one paragraph which the gentleman has in mind. Unless something should happen between now and next Saturday, something told to me that will induce me to change my mind, I shall vote for it. I am not asking anyone else to do it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I want to be with the gentleman on that proposition. I wanted to know that I was voting in the interest of the United States. I assume the gentleman believes that way about it.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before my colleague from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] proceeds, will he permit me to yield for a moment to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT], who desires to have a letter read?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I yield now for a moment to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FOCHT].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to discuss this question after what has been said here this morning. It is self-evident that with the keenness and alertness and the vision of the newspapers and the American people we will know all about what was in that telegram at least before the House votes on the question.

At some future time I shall have something to say about House bill 13440, but for the present will be content to have read by the Clerk a letter which I have received from a former Congressman, Hon. J. D. Hicks, now department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic of Pennsylvania. I send the letter to the desk and ask that it be read in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Altoona, Pa., January 28, 1919.

Hon. B. K. FOCHT.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN AND FRIEND: On behalf of the Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, I most earnestly request that you protest against the bill recently introduced in Congress by Congressman GANDY, of South Dakota, providing for the transfer of the Battle Mountain Home at Hot Springs, S. Dak., to the War Department for the use of the hospital for the soldiers of the present war, which bill provides for the transfer of the Civil and Spanish War veterans to other homes, principally to the home at Danville, Ill. While we do not object to the use of the home at Battle Mountain for the soldiers of the world war, we do object to the removal of the veterans of the Civil and Spanish Wars to other homes, for the reason that the sanitarium at Battle Mountain is specially equipped for the treatment of all kinds of diseases to which aged soldiers are subject; and if they are removed to Danville, Ill., or to other homes, our comrades of the Civil War would be deprived of this treatment.

The commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic has already protested against the proposed action, and you will earn the everlasting gratitude of the members of the Grand Army of the Republic of Pennsylvania by using your best efforts against the passage of Congressman GANDY'S bill.

I have the honor to be, sincerely, yours,

J. D. HICKS.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I now yield one hour to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY]. [Applause.]

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, reverting just for a moment to the discussion which has been going on, for myself I desire to say that I made up my mind some little time ago to support this proposition for an additional building program. Some gentlemen awhile ago seemed to think that such a program would be inconsistent with the declared policy of Congress and the country, looking to a reduction of armaments, but I think not. The President of the United States and his associates are working now to secure a reduction of armament. We place in this bill a proviso that the ships authorized herein shall not be started before the 1st of February, 1920, and we have repealed a provision of legislation requiring the Secretary of the Navy to start all ships heretofore authorized before the 1st of July next.

The obvious purpose of all that is to give the United States, through its official representatives abroad, whoever they happen for the instant to be, it does not matter, an opportunity to work out a proper reduction of armament that all the world hopes will be accomplished. Now, if it is going to help the commissioners of other nations and our own to bring about a reduction of armament to know what the policy of America would be in the event that a reduction of armament is not to be effected, then the world is entitled to know in advance what that policy is to be, and that is why, not because the President advised it or because any other person advised it, that it has appealed to me as being a sound and proper course for the American people to pursue. And with me it is no bluff, either. I want the load that is on the back of the world for armament to be lifted. Nobody wants it any more than I, but if the world decides that that load is not to be lifted and that each nation must look out for itself, then, as for myself, I do not propose to have our country ever caught again in a position where it must depend for its protection upon the good offices of a friendly power. [Applause.]

Mr. FARR. And a majority of the committee.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I speak only for myself. Now, it was with considerable difficulty that we made this bill, because the first estimates which came to the committee were based on war conditions, and nobody could tell how much money would be required, and if the war had continued we would have voted all that the executive branch of the Government thought it needed to carry on the war, just as we did during the days of the war. So they asked for $2,640,000,000, and the armistice came, and they knew at once, of course, they would not need so much money. They did not know exactly how much they would need.

Bureau chiefs could not tell, but they made as good an estimate as they could, and the sum total of what they asked was reduced to $1,400,000,000. Then the hearings were begun and bureau chiefs came before the committee and more information began to come through as to what would be required during this demobilization period, and after hearings were closed the Secretary reduced the estimate to $975,000,000, and then the committee, in view of all we had learned and from subsequent information which came through, exercising its best judgment, decided that $746,000,000 was sufficient to take care of the extra expenses incidental to the demobilization and at the same time take care of the regular Naval Establishment. So this bill carries $746,000,000. I have tried to work out what I thought might be in the minds of a good many Members of the House as to what part of this $746,000,000 may be temporary in its character and which would not recur in future appropriations. Now, the bill carries $179,000,000 increase for the Navy. That does not include anything for the new ships herein authorized.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In just a moment; let me finish what I am saying about that part of the appropriation which is due to temporary conditions. Now, with that taken out, that leaves $567,000,000 for the maintenance of the Navy, temporary and permanent. Now, we fixed the enlisted personnel of the Regular Navy just as it was before, 143,000 men. We allowed 82,000 men, what the Navy Department and the Army thought would be necessary to man the ships carrying food to our soldiers as long as they are in Europe and to carry troops back, and provided that as fast as that service ended men automatically would be mustered out of the service. So these 82,000 men, or an equal number of men, will drop out of the Navy as fast as the temporary service in which they are engaged is ended. Now, as somebody has said, I think the chairman, we have 25,000 marines in France. The whole strength of the Marine Corps when this temporary period passes by is only about 17,000 men, so that unless we provide for a temporary increase of the Marine Corps we would have no marines in the United States at all after July 1 next. Our whole Marine Corps, and more, too, would be in France, and, of course, we could not think of calling marines home ahead of the soldiers with whom they are serving abroad. So we provided that while the marines are in France there is to be a temporary increase of the Marine Corps of 25,000 men, and as fast as they are brought home they or an equal number are to be demobilized and mustered out of the service.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. This bill, of course, takes effect after the 30th of June next. Before any provision of this character could be made operative or put into operation thereafter probably several more months would transpire. Has the gentleman information that it would be 8 or 10 months or a year before the marines would be brought back from France?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that the marines are scattered all through France, and there are about 10,000 of them at Coblentz, in Germany, and I assume that they are the regular marines, and the chances are they may stay longer than anybody else.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Might I submit just this observation? Of course, at the time that the marines were sent to France everybody applauded; it was a splendid and proper thing to do, but the war is over and land operations on a great scale are ended. Having in mind the peculiar work the marines are designed to perform, would it not be wiser if we took every one out of France immediately and utilized them in Guam, Porto Rico, China, Hawaii, South America, Central America, and the West Indies——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say that the idea——

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Why should not that be done?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That the idea which the gentleman has expressed entered my mind, too.

But the Marine Corps officials thought that it would demoralize the Marine Corps to do that; that it would destroy the morale if the Government should say that these boys who are now over there as a part of the Army should be picked out, one by one, simply because they are marines, and brought home ahead of the soldiers who are performing a similar service abroad. And if by any chance it did reflect upon the Marine Corps, how unfair such action would be, in view of the magnificent service that they rendered their country upon the battle fields of Europe. And so, for myself, I abandoned the idea and said, "All right; let the marines come home just as the Army comes home and whenever the Army sees fit to bring them."

Now, the 82,000 men on the ships necessary to take the food over and bring the men back, plus the 25,000 extra men in the Marine Corps, makes a total of 107,000 extra temporary men carried in this bill out of a total of 225,000 men. I have tried to estimate how much these extra 107,000 men will add to this bill, and as near as one could get at it it probably would be in the neighborhood of $100,000,000; possibly more. So I have, therefore, pointed out in the item of men alone a temporary situation which, when it ends, will result in a reduction of $100,000,000 per year. You can go through the bill all the way and find items that run into the millions and which are evidently of a temporary character or greatly increased on account of this temporary condition. For example, there is one provision appropriating $20,000,000 to put back in the same condition in which we took them the ships, the yachts, and vessels of all sorts that were turned over to the Government when the war broke out and which we contracted to turn back in the same condition in which they were received, or substantially so; and the bill carries an item of $20,000,000 for this purpose, purely temporary, and which will not appear in future bills.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. EAGLE. The gentleman was speaking of the gross item of $746,000,000 carried in the bill, and in that connection was speaking of a considerable proportion of it being for an item which he designated as "demobilization."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. EAGLE. I wanted to ask him whether he means the demobilization of the naval forces down to a peace basis or the expense which the Naval Establishment incurred in the transport of troops, with reference to the demobilization of the Army?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman has stated it very much more accurately than I did.

Now, I have estimated there are probably in the neighborhood of $200,000,000 in this bill that can be ascribed almost wholly to a temporary situation.

Here is one item that runs into a good many millions of dollars. We have placed guns on all the merchant ships that were in trans-Atlantic service, running into the thousands. Those guns have all to be taken off those ships, have to be taken to the navy yards and repaired and stored, and it involves an expenditure of a good many million dollars to preserve, repair, and store these guns carried on ships in the overseas service. And so I think I am conservative in saying that at least $200,000,000 of this bill is of a temporary character, and that, taking the increase of the Navy out would reduce the bill for maintenance and operation of the regular Naval Establishment to $367,000,000. And I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that this amount is too large. But when you do not know where to cut, it is a very difficult thing to apply the knife with reason.

Mr. BUTLER. How can we do any better?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not think we can.

Mr. BUTLER. At this time.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the House will appreciate that when we cut the estimates from $2,640,000,000 to $746,000,000 we have applied the knife pretty generously, if not always wisely.

Mr. IGOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. IGOE. It is very noticeable in the Army demobilization work that a great many men are being retained in the military service doing work which should be turned over to civilians. I do not know what the situation might be on shore in the Navy. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the committee has gone into that matter, and whether effort has been made to turn over to civilians work which is now done by enlisted men?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that we did not take up that phase of it. There are a good many things that the committee could well busy itself with no doubt that would result in large savings and great convenience to the country now that hostilities have actually suspended.

Mr. IGOE. I do not know that it would be a saving, but it would be a convenience.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It would be a convenience.

Mr. BRITTEN. It is well known that in time of peace as well as in time of war that the enlisted personnel of the Marine Corps, as well as of the Navy, is utilized at naval stations and at naval yards for doing a large portion of the work that might be done by civilians, and might be done very economically.

Mr. IGOE. Not to such extent as it has been done during the war. What I was talking about was taking care of men who were relieved from the service. I know that thousands and thousands of men in the Army who are drawing wages at military posts, but in the end the expense would be as much.

Mr. BRITTEN. Probably greater; but that condition does not occur in the Army.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Referring to the naval schools at Newport and the Great Lakes Station, I assume they had in those a great many——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They had 50,000 at the Great Lakes Station at one time a few months ago.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Many of them were being trained, as I understand, to run merchant ships. I would like to inquire what the program is in that regard now. Is the Navy assuming to provide and train any men at all for the merchant ships, for the Shipping Board?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; except as they are needed for the Army in the transport and overseas service.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I did not refer to the transports. I referred to merchant ships.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The policy with respect to the Navy is purely temporary. It is not looking to the employment of ships for commercial purposes at all. That is a matter that will have to be thoroughly thrashed out by Congress and a policy formulated. But during this period, when we have to carry supplies to the troops abroad and carry the troops home, it is apparent, I think, that the proper thing for the Navy to do is to man transports and other ships needed by the Army as long as the emergency lasts, and we have put it in the bill that as soon as this work ceases these men will be mustered out of the service.

Mr. BRITTEN. In the last 10 days I understand 450,000 tons of German shipping were turned over to the Navy by the Shipping Board?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; for that purpose. As to what will ultimately be done with ships that come from any source, whether we build them or get them from Germany or from any other source, that, of course, will be a matter that will be handled by the Committee on the Merchant Marine and brought here through that committee.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I do not want to trespass unduly upon the gentleman's time, but at the beginning of the war we had transports operated by the Quartermaster's Department of the Army and transports operated by the Navy. Can the gentleman inform us now what the situation is? Does the Navy handle all the transports crossing the ocean?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. All overseas service is under the Navy.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. And no transports are being operated to France by the Army?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. None by the Army.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is there a provision in this bill for the payment of a bonus to men in the Navy when they are discharged, as in the Army?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No.

Mr. AUSTIN. I understood from the press that the British Government is providing for a bonus for the naval forces. Is any such increase provided here for the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The temporary increase in the pay of the Navy is continued and is made permanent by a provision in the bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Did the gentleman make the remark that all overseas service of our Government was under the control of the Navy?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So far as I know; yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I want to correct the gentleman in that. I think there is a considerable overseas service being done by private companies.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Not for the Army.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; for the Army. Let me continue this inquiry that I was making. I do not know that I understand exactly what the gentleman means, but during this war the French line, for instance, has been running steamers regularly and has been transporting troops for our Government, and has been transporting munitions. I know that from my own personal knowledge. That is being done by private contract, is it not, in some cases with private ship lines?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; that is true also with regard to British merchant ships that are carrying troops and supplies. I do not know of any American private lines that are carrying troops or supplies for the Army.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Two or three foreign private lines have been doing it for some time, and are doing it now.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; but I do not want to be diverted from the thing I have in mind. I was talking about the expense of the Navy, and I hope the gentleman's question is directed to that point.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; but if this question is not in accordance with the gentleman's argument I can wait until we reach that point. I understand there are 14 submarines provided for in addition to cruisers and battleships. Has the gentleman any information as to the relative fighting results achieved by submarines and battleships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will come to that later.

Mr. LITTLE. Very well.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman suffer an interruption?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I was very much interested in the statement the gentleman made as to the items carried in this bill which could be considered as temporary items of expense.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. And which could be omitted from future bills. Can the gentleman give us a brief statement of the items to which he refers when he states that there can probably be omitted from future bills an amount approximating $300,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. $200,000,000.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Give the general headings.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think I can do that. But first let me say that I stated that if the temporary items could be sifted out, in my judgment the bill would stand at about $367,000,000, and I thought that that was high. I judge from the question of the gentleman from Alabama, though perhaps I am mistaken, that he thinks otherwise. But I checked it up in this way: For 15 years prior to the war the expense of operation and maintenance of the Navy afloat and ashore ran rather uniformly at about 25 per cent of the investment in ships; that ratio is so well fixed that it is of considerable value in checking up this appropriation bill. I have calculated, with the assistance of the department, that the total investment in the fleet for the period covered by this bill to June 30, 1920, will be $1,263,000,000, and one-fourth of that sum would be $315,000,000, and I have allowed here $367,000,000 as the amount carried in the bill for the permanent establishment. And so, based upon past experience, it would seem as though we have allowed liberally in this bill.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman suffer another interruption?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. The gentleman and I are in full accord as to the necessity of economizing, and yet it would be a mistake now to let the House feel that by adequately providing in the next bill for the Navy we could perhaps reduce the amount now appropriated by some $375,000,000, because——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I was trying, if the gentleman will excuse me, to point out that not more than $367,000,000 of what we are now appropriating is for the permanent Navy, exclusive of the building program.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Here are items that the gentleman, perhaps, fails to take into account, and I do not mention them for the purpose of making the bill unpopular, because we must, until some international agreement as to limitation of armament is made, maintain a strong and efficient Navy, and must provide the money for that purpose, whether large or small. But on the authorized building program there will remain unappropriated, after the amounts carried in this bill, something like $486,000,000. That amount must be carried, perhaps, in the next two bills, which will increase the amount for the construction even of the existing Navy over the amount carried in this bill.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not discussed anything beyond this bill. I have not yet entered upon the matter of future expense or appropriations.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I understand.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. When I get to that I will have some facts to present. I do not want the gentleman to get ahead of me in my speech.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am glad to have the gentleman keep up with me, but I do not want him to get ahead of me.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. That is all right.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BRITTEN. In the gentleman's calculation of $367,000,000 as a possible point at which we may arrive next year——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; that is this year, in this bill.

Mr. BRITTEN. For the permanent establishment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. BRITTEN. On how many men in the permanent establishment is the gentleman basing that?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. One hundred and forty-three thousand men in the permanent establishment for the year of 1919–20.

Mr. BRITTEN. The gentleman knows that the Navy never will get back to 146,000 men in the enlisted personnel.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not know that.

Mr. BRITTEN. It can not be done with the ships that we have.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The question of the number of men needed is an open question all the while. For instance, it was testified before the committee that in time of war the British put about a thousand men on each of their greatest dreadnaughts, while we were carrying between 1,400 and 1,500; and I asked one officer if he did not think that if we put as many men on the ships in time of peace as the British put on theirs in time of war we were making a fair allowance of men; and I leave the gentleman to answer whether that is not true. And if we reduce the number to anything like the numbers carried on British vessels I think my colleague will agree with me that 146,000 men will be ample to take care of the ships which we provide for in this bill up to June 30, 1920.

Mr. BRITTEN. Oh, no; I could not possibiy agree to that, because we learned in the committee that the fighting ships built for the American Navy during the war will require 95,000 men. Now, we certainly had some Navy before we got into this war.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; but the gentleman will remember that we built during the war a great number of small craft. If we keep in commission all the 60 Eagles that Mr. Ford is going to build——

Mr. BRITTEN. I am disregarding them entirely.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. And if we keep in commission the 240 submarine chasers and the 342 destroyers that nobody ever dreamed we would need in order to have a proper proportion to our battleships, but which we had to have because of the submarine menace—if we should keep all those small ships in commission they would require more men just for those small ships that we built during the last year or so than we had in our entire Navy in 1916; but I would not assume for a moment that any administration of the Navy would undertake any such expensive and unnecessary policy. That is why I voted to stand on the proposition of 146,000 men for the ships that we already have, or will have prior to June 30, 1920, in the regular Navy.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Is it not a fact that a battleship or any capital ship, being a large machine shop in a way, the labor-saving machinery that is being installed and improved from time to time will naturally reduce the number of men necessary to man a warship properly?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The testimony seemed to indicate the reverse of what you would naturally expect on that.

Mr. TILSON. That is what I would expect if it was as it is in our factories.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They said this, that in the old days a ship when it got out of order was taken to a navy yard, or docked somewhere, and the machinery repaired, but that now these ships are so well supplied with machine shops and everything necessary for the making of repairs that the bulk of all the minor repairs, heretofore made at navy yards, are now made on board ship, and that therefore a larger number of men are required.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. ANTHONY. Can the gentleman tell us if they still have in commission the hundreds of little motor boats that were put in commission at the beginning of the war with the idea that they were going to use them as a defense against U-boats?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If they are in commission now they will not be by the time this bill goes into effect next July, because we have provided for only 225,000 men.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think they were the biggest farce that has been attempted.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield for an interruption?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUTLER. I will promise the gentleman as much time as is required to finish his very able speech. Has the gentleman the figures furnished to us by the Bureau of Yards and Docks showing the expenditures made in the last 18 months in these navy yards?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not got those figures here.

Mr. BUTLER. Did the gentleman count up the figures?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I do not recall just the total expenditures on yards and docks. I know it is enormous.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the gentleman know that it is over $300,000,000 on stations on land?

Mr. PADGETT. About $330,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank the gentleman. Did the gentleman look over these figures and separate the appropriations that were made by the Naval Affairs Committee and those obtained from lump sums?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; I did not. Without any doubt, during the war large expansions have been made in naval stations. A great many new stations have been started, and I suppose it is human nature that when you get a big establishment going you are rather likely to keep it going. That is particularly true of the aeroplane business. We built aeroplane stations at short distances along the coast. When the first estimates came in they asked for 12 or 15 more aero stations, and the committee has incorporated in this bill a provision requiring the Secretary of the Navy to abandon all stations on the Atlantic coast but three, one on the Gulf coast and one on the Pacific coast. A thorough examination of new projects in navy yards and naval stations, going back as near as we can to where we were before the war, as to the number of stations and curtailing new enterprises where they were no longer needed will net a good many million dollars to the Government, and I have no doubt that that will be undertaken in the next Congress by the Naval Committee under the able leadership of my calleague [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I noticed in the newspapers a statement that the Secretary of the Navy has just purchased land where an aero station was located—I think along the Massachusetts coast—at a total expense of $4,000,000. Does the gentleman know of his own knowledge whether the Secretary of the Navy is still acquiring stations for aero service along the coast?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The chances are that that is a site on which a plant has already been built, and the Secretary may be acquiring the land; I do not know about that.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I gathered from the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that the Navy Department had been purchasing land for naval purposes out of lump-sum appropriations. Is it possible that that it true?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will let the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer that question.

Mr. BUTLER. I hesitate to say, but I believe that is true. I noticed in the newspaper that there has been a large sum taken out of a lump-sum appropriation for the purchase of land at Cape May for an aeroplane station.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether the committee in its long hearings went into an investigation, as did the Committee on Appropriations, seeking to withdraw appropriations and authorizations for the Naval Establishment?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say to the gentleman that our work has been preparing this bill, which provides for the Navy for the fiscal year beginning next July and running until the July following.

Mr. STAFFORD. You make no provision whatever for the curtailment of authorizations carried during the war period?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. This is a bill pure and simple for supplying the Navy with money to run it from July 1, 1919, to July 1, 1920.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McKENZIE. Has it not been the policy in the past to permit the Secretary of the Navy to purchase land for any purpose without being authorized by Congress?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think not, but during the war blanket authority was conferred upon the executive branch of the Government, which was undoubtedly exercised through the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and some other departments of the Government, and quite likely that is where the authority arose. We gave the President blanket powers to spend money for the purchase of land, for the taking over of property, and doing almost anything for the prosecution of the war. There is no provision of that kind in this bill, neither is there any provision for the purchase of land.

Mr. McKENZIE. I want to say that I thought that evil practice had been confined to the Military Establishment, but it seems that it has not.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. No; it spreads if given a chance, no doubt.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that there was no provision in the bill for the purchase of land?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If the gentleman has found a provision I will stand corrected.

Mr. MANN. Here is a provision for $25,000,000 for aeroplanes, any portion of which can be used for the purchase of land.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. For the purchase of a site upon which to erect a lighter-than-air station. You are correct, but that is the only one that I recall, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois for the correction.

Now, I would like to go back to the question of cost of the Navy. If all the ships heretofore authorized and all the ships proposed to be authorized in this bill are built within a reasonable time, say by 1924 or 1925, there would be an outlay for new ships of approximately $200,000,000 per year. If you add that to approximately $350,000,000 for operation and maintenance to the Navy, I do not see how we can get away from a bill every year for the next four or five years of $550,000,000, or possibly a little more, depending upon the price of labor and material.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. I am astounded at that. Great Britain, which has a navy twice as big as ours——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think the gentleman is wrong about the relative size of the British Navy and ours, with those additions to our Navy which are contemplated by this bill.

Mr. MILLER of Minnesota. Well, I should say perhaps not right now, but, say, two years back. It was then about twice as great as ours, and their entire budget, as I understand, for upkeep and building and everything, is only $250,000,000. Is it possible that we with a Navy half as large are going to expend $550,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am including $200,000,000 per year for new construction for the next four or five years. It will take that long to build the Navy we are now projecting, and when it is built it would be fairly comparable in strength with the British Navy if Great Britain in the meantime does not also expand its navy. But further, as to relative expenses, the gentleman must remember that the British sailor gets very small pay. The officer gets much less pay than the officer of the United States Navy. We pay ordinary seamen now as a minimum $33 a month, and we propose in this bill to make that temporary increase which we put on during the war permanent, upon the theory that $33 a month and board is not unreasonable pay for those defending the country.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. What is the pay of a British sailor?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am not quite sure, but perhaps the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] can say what a sailor in the British Navy gets.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; it is less than half what we used to pay. They have several rates of pay, but I have always understood that it was less than half of what was paid by us when we were paying the rate of $17.50. I think it is about $5 to $7 a month.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. So that if we completed all of the ships we have already authorized, and added to them these 20 proposed in this bill, our annual appropriation for the next five years could not, in my judgment, be less than $550,000,000. At the end of that time what will our situation be, provided we stop there? The total investment in the fleet by the 1st of July, 1924, we will say, which would give five years to build it all, would be $1,935,000,000. One-quarter of that, which was the rule for 15 years, would mean an annual charge of $484,000,000 to keep that Navy up. Of course there might be some reductions, due to the fact that in 1924 we will have a large number of old ships, running all the way from 20 to 30 years old, and they would probably have to be put out of commission or put in reserve. This would cut the expense considerably.

Mr. SNYDER. Is the gentleman correct in his figures when he spoke of the investment in the Navy being $1,000,000,000?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The total investment, when both of these three-year programs are completed, would be $1,935,000,000, and one-quarter of that—for upkeep and operation—would be $484,000,000; in round numbers, $500,000,000. So that, as it looks to me, conservatively speaking, if we go forward with the completion of the existing program and the new program it will cost us to complete it and to keep it up while it is being completed over $500,000,000 a year, and when completed it can be maintained for something slightly over $500,000,000 a year.

Mr. SHERWOOD. I see by the cablegrams of yesterday that the powers have substantially agreed upon general disarmament.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; and that is entirely consistent with this bill.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Yes; but you authorize the Secretary to go ahead. Why that authorization if it is not necessary to build them?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It may not be necessary, and in that event we will not build them.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is the necessity now for that kind of legislation; and what is the necessity for dreadnaughts anyway?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I am a little surprised that the gentlemen should ask me that question.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The Queen Elizabeth was the greatest dreadnaught that was ever set afloat. She carried a turret of 15-inch guns and she was put out of business by one German submarine.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes; but I want to call the attention of the gentleman to this, that back there in the Kiel Canal was a latent power, a masterful fleet, anxious and ready to come out and destroy the commerce and transports of its enemy did it but dare to do so, and I ask the gentleman what prevented the German fleet from coming out of its hiding and destroying the transports carrying the soldiers of America to the fields of France?

Mr. SHERWOOD. I will answer that by asking the gentleman what prevented the English fleet from coming out?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Why, they were simply lying there hoping and praying that the German fleet would come out.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Why did they not come out and go after the German fleet?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The British fleet accomplished its purpose without doing that. The destruction of the German fleet was of no particular consequence. The business of the British fleet and our fleet was to keep the sea clear for the transports, for the soldiers to cross over, for the supplies, for the ammunition, and all of that, for the allied armies, and when the British fleet did that, in conjunction with ours, it performed the great purpose for which a fleet exists. No sensible commander, of course, would take these great instruments of war, costing $30,000,000 each, into a mine-infested region, such as they would have to pass through in going to the Kiel Canal. But men must remember that if it had not been for the power of those great ships of the allied fleets the German men-of-war would have come out and would have raided the seas, destroyed the commerce, sunk our transports, and we could not have landed either a pound of goods or a soldier upon the soil of France. [Applause.] So it is idle to talk about doing away with big ships, or that the big ships served no useful purpose in the recent war.

Mr. TILSON. Were not the German ships just as impotent in the Kiel Canal as they would have been at the bottom of the North Sea?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. That is what I say, and the purpose of the English and the American commanders was accomplished without taking the risk of sinking these valuable ships by going in there and attempting to destroy the German fleet. They had performed their purpose when they made it impossible for the German fleet to interfere with the purpose of America and the allies in the war.

Mr. STAFFORD. With the German fleet now impotent, where is there any need of a great Navy to rival the great fleet of England, with England as our ally?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I will say this, that circumstances of war never appear twice alike in the history of the world. If men have not learned something from this war, if men have not learned the need of being able to take care of themselves, then I am afraid some of the most valuable lessons incident to the war have escaped them.

I want to say now, as I stated in the beginning, that I never want to see this Nation again put in a position where it must rely upon the protection of a friendly power to take care of its coasts, its commerce, or its transports carrying the soldiers of the Republic. [Applause.] I sincerely hope that the nations of the world will adopt a disarmament policy at the conference now in session at Versailles. But if this can not be brought about, I believe we should adopt such a naval policy as will enable us to take care of ourselves and the great interests we have in the world. If disarmament fails America should not rely for its defense upon the generosity of another nation, no matter how friendly that nation may be, or how closely it may be tied to us by bonds of affection, language, or laws. So that I say I am in favor of building a Navy which will of ourselves, if that is the decree of the world, take care of ourselves. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Then, as I understand the gentleman's proposal, it is to provide a Navy so as to have it alone give protection to transports and our merchant marine to fight on a foreign soil?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Oh, I do not know where we will be called upon to fight. That is an old question that clogged men's minds in days gone by in this House. Whether our soldiers should fight on one kind of soil or on another. It matters not the soil, if the reason for fighting exists America will always go where the enemy is no matter where they may be. [Applause.] But I hope, as you do, that America will have to fight no more, and I believe it will contribute to the disarmament of the world if the world knows in advance that in the event reduction of armament fails in this great crisis, much as it may be against our will, our interests in the world are such that we can not afford to rely on others to protect those interests, but we will build such a Navy as may be adequate for that purpose, hoping and praying, as we will, that the world may see that a continued increase in armament is unnecessary and that an agreement may be brought about especially between these two great friendly peoples—the British and America. Why should it not be brought about? There is no reason in the world why Britain should suspect America any more than America should suspect Britain. America and Great Britain should sail the seas on even terms. We should be able to take care of ourselves, asking no favors, courting no quarrel with any other nation, our merchant ships going out upon every sea, as they will from now on if the next Congress is as wise as I think it is going to be. All of our interests, our extensive coast lines, our great cities like New York and Boston lying upon our seaboard, our great South American interests and duties, the Panama Canal, our Pacific and Asiatic possessions, all of these require that this mighty Republic, blessed of God in material resources as no other nation has been blessed in all the tide of time, should henceforth be able and willing to take care of itself on the sea or on the land wherever it is necessary to defend American institutions, American rights, or American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman from Michigan object to giving the data about which I inquired?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman from Kansas wanted to know, I think, about the relative value of the submarine and the battleship.

Mr. LITTLE. I wanted to know if any data had been presented to the committee by those with experience in the relative fighting qualities——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. They are not comparable at all; they are wholly dissimilar weapons.

Mr. LITTLE. Suppose——

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Of course, the submarine did give to the world a whole lot of trouble.

Mr. LITTLE. I see that the naval program contemplates the building of 12 battleships and cruisers and 14 submarines. Now, if the two were to meet, which would achieve a victory?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I think I grasp the gentleman's question and I think I know what he has in mind. Superficially, one might think that the powerful ships are not of so much use, but, after all, whoever controls the surface of the ocean controls the ocean. Whoever controls the surface, in spite of anybody else, will get his ships through, as the allies did in the war just closed.

Mr. LITTLE. Which would control the surface, the 14 submarines or the 12 battleships?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Which did control the surface?

Mr. LITTLE. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Well, I am turning the question back upon the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLE. No; I stated specifically that I am seeking for information. If the gentleman does not know, just say so.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Very well.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, does the gentleman remember any case where a submarine sunk any armed ship going at a rate faster than 15 knots an hour in the whole period of the war?

Mr. LITTLE. And does the gentleman remember an instance, relatively speaking, where a submarine was sunk by a battleship in the same way at 15 miles an hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE].

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, there is one consideration in connection with whatever Navy we have and whatever Navy we may authorize which it has appeared to me for some years, and now appears to me, that neither the Navy Department nor the Committee on Naval Affairs has ever given sufficient, if any, consideration to, but which is, however, of vital importance.

I do not in the remarks I want to submit to you have any motive in my mind for the submission of them, except to induce you to think about the point and conclude whether it is worthy of mature consideration; not now necessarily, but in due course.

Have you ever reflected on the fact that this marvelous, modern civilization of ours, the most wonderful which the world has ever known, is founded more largely upon petroleum than upon any other single material thing except food? And yet, while we are building a tremendous merchant marine—and I made the opening address for it three years ago, and in favor of the Congress making an appropriation of $50,000,000 to undertake it, since private individuals would not sufficiently carry forward the work which properly pertains, under our American system of government, to private initiative and enterprise—and while we are building this wonderful Navy with vast funds, neither one of them can perform their functions without oil.

Not a factory in this land could run without oil. And therefore the shoes on your feet, if the crude petroleum production should cease, would probably not be manufactured to-day, but the condition would be similar to that when our fathers made the shoes for the children in their families. Each parent would make the shoes for his own children. The clothing worn by every person within the sound of my voice would cease to be manufactured at wholesale, economically, and with taste; but the wool would be cut from the sheep and carded and dyed in walnuts and woven by the loom, and our clothes made again by our wives, even as our mothers made the clothing of many of us who are here. The cities would soon starve, because oil must run the locomotives into the cities to carry food and fuel. The populations would spread out over the country; they would devastate the areas. The whole of your civilization would break down. With that thought, crude and hastily expressed, in order to make a predicate for the thing I had in mind to say, permit me to say that in the year 1917, as I have the figures, in an imperfect way and only in the way of approximation, there were produced within the United States a total of about 300,000,000 barrels of oil, but there were consumed within the United States during that same year of 1917 a total of about 335,000,000 barrels of oil.

That means that the consumption exceeded the production by about 35,000,000 barrels in the single year of 1917.

Now, on January 1 of the year 1917 there was above ground within the United States, in pipe lines, in tank cars and in storage, and in every form, a total of about 165,000,000 barrels of oil. That means that if that current rate of relative consumption and production be maintained within five years' time there will be not one drop of crude petroleum above ground in the United States.

Now, then, we are building, at an expense so enormous that it staggers the imagination much more the comprehension, a merchant marine to carry the products of this marvelous land of food and fiber, and of manufacture, and of mines and mining and forest, to every corner of the civilized world. We are building, at an expense that staggers not the comprehension alone but the imagination as well, a Navy to protect the legitimate rights of American citizens upon the high seas wherever our flag shall float under the heavens. I have helped to do it. I am going, during all the time I remain in Congress, at each opportunity, to help do that vigorous American thing. And yet the whole of that Navy's propulsion power is oil; its lubrication is oil; the one the crude product exuding or draining from the wells, the other the manufactured product. Notwithstanding that fact, and notwithstanding the fact that recently we came within three months of the exhaustion of the petroleum and naphtha and gasoline supplies of this country—when our Government inaugurated the gasless Sundays last winter we were within a few weeks of the exhaustion of the supplies of oil necessary to our processes, not of industry alone but the processes of prosecuting this war for civilization. Still, the Navy Department has never recommended—or, if so, it has never been printed—and the Naval Affairs Committee has never considered—or, if so, it has not given the Congress to understand that it has considered—the question of storing an adequate supply of crude petroleum in its own receptacles for the use of the merchant marine and the Navy.

It takes about between 20,000,000 and 30,000,000 barrels of crude petroleum per year to run the United States Navy. Where does the Navy get that, gentlemen? The department buys it from the pipe-line companies, the storage-tank companies, and institutions that have prepared themselves to buy cheaply and to store for profit the great output of petroleum as and when market conditions render such purchase and storage profitable to them. And so, while crude petroleum in the great southwestern fields of Louisiana, of Oklahoma, and notably of Texas, is now less than $2 per barrel, the Navy Department is now paying a large profit for the current supplies of crude petroleum with which to propel its ships on the sea, and will continue to pay increased prices as increasing demands follow. Is that common sense? Is it national safety? It is not, gentlemen. The Navy should erect and own its own storage and keep it completely filled at all times.

It is roughly estimated that for 50 cents per barrel this Nation can acquire the lands, the pipe-line connections, a sufficient number of 50,000-barrel steel storage tanks with which to store an annual supply of crude petroleum a year in advance, and once the storage tankage is erected it will last a lifetime.

We should authorize the Navy Department to construct storage to hold at least 25,000,000 barrels; that should cost about $12,500,000, in round numbers. By forethought this Navy Department, if authorized by this Congress, can build enough storage capacity to take care of 25,000,000 barrels of oil—buy it in advance at the market price at less than $2 a barrel. That is to say, for 50 cents a barrel, or $12,500,000, it can acquire all tankage and connections in which to put this oil by, and then you keep a permanent store of a year's supply of fuel oil for the American Navy. Whenever new fields are developed new supplies can be emptied, at the least possible price, in the interest of efficiency and safety, into these storage vaults, wherever the Navy may choose to locate them, in proximity to the deep-water ports; and then, instead of being helpless and dependent upon the price and quantity at which private industry will give the Navy and the merchant marine their supplies of oil, our Navy and merchant marine would thus be rendered secure for their future activities.

Here is an interesting fact, gentlemen: The greatest oil well the world has ever seen was in Mexico. They celebrated one day last January the one-hundred-millionth barrel that flowed out of that one well. Within half an hour after it had been flowing at the rate of 100,000 barrels a day, it ceased absolutely to flow a barrel of oil and went into salt water.

That is the Lord Cowdrey oil well, which has been the chief supply of Great Britain for furnishing petroleum to the British Navy, which has prevented the submarines from destroying commerce and making a German victory. That went into salt water within an hour or so, crude petroleum not being like coal in the ground, where its supply is known in advance, but is exhausted without notice. It must be taken out and stored in steel vaults in order that a certain supply in advance may be assured.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to the fact that at any time the supply of petroleum adequate to the needs of the people of the country, and particularly the Navy and the merchant marine, may suddenly cease, and it would be a tragedy the like of which you can scarce conceive if, all of a sudden, an adequate supply of crude petroleum requisite for the Navy and the merchant marine should suddenly cease, whereas by the expenditure of a relatively small sum of money we can provide against that contingency, and we ought to do it.

Mr. Chairman, whilst speaking, and having finished that branch of what I came here to say, I want to say just this: It is not exactly clear to me how we should vote upon this specific $700,000,000 item to provide for a second three-year naval building program. It seems to me that the President of the United States had a perfect right to communicate by cable with his Secretary of the Navy. It would seem to me that the Secretary of the Navy would have a perfect right in turn to communicate the wishes, the thoughts, the sentiments at this critical time of the President of the United States to the chairman of the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

Perhaps it was entirely wise for that chairman to communicate the same to the membership of this House in order to induce a unanimity of report. But to save the life of me I can not see why any of these gentlemen, from the President down to the Members of this House, should put a scare out among us without giving us full information and the reasons for their conclusions. [Applause.]

Now, I have followed President Wilson in this House for six years, as you gentlemen all know, in season and out of season, when I understood him.

I am willing in this instance to do anything he asks me to do if he tells me or lets me know directly that in the present position of tremendous responsibility in which he is placed he needs my support in this connection. I would like to know what it is about. I happen to have 300,000 people who have selected me to do their voting here. They may not be the most important people to him in this world; they may not be the most important people to any of you gentlemen in this world; but they are the most important people to themselves and to me that there are upon this earth. [Applause.] I am willing to burden them, in common with the rest of the citizens of this Nation, no more and no less, to build the most splendid Navy that floats on the high seas if an exigency now exists or shall arise which, in the judgment of the splendid Executive of the people of the whole United States, makes it not requisite alone but indispensable and necessary to authorize it, and I would do that, subordinating my own individual judgment, if need be.

Primarily I believe in a Navy that rides the sea not by permission of any other nation on earth. [Applause.] I do not believe in asking the permission of any nation on earth how big a Navy we shall build. I do not believe that the rights of America should be allowed to be violated anywhere. I do not believe that a league of nations ought ever to be formed which is capable of becoming a Frankenstein monster of sufficient physical force in turn to compel the obedience of this Nation, and if I had the power to prevent it it would never be done. [Applause.] I am in favor of a league of nations founded on moral understanding of minds and spirit, but not founded on force. I would be willing to vote for this item if it had in it a proviso that such $700,000,000 additional three-year program should become obsolete if disarmament should be declared throughout the world as the result of the peace conference. But if we must vote for it before such peace treaty be finally ratified, I shall vote for the second three-year building program, because so long as I stay in Congress never by my vote or my action shall that proud flag that floats there ever be humiliated on account of our not being prepared to defend its glory and its honor wherever American interests and American pride and American honor dictate that it shall go. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] 40 minutes.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I want to indorse the conclusions reached and support the arguments advanced by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY], and to echo his splendid sentiment in regard to the Navy of the United States. As he has taken up the present and future of the Navy, I desire in the time allotted me to speak of what the Navy has done in the great conflict just brought to a close.

Out of the mist and the snow of the morning of December 26 a great battle fleet entered the harbor of New York and in the majesty of its power steamed past the Statue of Liberty. It came as a messenger of a conflict won, a silent victory, but a triumph as complete and overwhelming as any ever won by the American Navy. We are too near the tragic events of the great struggle to write with accuracy and fullness the log of our Navy's brilliant achievements. The complete record of the valor, the heroism and sublime courage of the officers and men who manned those ships, and the unselfish spirit and devotion to duty of those whose fighting strength at home carried forward the organization which made victory possible, will come only through the perspective of the future. To-day we can but briefly appraise their gallant deeds, but we can and we do, in the name of the Republic, extend to them all our heartfelt thanks. For all time they have earned the gratitude of their country in maintaining the high principles for which our Republic entered the conflict, and for which they fought and died. The honor and the glory of the flag was safe in their hands.

In the words of Rudyard Kipling, "The Navy is very old and very wise. Much of her wisdom is on record and available for reference, but more of it works in the unconscious blood of those who serve her."

The magnitude of our Army and the dazzling record of its brilliant achievements may in some degree obscure the service rendered to our country and to its allies by the American Navy, but it must ever be remembered that our ships were a part of the great war forces which kept open the highways of the deep and made possible the final triumph of the allied armies. Had the command of the oceans slipped from our hands those armies would have languished and been beaten back for lack of support in men and material. Had the scepter of the seas passed to our foes, our own Army would never have inscribed on its banners the imperishable names of Cantigny, Belleau Wood, Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel, and the Argonne. The one essential and indisputable element of victory was the supremacy of the allied fleet. The New York Evening Post in commenting upon this feature refers to the late Admiral Mahan, the great naval theoretician and expert:

> Mahan, thou shouldst be living at this hour! The great naval theoretician, steeped in history and in fact, the American who first taught the English fully to know what their sea power had wrought, would surely have thrilled with satisfaction if he could have lived to see the amazing spectacle of to-day. A "fleet in being" has done its perfect work. With little actual fighting, its heavier ships having scarcely been engaged during the four years of war, there it has ridden at anchor on the north coast of Scotland. Apparently it was doing nothing. It looked as idle as painted ships upon a painted ocean. But in reality it was exerting irresistible and decisive power. * * * The grand fleet in harbor has exerted the indivisible compulsion across the North Sea which finally dragged the enemy vessels to the most impressive and astounding naval capitulation ever seen.

In order that Congress may judge of the work of the Navy, let me give, briefly, some interesting figures. Of the 2,079,800 men transported to France since April 7, 1917, 911,047 were taken over in United States transports and 40,499 in other American ships, or 46¼ per cent of the total carried. 48¼ per cent were conveyed in British ships and 5½ per cent in ships of other nations. Of the total strength of the naval escort guarding all those convoys 3⅛ per cent was furnished by France, 14⅛ by Great Britain, and 82¾ by the American Navy. A splendid testimonial to the efficiency of the convoy operations lies in the fact that not one of the eastbound American transports was torpedoed or damaged by the enemy, and only three sunk on the return voyage.

Utmost secrecy was imperative in the operation of this transport service. The fleets, often numbering as high as 30 ships, plowed through the perilous seas in utter darkness and in imminent danger of collision. Under the watchful care of the Bureau of Operations, the courses of these ships across the ocean and through the war zone were directed by the wireless from shore stations, where every movement of enemy submarines was charted and from whence flashed warnings and directions across the deep to the approaching ships. In this convoy work—arduous and exacting—all our destroyers, cruisers, and many of our older battleships were constantly engaged. As Secretary Daniels has truly said:

> The history of the convoy operations in which our naval forces have taken part, due to which we have been able so successfully to transport such a large number of our military forces abroad and so many supplies for the Army, is a chapter in itself. It is probably our major operation in this war, and will in the future stand as a monument to both the Army and the Navy as the greatest and most difficult troop transporting effort which has ever been conducted across seas.

There was nothing spectacular about this grinding duty. Winter and summer, by day and by night, in the fog and in the rain and the ice, it demanded constant vigilance, unceasing toil, and extreme endurance. The work of this hazardous service was endless and its hardships and dangers are barely realized. During the winter storms of the North Atlantic the maddened seas all but engulfed these tiny but staunch destroyers, when for days they breasted the fury of the gale and defied the very elements in their struggle for the mastery. No sleep then for the tired crew; no hot food; no dry clothes. Yet despite it all, with each hour perhaps the last, with death stalking through the staggering hulls, not a man—to the everlasting glory of the American Navy—not a man but felt himself especially favored in being assigned that duty.

Sir Eric Geddes during his recent visit paid this high compliment to our service:

> I know that you will appreciate what demands the present conditions of sea warfare impose upon this type of craft. They scour the seas, either hunting the submarine or keeping a careful watch over the valuable human lives, equipment, and transports intrusted to their care to escort. I have both traveled in and been escorted by American destroyers, and I know their high standard. They are an essential part of the fighting strength of the fleet, and, together with the cruisers, they are the watchdogs of the allied trade and the terror of the U boat. It will convey some idea of the strain imposed upon the vessels and their crews when I tell you that each American destroyer in European waters steams between 4,000 and 5,000 miles a month. For hard work, constant vigilance, and almost perpetual discomfort, this record is hard to beat even in this great war of universal strain and hardship.

As an indication of the extent of the work done by our naval vessels in the war zone, let me submit the averages of miles steamed per month:

Destroyers	275,000
Mine sweepers	10,000
Mine layers	10,000
Battleships and submarines	90,000
Submarine chasers	121,000
Miscellaneous patrol craft	120,000

Or a total of 626,000 miles per month, and these figures do not include troopships, transports, cargo carriers, or merchant ships plying through the war zone.

During July and August, 1918, 3,444,012 tons of shipping were escorted to and from France by American escort vessels; of the above amount, 1,577,735 tons were escorted in and 1,864,677 tons were escorted out of French ports. Of the tonnage escorted into French ports during this time, only 16,988 tons, or 0.009 per cent, were lost through enemy action; and of the tonnage escorted out from French ports only 27,858 tons, or 0.013 per cent, were lost through the same cause. During the same period 259,604 American troops were escorted to France by United States escort vessels without the loss of a single man through enemy action.

On the day hostilities ceased we had in the service in the various branches, over 600,000 men and 9,600 yeowomen and 1,386 women nurses, divided as follows:

	Enlisted force.	Officers.	Totals.
Regular Navy	216,644	10,588	227,232
Reserves	286,826	23,137	309,963
Marine Corps	70,527	2,430	72,957
Coast Guard	5,727	678	6,405
Grand total	579,724	36,833	616,557

At the close of the war approximately 5,000 officers and 70,000 enlisted men were serving in our naval forces in Europe, a number exceeding our total naval strength before the war.

On the day war was declared 197 ships were in commission; at its close there were 2,003, of which 338 were in foreign waters. When Germany surrendered her fleet we had abroad 9 battleships—the New York, Texas, Wyoming, Florida, Arkansas, Nevada, Utah, Arizona, Oklahoma—and 74 destroyers.

As to the smaller craft of the fleet, the patrol of our harbors and bays, their work was ceaseless and under conditions the most trying; 713 scout patrol boats and 89 subchasers were attached to the eight naval districts on the East and Gulf coasts of the United States. No hope of enemy action, no chance for individual achievement against the foe inspired them in their daily task; their only incentive was in the conscious pride of a duty faithfully performed, and yet, without complaint at the lack of opportunity, they did their part and rendered invaluable service.

And what of the officers and men of the transport service and of the mercantile marine, the hardy mariners who drove their ships through the fog and the storm and the darkness of the death-infested ocean? At best, even in peace times, seamanship is a comfortless and a cheerless calling. But in war, to the ordinary perils of the sea are added unusual hardships, which reach their maximum in the dangers and terrors of the war zone—the attack without warning of the invisible foe, whose presence too frequently is known only by a terrific explosion which casts the hapless crew adrift on surging seas, leagues from a friendly shore. Think of the terrific strain under which these men performed their perilous tasks. Gun crews on continuous duty, ever ready with the shot that might save the ship; the men below in the engineer's force expecting every moment to receive the fatal blast which would entrap them in a hideous death; the watch, ceaseless in its vigil by day and by night, peering through the darkness and the mist, conscious that upon their alertness depended the lives of all. Yet under these conditions of unprecedented hardships each man performed his duty with the highest degree of courage and self-sacrifice. [Applause.]

Let me recite one of the many instances of the matchless courage of the men engaged in this hazardous service. Last September the Mount Vernon, with several hundred sick and wounded soldiers on board, was torpedoed when a short distance out from Brest. Thirty-six men of the engineer force met their death in the fire and steam and boiling water of the stokehole. With two compartments flooded, their comrades dead and dying, with a seeming certainty that the attack would continue, which would mean that every man in the compartment where the torpedo struck would be drowned or burned to death, yet despite it all when volunteers were called for, to man the still undamaged furnaces to keep up steam for the run back to port, every man of the force stepped forward and said he was ready to go below.

In aviation also the Navy won distinction, and well-merited praise can justly be bestowed upon the officers and men for their accomplishments in this dangerous service. During the war we established abroad 2 repair and assembly bases, 4 kite-balloon stations, 18 seaplane stations, 5 bombing-plane stations, and 3 dirigible stations, all manned with Navy personnel, which included 624 officers, 97 observers, and over 15,000 enlisted men.

And what shall we say of the marines, the intrepid soldiers of the sea, winning with the victorious American Army imperishable glory on the battle fields of France? We need say but little, for the world to-day acclaims their valor. For matchless courage and supreme bravery, with heroism which nothing could daunt, with dogged determination which nothing could overcome, with spirit which nothing could conquer, the record of the United States Marines, fighting with the equally brave and equally courageous soldiers of the American Army, is without parallel in the history of military achievements.

Without relief, without sleep, without food or water they held the lines in those grim days of the terrific onslaught of the German drive; held when to yield would have meant irretrievable disaster; held and saved Paris. Exhausted to the very limit of human endurance, with ranks decimated, fighting in American fashion and with American daring, they met attack after attack and charge after charge. They beat to its knees the invincible Prussian Guard, which had been thrown in to "show these amateurs how to fight"; then smashing forward, they hurled back, ever back, in disorder and defeat, the legions of the Imperial Army. In all the annals of war there is no story comparable with this.

But there are many who will never fight again. They will be mourned by fathers and mothers, sisters and wives, and they will be revered by the millions of Americans who will pay them homage everlasting. Every spot where American blood has been shed for American honor is hallowed ground, every deed a sacred memory, every grave a consecrated shrine. Belleau Wood and Chateau-Thierry are forever written on the pages of American history. With Lexington and New Orleans, with Gettysburg and Antietam and San Juan they will endure, imperishable monuments to the bravery and courage of American heroes, the vindication of democracy and the triumph of liberty and of righteousness.

Let me speak of other achievements of the Navy, accomplishments of incalculable assistance to our fighting forces and potent factors in the final triumph. To avert the submarine menace and prevent the destruction of tankers carrying oil to the allied fleets in the North Sea a great pipe line was constructed across Scotland, thus reducing both the danger and distance of supplying the ships with fuel. This project, so startling to our British cousins, was carried forward to completion with the same energy and quiet determination that characterized every undertaking to which the Navy set its hand.

Over 56,000 American mines were laid in strategical areas in European waters, the personnel engaged in these activities alone calling for 6,700 men, a dangerous occupation and one fraught with trying hardships and ceaseless toil. But the work of supreme magnitude and importance was the laying of a great mine barrage, 25 miles wide and 230 miles in length, from Scotland to Norway, across the deep waters of the North Sea. This daring project had its inception in the Bureau of Ordnance in April, 1917, and called for the planting of upward of 70,000 mines from the surface to distances of 250 to 300 feet below the surface. Owing to the great depths between coasts, in places exceeding 800 feet, a special type of mine had to be devised. This undertaking was carried forward by our Navy working in conjunction with the British fleet, 80 per cent of which was performed by our men, and while the work was only completed a few days before the termination of the war, from reports received it is evident that at least 10 German submarines met their doom in this network of mines.

To the achievements of the Navy, in erecting great training camps, destroyer and aviation bases, hospital units, in training thousands of men for oversea duty, the arming of merchant ships, the building of a vast fleet of smaller vessels, the construction of great warehouses, the manufacture of heavy guns and their mounts, the production of powder, and the purchasing of enormous quantities of supplies, must be added the most spectacular achievement of all—the repair of interned German ships. When these vessels, many of them of the largest type of trans-Atlantic liners, were taken over by our Government it was found that the machinery of several had been seriously damaged by the maliciously planned and carefully executed sabotage of the crews. The principal injury was to the cylinders and other parts of the engines, and, as these passenger ships were potent factors in the transportation of troops, their immediate repair was a vital necessity. To resort to the usual practice of casting new cylinders would have involved too great a loss of time. Nothing daunted by the magnitude of the task, our Navy undertook the repair of these broken cylinders by employing the system of electric welding, and so successfully was this work accomplished that during all the months of service in which these vessels have been engaged, not a single defective weld has developed. All honor to the officers who risked their professional reputations and carried forward to complete success an accomplishment which expert engine manufacturers considered impossible. To the notations left by the Germans on many of the broken cylinders, "Can not be repaired," the genius of American experts and the skill of American mechanics gave the answer, "It will be and it has been done."

Let me speak, too, of the great railway battery of 14-inch Navy guns, manned exclusively by bluejackets. These huge guns, built originally for our new battle cruisers, were mounted on great railway trucks. Each gun had a complement of 12 specially constructed cars for the operation of the battery and the maintenance of its crew. There were armored ammunition cars and machine-shop cars, barrack, kitchen, crane, and radio cars, making the battery independent of any permanent artillery base. With a range of 30 miles, these guns were the most powerful of any on the line and did splendid execution in the closing days of the conflict.

The Navy gave not alone of its strength and its skill and its blood but of its substance as well, for in the last two liberty loans the men in the Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard subscribed for over $66,000,000 of bonds.

When we speak of the Navy we speak, too, of the Coast Guard, for upon the declaration of war this important branch of the service, with all its personnel and equipment, came under the jurisdiction of the Navy Department, and the record made since then is most commendable. The service was at once placed upon a war basis, additional men were enlisted, vessels equipped, stations brought up to the highest degree of efficiency, and the lines of coastal communication extended. In every way in which service could be rendered in the prosecution of the war this branch of our fighting force performed its duty fully and effectively. By their self-sacrificing devotion to a hazardous calling the officers and men of this service merit the highest praise. Their bravery and their unflinching response to duty in times of disaster endows their perilous vocation with the noblest attributes of humanity—the saving of lives and ministering to those in distress.

On November 21 five American dreadnaughts were in that far-flung double line of allied ships through which passed in surrender the dreadnaughts, cruisers, and destroyers of the second most powerful navy in the world. When Admiral Beatty set his famous signal, "The German flag is to be hauled down at 3.57 and is not to be hoisted again without permission," the work of our Navy as a battle unit in the war zone was over. Too high a tribute can not be paid the officers and men of our Navy who faced the dangers of war and the perils of the sea with exalted courage and unfaltering determination. Their loyalty and patriotism have never been questioned, their valor and heroism never doubted. By their deeds they have added new luster to the glorious annals of the American Navy.

Let me quote the noble words of the great commander in chief of our American Army in France, Gen. Pershing, who last June sent this message to our naval forces:

> Permit me to send to the force commander, the officers, and men of the American Navy in European waters, the most cordial greetings of the American Expeditionary Force. The bond which joins together all men of American blood has been mightily strengthened and deepened by the rough hand of war.
> Those of us who are privileged to serve in the Army and Navy are to one another as brothers. Spaces of land and sea are nothing where a common purpose binds. We are so dependent upon one another that the honor, the fame, the exploits of the one are the honor, the fame, the exploits of the other. If the enemy should dare to leave his safe harbor and set his ships in battle array no cheers would be more ringing, as you and our allied fleets moved to meet him, than those of the American Expeditionary Forces in France. We have unshaken confidence in you and are assured that when we stand on the threshold of peace your record will be one worthy of your traditions.

No one appreciated more highly the efficient work done by our Navy than did Sir Eric Geddes, of the British Admiralty, who last October paid this tribute to our sea forces:

> I venture the opinion that when the history of this war is written there will be no more glorious page in that history than the one which tells of the work done, the dangers faced, and the privations endured by your Navy in common with the navies of your cobelligerents, and there will be no greater manifestation of the overwhelming importance of sea power in a fight such as this has been. In that manifestation the great American Navy has played a highly honorable and increasingly important part.

Let us not forget the mighty work of those in the departments, in the naval districts, in office and shop and warehouse, whose efforts were as untiring as their success was complete. From the humblest yeowoman upward to the Secretary, through the bureaus and their chiefs, all were animated by the same spirit of energy, of foresight, and determination to place the fleet on the highest basis of efficiency and strength. The phrase "The Navy of the United States" has a significance apart and above simply a designation of one branch of our military service. That phrase, invoking the romance of the pathless seas and the daring exploits of our seamen, appeals to our chivalry and our pride. It visualizes the traditions and the deeds of yesterday and brings to life the heroes who once trod the decks of our frigates. It opens the book of history to the brightest page of our achievements and links the accomplishments of the past with the glory of the present and the confidence of the future. It means more than crews and ships, more than power of shell and might of steel; it connotes the will and the purpose of the Republic itself and carries us forward to a nobler conception of national life. It epitomizes the spirit of America, and binds us to a closer and more resolute union. It quickens our consciousness as a member of the great family of nations and prompts us as one of the trustees of civilization to a higher duty in the solution and adjustment of world problems. It is the symbol, not only of daring but of sacrifice, not only of courage but of constructive endeavor, constant in purpose and steadfast to the end. As Secretary Daniels has so eloquently said:

> Nations and people, too, that knew of the Navy of the United States only by hearsay or random incident know it now as the organized will of a free people, prompt to heed the call of right against might, tireless in effort, fertile in resource, happy in cooperation, and unyielding till the ultimate goal be won.

German vessels surrendered to the allies not included in the above compilation. Russian vessels in the hands of the Germans not included in German or Russian figures.

The entire navy of Austria-Hungary, according to the best information on file in this office, is in the hands of the Jugo-Slavs. The ships are being paid off and rendered harmless.

The warship construction of the Russian Navy has ceased and little work has been done since June, 1917.

While Germany ranks third according to tonnage, her real position, according to fighting ships and gun power, is fifth.

The Turkish Navy is in the hands of the allies.

[1] Surrendered on Jan. 11 in place of Mackensen.
[2] Not yet given up.

All of the dreadnaughts and battle cruisers, with the exception of the Moltke are equipped with 5 submerged torpedo tubes, firing the latest 22-inch German torpedo. The Moltke carries 4 tubes. The scout cruisers are all equipped for laying mines, the Bremse and Brummer having a capacity each of 36 mines.

The armistice called for the surrender of 50 destroyers and 160 submarines. The destroyers have been surrendered, but up to the present only 135 submarines have been interned.

STRENGTH OF GERMAN AND AUSTRIAN SUBMARINE FORCES.

On August 1, 1918, the estimated number of German submarines was as follows: Total number built, 331; number sunk, 158; number available, 173. These 173 were divided, 26 school boats, 147 operating at sea. Of the 147 operating, 28 were in the Mediterranean and 119 in the Atlantic.

Austrian submarines: Number built, 35; number obsolete, 10; number sunk, 7; number available, 18. All of the Austrian submarines were operating in the Mediterranean, and adding the German submarines operating in the Mediterranean, 28, makes a total of 46 in those waters.

THE MARINE CORPS IN THE WAR.

[Extracts from the report of the Secretary of the Navy.]

Memorial Day shall henceforth have a greater, deeper significance for America, for it was on that day, May 30, 1918, that our country really received its first call to battle—the battle in which American troops had the honor of stopping the German drive on Paris, throwing back the Prussian hordes in attack after attack, and beginning the retreat which lasted until Imperial Germany was beaten to its knees and its emissaries appealing for an armistice under the flag of truce. And to the United States Marines, fighting side by side with equally brave and equally courageous men in the American Army, fell the honor of taking over the lines where the blow of the Prussian would strike the hardest, the line that was nearest Paris, and where, should a breach occur, all would be lost. The world knows to-day that the United States Marines held that line; that they blocked the advance that was rolling on toward Paris at a rate of 6 or 7 miles a day; that marines and soldiers of the American Army threw back the crack guard divisions of Germany, broke their advance, and then, attacking, drove them back in the beginning of a retreat that was not to end until the "cease-firing" signal sounded for the end of the world's greatest war. In this connection, Melville Stone, general manager of the Associated Press, said, following an exhaustive trip of investigation in Europe:

They (the marines) had before them the best Prussian Guards and shock troops—the Germans were perfectly sure they could drive the "amateurs" back.

It was a dramatic situation, for success meant that the Germans could probably push for Calais and other channel ports; but Foch dangled Paris before their eyes by putting raw Americans at a point across the direct road to Paris in the pocket between Rheims and Soissons. Instead of driving back the "amateurs," the "amateurs" drove them and gave them also a very sound thrashing. Their losses were heavy, but they did the work, and in doing it also did three things: They saved Paris; they seriously injured the morale of the best German troops; and they set a standard and fixed a reputation for American troops that none other dared tarnish.

Such is the opinion of the head of a great news-gathering force regarding the achievements of the United States Marines at Chateau-Thierry, where in the battle field of Boise de Belleau, now named the Bois de la Brigade de Marine by official order of the French staff, this branch of the Navy met the Germans and blocked their drive on Paris.

The Marine Corps played a vital rôle in stemming the German rush on Paris, and in later days aided in the beginning of the great offensive, the freeing of Rheims, and participated in the hard fighting in Champagne, which had as its object the throwing back of the Prussian armies in the vicinity of Cambrai and St. Quentin.

With only 8,000 men engaged in the fiercest battles, the Marine Corps casualties numbered 69 officers and 1,531 enlisted men dead, and 78 officers and 2,435 enlisted men wounded seriously enough to be officially reported by cablegram, to which number should be added not a few whose wounds did not incapacitate them for further fighting. However, with a casualty list that numbers nearly half the original 8,000 men who entered battle, the official reports account for only 57 United States Marines who have been captured by the enemy. This includes those who were wounded far in advance of their lines and who fell into the hands of Germans while unable to resist.

ORDERED TO FRONT ON MEMORIAL DAY.

It was on the evening of May 30, after a day dedicated to the memory of their comrades who had fallen in the training days and in the Verdun sector, that the Fifth and Sixth Regiments and the Sixth Machine-Gun Battalion, United States Marines, each received the following orders:

Advance information official received that this regiment will move at 10 p. m. 30 May by bus to new era. All trains shall be loaded at once and arrangements hastened. Wagons, when loaded, will move to Serans to form train.

All through the night there was fevered activity among the marines. Then, the next morning, the long trains of camions, busses, and trucks, each carrying its full complement of United States Marines, went forward on a road which at one place wound within less than 10 miles of Paris, toward Meaux and the fighting line.

Through the town of Meaux went the long line of camions and to the village of Montriel-aux-Lions, less than 4 miles from the rapidly advancing German line. On this trip the camions containing the Americans were the only traffic traveling in the direction of the Germans; everything else was going the other way—refugees, old men and women, small children, riding on every conceivable conveyance, many trudging along the side of the road driving a cow or calf before them, all of them covered with the white dust which the camion caravan was whirling up as it rolled along; along that road only one organization was advancing—the United States Marines.

GOT INTO LINE ON JUNE 2.

At last, their destination reached early on the morning of June 2, they disembarked, stiff and tired after a journey of more than 72 miles, but as they formed their lines and marched onward in the direction of the line they were to hold they were determined and cheerful. That evening the first field message from the Fourth Brigade to Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, commanding the Second Division, went forward:

Second Battalion, Sixth Marines, in line from Le Thiolet through Clarembauts Woods to Triangle to Lucy. Instructed to hold line. First Battalion, Sixth Marines, going into line from Lucy through Hill 142. Third Battalion in support of Le Voie du Chatel, which is also the post command of the Sixth Marines. Sixth Machine-Gun Battalion distributed at line.

Meanwhile the Fifth Regiment was moving into line, machine guns were advancing, and the Artillery taking its position. That night the men and officers of the marines slept in the open, many of them in a field that was green with unharvested wheat, awaiting the time when they should be summoned to battle. The next day at 5 o'clock, the afternoon of June 2, began the battle of Chateau-Thierry, with the Americans holding the line against the most vicious wedge of the German advance.

BATTLE OF CHATEAU-THIERRY.

The advance of the Germans was across a wheat field, driving at Hill 165 and advancing in smooth columns. The United States Marines, trained to keen observation upon the rifle range, nearly every one of them wearing a marksman's medal or, better, that of the sharpshooter or expert rifleman, did not wait for those gray-clad hordes to advance nearer. Calmly they set their sights and aimed with the same precision that they had shown upon the rifle ranges at Paris Island, Mare Island, and Quantico. Incessantly their rifles cracked, and with their fire came the support of the Artillery. The machine-gun fire, incessant also, began to make its inroads upon the advancing forces. Closer and closer the shrapnel burst to its targets. Caught in a seething wave of machine-gun fire, of scattering shrapnel, of accurate rifle fire, the Germans found themselves in a position in which further advance could only mean absolute suicide. The lines hesitated. They stopped. They broke for cover, while the marines raked the woods and ravines in which they had taken refuge with machine gun and rifle to prevent them making another attempt to advance by infiltrating through. Above a French airplane was checking up on the Artillery fire. Surprised by the fact that men should deliberately set their sights, adjust their range, and then fire deliberately at an advancing foe, each man picking his target instead of firing merely in the direction of the enemy, the aviator signaled below "Bravo!" In the rear that word was echoed again and again. The German drive on Paris had been stopped.

FIERCE FIGHTING IN BELLEAU WOOD.

For the next few days the fighting took on the character of pushing forth outposts and determining the strength of the enemy. Now, the fighting had changed. The Germans, mystified that they should have run against a stone wall of defense just when they believed that their advance would be easiest, had halted, amazed, then prepared to defend the positions they had won with all the stubbornness possible. In the black recesses of Belleau Wood the Germans had established nest after nest of machine guns. There in the jungle of matted underbrush, of vines, of heavy foliage, they had placed themselves in positions they believed impregnable. And this meant that unless they could be routed, unless they could be thrown back, the breaking of the attack of June 2 would mean nothing. There would come another drive and another. The battle of Chateau-Thierry was therefore not won and could not be won until Belleau Wood had been cleared of the enemy.

It was June 6 that the attack of the American troops began against that wood and its adjacent surroundings, with the wood itself and the towns of Torcy and Bouresches forming the objectives. At 5 o'clock the attack came, and there began the tremendous sacrifices which the Marine Corps gladly suffered that the German fighters might be thrown back.

FOUGHT IN AMERICAN FASHION.

The marines fought strictly according to American methods—a rush, a halt, a rush again, in four-wave formation, the rear waves taking over the work of those who had fallen before them, passing over the bodies of their dead comrades and plunging ahead, until they, too, should be torn to bits. But behind those waves were more waves, and the attack went on.

"Men fell like flies"; the expression is that of an officer writing from the field. Companies that had entered the battle 250 strong dwindled to 50 and 60, with a sergeant in command; but the attack did not falter. At 9.45 o'clock that night Bouresches was taken by Lieut. James F. Robertson and twenty-odd men of his platoon; these soon were joined by two reinforcing platoons. Then came the enemy counterattacks, but the marines held.

CHARGING ON MACHINE-GUN NESTS.

In Belleau Wood the fighting had been literally from tree to tree, stronghold to stronghold, and it was a fight which must last for weeks before its accomplishment in victory. Belleau Wood was a jungle, its every rocky formation forming a German machine-gun nest, almost impossible to reach by artillery or grenade fire. There was only one way to wipe out these nests—by the bayonet. And by this method were they wiped out, for United States Marines, barechested, shouting their battle cry of "E-e-e-e-e y-a-a-h-h-h yip!" charged straight into the murderous fire from those guns, and won! Out of the number that charged, in more than one instance, only one would reach the stronghold. There, with his bayonet as his only weapon, he would either kill or capture the defenders of the nest, and then, swinging the gun about in its position, turn it against the remaining German positions in the forest. Such was the character of the fighting in Belleau Wood; fighting which continued until July 6, when, after a short relief, the invincible Americans finally were taken back to the rest billet for recuperation.

HELD THE LINE FOR MANY WEARY DAYS.

In all the history of the Marine Corps there is no such battle as that one in Belleau Wood. Time after time officers seeing their lines cut to pieces, seeing their men so dog tired that they even fell asleep under shell fire, hearing their wounded calling for the water that they were unable to supply, seeing men fight on after they had been wounded and until they dropped unconscious; time after time officers seeing these things, believing that the very limit of human endurance had been reached, would send back messages to their post commanders that their men were exhausted. But in answer to this would come the word that the lines must hold, and if possible those lines must attack. And the lines obeyed. Companies had been so torn and lacerated by losses that they were hardly platoons; but they held their lines and advanced them. In more than one case companies lost every officer, leaving a sergeant and sometimes a corporal to command, and the advance continued. After 13 days in this inferno of fire a captured German officer told with his dying breath of a fresh division of Germans that was about to be thrown into the battle to attempt to wrest from the marines that part of the wood they had gained. The marines, who for days had been fighting only on their sheer nerve, who had been worn out from nights of sleeplessness, from lack of rations, from terrific shell and machine-gun fire, straightened their lines and prepared for the attack. It came—as the dying German officer had predicted.

GERMAN CRACK TROOPS REPULSED AND BEATEN.

At 2 o'clock on the morning of June 13 it was launched by the Germans along the whole front. Without regard for men, the enemy hurled his forces against Bouresches and the Bois de Belleau, and sought to win back what had been taken from Germany by the Americans. The orders were that these positions must be taken at all costs; that the utmost losses in men must be endured that the Bois de Belleau and Bouresches might fall again into German hands. But the depleted lines of the marines held; the men who had fought on their nerve alone for days once more showed the mettle of which they were made. With their backs to the trees and bowlders of the Bois de Belleau, with their sole shelter the scattered ruins of Bouresches, the thinning lines of the marines repelled the attack and crushed back the new division which had sought to wrest the position from them.

And so it went. Day after day, night after night, while time after time messages like the following traveled to the post command:

Losses heavy. Difficult to get runners through. Some have never returned. Morale excellent, but troops about all in. Men exhausted.

Exhausted, but holding on. And they continued to hold on in spite of every difficulty. Advancing their lines slowly day by day, the marines finally prepared their positions to such an extent that the last rush for the possession of the wood could be made. Then, on June 24, following a tremendous barrage, the struggle began.

The barrage literally tore the woods to pieces, but even its immensity could not wipe out all the nests that remained, the emplacements that were behind almost every clump of bushes, every jagged, rough group of bowlders. But those that remained were wiped out by the American method of the rush and the bayonet, and in the days that followed every foot of Belleau Wood was cleared of the enemy and held by the frayed lines of the Americans.

PRAISE FROM THE FRENCH STAFF.

It was, therefore, with the feeling of work well done that the depleted line of the marines were relieved in July, that they might be filled with replacements and made ready for the grand offensive in the vicinity of Soissons, July 18. And in recognition of their sacrifice and bravery this praise was forthcoming from the French:

ARMY HEADQUARTERS, June 30, 1918.

In view of the brilliant conduct of the Fourth Brigade of the Second United States Division, which in a spirited fight took Bouresches and the important strong point of Bois de Belleau, stubbornly defended by a large enemy force, the general commanding the Sixth Army orders that henceforth in all official papers the Bois de Belleau shall be named "Bois de la Brigade de Marine."

DIVISION GEN. DEGOUTTE,
Commanding Sixth Army.

GEN. PERSHING PERSONALLY CONGRATULATES MARINES.

Gen. Pershing's congratulations also were contained in the following order issued by the brigade commander, dated June 9, 1918, to the units of his command:

The brigade commander takes pride in announcing that, in addition to the commander in chief's telegram of congratulation to the Fourth Brigade, published in an indorsement from the division commander, dated June 9, Gen. Pershing has to-day visited division headquarters and sent his personal greetings and congratulations to the Marine brigade. He also added that Gen. Foch, commander in chief of the allied armies in France, especially charged him this morning to give the Marine brigade his love and congratulations on their fine work of the past week.

By command of Brig. Gen. Harbord. H. LAY, Major, Adjutant.

IN BATTLE FOR ST. MIHIEL SALIENT.

Then came the battle for the St. Mihiel salient. On the night of September 11 the Second Division took over a line running from Remenauville to Limey, and on the night of September 14 and the morning of September 15 attacked, with two days' objectives ahead of them. Overcoming the enemy resistance, they romped through to the Rupt de Mad, a small river, crossed it on stone bridges, occupied Thiacourt, the first day's objective, scaled the heights just beyond it, pushed on to a line running from the Zammes-Joulney Ridges to the Binvaux Forest, and there rested, with the second day's objectives occupied by 2.50 o'clock of the first day. The casualties of the division were about 1,000, of which 134 were killed. Of these about half were marines. The captures in which the marines participated were 80 German officers, 3,200 men, ninety-odd cannon, and vast stores.

CAPTURE OF BLANC MONT RIDGE.

But even further honors were to befall the fighting, landing, and building force, of which the Navy is justly proud. In the early part of October it became necessary for the allies to capture the bald, jagged ridge 20 miles due east of Rheims, known as Blanc Mont Ridge. Here the armies of Germany and the allies had clashed more than once, and attempt after attempt had been made to wrest it from German hands. It was a keystone of the German defense, the fall of which would have a far-reaching effect upon the enemy armies. To the glory of the United States Marines, let it be said, that they were again a part of that splendid Second Division which swept forward in the attack which freed Blanc Mont Ridge from German hands, pushed its way down the slopes, and occupied the level ground just beyond, thus assuring a victory, the full import of which can best be judged by the order of Gen. Lejeune, following the battle:

FRANCE, October 11, 1918.

OFFICERS AND MEN OF THE SECOND DIVISION:

It is beyond my power of expression to describe fitly my admiration for your heroism. You attacked magnificently and you seized Blanc Mont Ridge, the keystone of the arch constituting the enemy's main position. You advanced beyond the ridge, breaking the enemy's lines, and you held the ground gained with a tenacity which is unsurpassed in the annals of war.

As a direct result of your victory, the German armies east and west of Rheims are in full retreat, and by drawing on yourselves several German divisions from other parts of the front you greatly assisted the victorious advance of the allied armies between Cambrai and St. Quentin.

Your heroism and the heroism of our comrades who died on the battle field will live in history forever and will be emulated by the young men of our country for generations to come.

To be able to say when this way is finished, "I belonged to the Second Division, I fought with it at the battle of Blanc Mont Ridge," will be the highest honor that can come to any man.

JOHN A. LEJEUNE,
Major General, United States Marine Corps, Commanding.

MARKSMANSHIP AMAZES ALLIES.

Thus it is that the United States Marines have fulfilled the glorious traditions of their corps in this their latest duty as the "soldiers who go to sea." Their sharpshooting—and in one regiment 93 per cent of the men wear the medal of a marksman, a sharpshooter, or an expert rifleman—has amazed soldiers of European armies, accustomed merely to shooting in the general direction of the enemy. Under the fiercest fire they have calmly adjusted their sights, aimed for their man, and killed him, and in bayonet attacks their advance on machine-gun nests has been irresistible. In the official citation lists more than one American marine is credited with taking an enemy machine gun single handed, bayoneting its crew, and then turning the gun against the foe. In one battle alone, that of Belleau Wood, the citation lists bear the names of fully 500 United States Marines who so distinguished themselves in battle as to call forth the official commendation of their superior officers.

CORPS FULFILLED EVERY GLORIOUS TRADITION.

More than faithful in every emergency, accepting hardships with admirable morale, proud of the honor of taking their place as shock troops for the American legions, they have fulfilled every glorious tradition of their corps, and they have given to the world a list of heroes whose names will go down to all history.

ACCOUNTS OF LOSSES BY SUBMARINES.

TORPEDOING OF THE U. S. S. "CASSIN."

[Compiled from report of the commanding officer and supplementary reports.]

On October 15, 1917, the U. S. destroyer Cassin was patroling off the south coast of Ireland; when about 20 miles south of Mine Head, at 1.30 p. m., a submarine was sighted by the lookout aloft 4 or 5 miles away, about two points on the port bow. The submarine at this time was awash and was made out by officers of the watch and the quartermaster of the watch, but three minutes later submerged.

At about 1.57 p. m. the commanding officer sighted a torpedo, apparently shortly after it had been fired, running near the surface and in a direction that was estimated would make a hit either in the engine or fire room. When first seen the torpedo was between three and four hundred yards from the ship, and the wake could be followed on the other side for about 400 yards. The torpedo was running at high speed, at least 35 knots. The Cassin was maneuvering to dodge the torpedo, double emergency full speed ahead having been signaled from the engine room and the rudder put hard left as soon as the torpedo was sighted. It looked for the moment as though the torpedo would pass astern. When about 15 or 20 feet away the torpedo porpoised, completely leaving the water and sheering to the left. Before again taking the water the torpedo hit the ship well aft on the port side about frame 163 and above the water line. Almost immediately after the explosion of the torpedo the depth charges, located on the stern and ready for firing, exploded. There were two distinct explosions in quick succession after the torpedo hit.

But one life was lost. Osmond K. Ingram, gunner's mate, first class, was cleaning the muzzle of No. 4 gun, target practice being just over, when the attack occurred. With rare presence of mind, realizing that the torpedo was about to strike the part of the ship where the depth charges were stored and that the setting off of these explosives might sink the ship, Ingram, immediately seeing the danger, ran aft to strip these charges and throw them overboard. He was blown to pieces when the torpedo struck. Thus Ingram sacrificed his life in performing a duty which he believed would save his ship and the lives of the officers and men on board.

Nine members of the crew received minor injuries.

After the ship was hit the crew was kept at general quarters.

The executive officer and engineer officer inspected the parts of the ship that were damaged, and those adjacent to the damage. It was found that the engine and fire rooms and after magazine were intact and that the engines could be worked; but that the ship could not be steered, the rudder having been blown off and the stern blown to starboard. The ship continued to turn to starboard in a circle. In an effort to put the ship on a course by the use of the engines, something carried away which put the starboard engine out of commission. The port engine was kept going at slow speed. The ship, being absolutely unmanageable, sometimes turned in a circle and at times held an approximate course for several minutes.

Immediately after the ship was torpedoed the radio was out of commission. The radio officer and radio electrician chief managed to improvise a temporary auxiliary antenna. The generators were out of commission for a short time after the explosion, the ship being in darkness below.

At about 2.30 p. m., when we were in approximately the same position as when torpedoed, a submarine conning tower was sighted on port beam, distant about 1,500 yards, ship still circling under port engine. Opened fire with No. 2 gun, firing four rounds. Submarine submerged and was not seen again. Two shots came very close to submarine.

At 3.50 p. m. U. S. S. Porter stood by. At 4.25 p. m. wreckage which was hanging to stern dropped off. At dark stopped port engine and drifted. At about 9 p. m. H. M. S. Jessamine and H. M. S. Tamarisk stood by. H. M. S. Jessamine signaled she would stand by until morning and then take us in tow. At this time sea was very rough, wind about six or seven and increasing.

H. M. S. Tamarisk prepared to take us in tow, and made one attempt after another to get a line to us. Finally, about 2.10 a. m., October 16, the Tamarisk lowered a boat in rough sea and sent grass line by means of which our 8-inch hawser was sent over to her. At about 2.30 a. m. Tamarisk started towing us to Queenstown, speed about 4 knots, this vessel towing well on starboard quarter of Tamarisk, due to condition of stern described above. At 3.25 hawser parted.

Between this time and 10.37 a. m., when a towing line was received from H. M. S. Snowdrop, various attempts were made by the Tamarisk and two trawlers and a tug to tow the Cassin. An 11-inch towing hawser from the Tamarisk parted. All ships, except her, lost the Cassin during the night. The Cassin was drifting rapidly on a lee shore, and had it not been for the Tamarisk getting out a line in the early morning the vessel would have undoubtedly grounded on Hook Point, as it is extremely doubtful if her anchors would have held.

About 35 feet of the stern was blown off or completely ruptured. The after living compartments and after storerooms are completely wrecked or gone, and all stores and clothing from these parts of the ship are gone or ruined. About 45 members of the crew, including the chief petty officers, lost practically everything but the clothes they had on.

At the time of the explosion there were a number of men in the after compartments. How they managed to escape is beyond explanation.

The officers and crew behaved splendidly. There was no excitement. The men went to their stations quietly and remained there all night, except when called away to handle lines.

From the statement of all the officers it is evident that luck favored the submarine. The destroyer probably would have escaped being hit had not the torpedo broached twice and turned decidedly to the left both times—in other words, failed to function properly.

The equivalent of 850 pounds of TNT is estimated to have exploded in and upon the Cassin's fantail; this includes the charges of the torpedo and of both depth mines.

LOSS OF THE U. S. ARMY TRANSPORT "ANTILLES."

[Extracts from account by senior naval officer on board, Commander Daniel T. Ghent, United States Navy.]

We lost the Antilles on October 17, 1917. She sank in just four and one-half minutes, about 300 miles west of Quiberon Bay. Four of the guns' crew went down with her; 16 men of the United States Army; 45 of the ship's merchant crew, including 3 engineer officers, a civilian ambulance driver who had been in the French Army, and 1 colored stevedore—67 in all.

On October 15, 1917, we left Quiberon Bay, bound for America, with the transports Henderson and Willehad forming the convoy, and the Corsair, Kanawha, and Alcedo acting as escort; all followed a zigzag course, as we knew these waters to be infested with submarines.

The second day out we were forced to reduce our speed to permit the Willehad, which had been feeling the effects of the heavy seas, to regain her place in formation. The weather grew unsettled, with a strong wind and head seas. Late in the afternoon fog set in and we were ordered to stop zigzagging and proceed on a straight course. Later this fog lifted and we again resumed zigzagging.

In passing through the war zone or areas where enemy submarines are known to be operating everyone is more or less on edge, and when fire was discovered early the following morning on the port side of the promenade deck it had the effect of stimulating everyone on board to swift action. Some difficulty was experienced in locating the fire, as the ship was darkened and the passageway filled with smoke, but once located it was soon under control. I mention this only because I think the circumstances contributed to sharpen the wits of those on board, so that when the torpedo struck us action was immediate and, so far as humanly possible, it was effective.

A half hour later, just after daylight, a torpedo was sighted heading for us about two points abaft the port beam on a course of 45° with the keel. The torpedo was seen by the second officer on the bridge, the quartermaster and signalman on watch, by the first officer and first assistant engineer from the port side of the promenade deck, and by one of the guns' crews on watch aft. They estimated the distance from 400 feet to as many yards. Immediately on sighting the torpedo the helm was put "hard over" in an attempt to dodge it, but before the ship began to swing the torpedo struck us near the after engine-room bulkhead on the port side. The explosion was terrific; the ship shivered from stem to stern, listing immediately to port. One of the lookouts in the main top, though protected by a canvas screen about 5 feet high, was thrown clear of this screen and killed on striking the hatch. This case is sighted as indicating the power of the "whip" caused by the explosion. Guns were manned instantly in the hope of getting a shot at the enemy, but no submarine was seen. Within a few seconds after the explosion the water was over the crossheads of the main engines, which were still turning over slowly. Of the 21 men on duty in the engine room and firerooms only 3 managed to escape. Besides the oiler, two firemen managed to escape through a fireroom ventilator. The fact that the engines could not be maneuvered and the headway of the ship checked added to the difficulty of abandoning ship.

Just as the torpedo struck us I was on the way to the pilot house from the scene of fire. Before I could reach the bridge the officer of the deck had sounded the submarine alarm, and I immedately sounded the signal for "Abandon ship." That only 4 boats out of 10 succeeded in getting clear of the ship was due to several causes—the short time the ship remained afloat after being torpedoed; the headway left on the ship, due to the fact that the engine-room personnel was put out of action by the explosion; the rough sea at the time; the fact that the ship listed heavily; and that one boat was destroyed by the explosion.

The ship went down vertically. The suction effect was hardly noticeable.

The behavior of the naval personnel throughout was equal to the best traditions of the service.

An instance comes back which indicates the coolness of the guns' crews. One member was rescued from the top of an ammunition box which by some means had floated clear and in an upright position. When this young man saw the Corsair standing down to pick him up he semaphored not to come too close as the box on which he was sitting contained live ammunition.

TORPEDOING OF THE U. S. ARMY CHARTERED TRANSPORT "FINLAND."

[Extracts from report of the senior naval officer on board, Capt. Stephen V. Graham, United States Navy.]

The Finland left the coast of France at nightfall on October 27, 1917, on her third return voyage to the United States. By daylight of October 28 the convoy had reached a position near the line extending from the island of Ushant to Cape Finisterre, Spain, which experience had shown to be a particularly dangerous position. From that time on the senior naval officer of the Finland remained on the bridge constantly and all of the lookouts were exercising the utmost vigilance.

The weather was cloudy and a moderate sea with whitecaps was running and I was personally keeping a very careful lookout for submarines and was engaged in searching the water on both sides with powerful binoculars. At about 9.25 a. m. he had just finished searching the water on the starboard side when the naval signal quartermaster on watch called out, "Commander, torpedo!" I turned and saw a torpedo about 50 to 100 yards distant making a surface run directly toward the ship. The whirring of the torpedo's propellers could be heard when they broke the surface of the water. The torpedo was so close to the ship when it was sighted that any maneuver to avoid it was entirely impossible. I sprang toward the engine telegraph to give the signal for stopping the engines, but before he could do this the torpedo exploded directly under the bridge. The concussive effect of the explosion was considerable, but not as great as had been anticipated. No one on the bridge was injured by it. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the enemy economized in the explosive charge of torpedoes destined for use against merchant vessels, and used only enough to produce the desired rupture in a vessel's skin plating.

Notwithstanding the fact that the torpedo was only 4 or 5 feet below the surface when it exploded against the ship's side an immense volume of water was thrown up. The engines were promptly stopped and the whistle signal made to indicate to the other vessels present that the ship had been torpedoed. It is a curious fact that most of the other vessels present did not know that the Finland had been torpedoed until this signal was made. At this time it did not appear probable that the ship would sink, but in a short time she began to list heavily to starboard and seemed to be settling. I ordered the lowering of the remaining boats which were hanging on their falls at the level of the promenade deck. These boats were scarcely in the water when the ship began to right herself.

At the time the ship was torpedoed this hold contained about 600 tons of coal. After the ship had been placed in dry dock upon her return to France it was found that most of this coal had run out through the hole made in the ship's side by the explosion of the torpedo.

When I received the master's report that the damage was confined to this one compartment, I hailed the boats which were close to the ship and directed them to come alongside and had a signal sent to the escorting yachts to send boats which were approaching them back to the Finland.

While the Finland's boats were in the water a heavy squall came up and rendered the return of the heavily laden boats very difficult. They could come alongside only on the starboard side, and getting the people back on board was very slow work. Hoisting the boats was not to be thought of, for every moment that this large ship remained stopped was attended with grave danger of receiving a second torpedo. As soon as the passengers were out of the boats the latter were cast adrift. The ship got under way to return to a French port 150 miles distant.

During the return of the ship to the French port it became necessary to send everyone to the fireroom who could shovel coal. Deck hands, stewards, and even passengers, including some of the discharged American ambulance drivers, responded with alacrity to this call, and within a short time after starting ahead the ship was making nearly 15 knots, which was as good a speed as she had made at any time during her employment in the transport service.

The bulkheads of the damaged compartment held and there was no leakage of water through the water-tight doors leading into the forward fireroom and the adjacent hold. The doors were kept closed tightly with wooden wedges.

On the way into port the nervous tension of those on deck was greatly relieved by the necessity of laughing at the earnestness with which several lookouts reported a spouting whale as a submarine. It is regrettable that eight men lost their lives on the occasion of the torpedoing of the Finland.

SINKING OF U. S. S. "ALCEDO."

[Extracts from report of the commanding officer, Commander W. T. Conn, jr.]

At 4 p. m., November 4, 1917, the U. S. S. Alcedo proceeded to sea from Quiberon Bay on escort duty to take convoy through the war zone.

At or about 1.45 a. m., November 5, I was awakened by a commotion and immediately received a report, "Submarine, captain." I jumped out of bed and went to the upper bridge, and the officer of the deck stated he had seen submarine on surface about 300 yards on port bow, and submarine had fired a torpedo, which was approaching. I saw torpedo approaching about 200 feet distant. Lieut. Paul had put the rudder full right before I arrived on bridge, hoping to avoid the torpedo. The ship answered slowly to her helm, however, and before any other action could be taken the torpedo I saw struck the ship's side immediately under the port forward chain plates, the detonation occurring instantly. I was thrown down and for a few seconds dazed by falling débris and water.

Upon regaining my feet I sounded the submarine alarm on the siren.

Called to the forward guns' crews to see if at stations, but by this time realized that gallant forecastle was practically awash. The foremast had fallen, carrying away radio aerial. I called out to abandon ship. I then realized that the ship was filling rapidly and her bulwarks amidships were level with the water. I directed the after dories and life rafts to be cut away and thrown overboard and ordered the men in the immediate vicinity to jump over the side, intending to follow them.

Before I could jump, however, the ship listed heavily to port, plunging by the head, and sunk, carrying me down with the suction. I experienced no difficulty, however, in getting clear, and when I came to the surface I swam a few yards to a life raft, to which were clinging three men.

About this time, which was probably an hour after the ship sank, a German submarine approached the scene of torpedoing and lay to near some of the dories and life rafts. After remaining on the surface about half an hour, the submarine steered off and submerged.

I then proceeded with the whaleboat and two dories searching through the wreckage to make sure that no survivors were left in the water. No other people being seen, at 4.30 a. m. we started away from the scene of disaster.

SINKING OF U. S. S. "JACOB JONES."

[Extracts from report of the commanding officer, Lieut. Commander David W. Bagley.]

At 4.21 p. m. on December 6, 1917, the U. S. S. Jacob Jones was struck on the starboard side by a torpedo from an enemy submarine. The ship was one of six of an escorting group which were returning independently from off Brest to Queenstown. All other ships of the group were out of sight ahead.

I was in the chart house and heard some one call out "Torpedo!" I jumped at once to the bridge, and on the way up saw the torpedo about 800 yards from the ship approaching from about one point abaft the starboard beam headed for a point about midships, making a perfectly straight surface run (alternately broaching and submerging to apparently 4 or 5 feet), at an estimated speed of at least 40 knots. No periscope was sighted. When I reached the bridge I found that the officer of the deck had already put the rudder hard left and rung up emergency speed on the engine-room telegraph. The ship had already begun to swing to the left.

The torpedo broached and jumped clear of the water at a short distance from the ship, submerged about 50 or 60 feet from the ship, and struck approximately 3 feet below the water line in the fuel-oil tank between the auxiliary room and the after crew space. The ship settled aft immediately after being torpedoed to a point at which the deck just forward of the after deck house was awash, and then more gradually until the deck abreast the engine-room hatch was awash.

The deck over the forward part of the after crew space and over the fuel-oil tank just forward of it was blown clear for a space athwartships of about 20 feet from starboard to port, and the auxiliary room wrecked. The starboard after torpedo tube was blown into the air. No fuel oil ignited and, apparently, no ammunition exploded. The depth charges in the chutes aft were set on ready and exploded after the stern sank. It was impossible to get to them to set them on safe as they were under water. Immediately the ship was torpedoed, Lieut. J. K. Richards, the gunnery officer, rushed aft to attempt to set the charges on "safe," but was unable to get farther aft than the after deck house.

As soon as the torpedo struck I attempted to send out an "S. O. S." message by radio, but the mainmast was carried away, antannæ falling, and all electric power had failed. I then tried to have the gun-sight lighting batteries connected up in an effort to send out a low-power message with them, but it was at once evident that this would not be practicable before the ship sank. There was no other vessel in sight, and it was therefore impossible to get through a distress signal of any kind.

Immediately after the ship was torpedoed every effort was made to get rafts and boats launched. Also the circular life belts from the bridge and several splinter mats from the outside of the bridge were cut adrift and afterwards proved very useful in holding men up until they could be got to the rafts. Weighted confidential publications were thrown over the side. There was no time to destroy other confidential matter, but it went down with the ship.

The ship sank about 4.29 p. m. (about eight minutes after being torpedoed). As I saw her settling rapidly, I ran along the deck and ordered everybody I saw to jump overboard. At this time most of those not killed by the explosion had got clear of the ship and were on rafts or wreckage. Some, however, were swimming and a few appeared to be about a ship's length astern of the ship, at some distance from the rafts, probably having jumped overboard very soon after the ship was struck.

Before the ship sank two shots were fired from No. 4 gun with the hope of attracting attention of some near-by ship. As the ship began sinking I jumped overboard. The ship sank stern first and twisted slowly through nearly 180° as she swung upright. From this nearly vertical position, bow in the air to about the forward funnel, she went straight down. Before the ship reached the vertical position the depth charges exploded, and I believe them to have caused the death of a number of men. They also partially paralyzed, stunned, or dazed a number of others, including Lieut. Kalk and myself and several men, some of whom are still disabled but recovering.

Immediate efforts were made to get all survivors on the rafts and then get rafts and boats together. Three rafts were launched before the ship sank and one floated off when she sank.

About 15 or 20 minutes after the ship sank the submarine appeared on the surface about 2 or 3 miles to the westward of the rafts and gradually approached until about 800 to 1,000 yards from the ship, where it stopped and was seen to pick up one unidentified man from the water. The submarine then submerged and was not seen again.

I was picked up by the motor dory and at once began to make arrangements to try to reach the Scillys in that boat in order to get assistance to those on the rafts.

After a very trying trip, during which it was necessary to steer by stars and by the direction of the wind, the dory was picked up about 1 p. m., December 7, by a small patrol vessel about 6 miles south of St. Marys. Commander Randal, R. N. R., senior naval officer, Scilly Isles, informed me that the other survivors had been rescued.

SINKING OF U. S. S. "PRESIDENT LINCOLN."

[Extracts from report of the commanding officer, Commander P. W. Foote, U. S. Navy.]

On May 31, 1918, the President Lincoln was returning to America from a voyage to France, and was in line formation with the U. S. S. Susquehanna, the U. S. S. Antigone, and the U. S. S. Ryndam, the latter being on the left flank of the formation and about 800 yards from the President Lincoln. The weather was pleasant, the sun shining brightly, with a choppy sea. The ships were about 500 miles from the coast of France and had passed through what was considered to be the most dangerous part of the war zone. At about 9 a. m. a terrific explosion occurred on the port side of the ship about 120 feet from the bow and immediately afterwards another explosion occurred on the port side about 120 feet from the stern of the ship, these explosions being immediately identified as coming from torpedoes fired by a German submarine.

It was found that the ship was struck by three torpedoes, which had been fired as one salvo from the submarine, two of the torpedoes striking practically together near the bow of the ship and the third striking near the stern. The wake of the torpedoes had been sighted by the officers and lookouts on watch, but the torpedoes were so close to the ship as to make it impossible to avoid them, and it was also found that the submarine at the time of firing was only about 800 yards from the President Lincoln.

There were at the time 715 persons on board, including about 30 officers and men of the Army. Some of these were sick and two soldiers were totally paralyzed.

The alarm was immediately sounded and everyone went to his proper station, which had been designated at previous drills. There was not the slightest confusion, and the crew and passengers waited for and acted on orders from the commanding officer with a coolness which was truly inspiring.

Inspections were made below decks, and it was found that the ship was rapidly filling with water, both forward and aft, and that there was little likelihood that she would remain afloat. The boats were lowered and the life rafts were placed in the water, and about 15 minutes after the ship was struck all hands except the guns' crews were ordered to abandon ship.

It had been previously planned that in order to avoid the losses which have occurred in such instances by filling the boats at the davits before lowering them, that only one officer and five men would get into the boats before lowering and that everyone else would get into the water and get on the life rafts and then be picked up by the boats, this being entirely feasible, as everyone was provided with an efficient life-saving jacket. One exception was made to this plan, however, in that one boat was filled with the sick before being lowered, and it was in this boat that the paralyzed soldiers were saved without difficulty.

The guns' crews were held at their stations, hoping for an opportunity to fire on the submarine should it appear before the ship sank, and orders were given to the guns' crews to begin firing, hoping that this might prevent further attack. All the ship's company except the guns' crews and necessary officers were at that time in the boats and on the rafts near the ship, and when the guns' crews began firing the people in the boats set up a cheer to show that they were not downhearted. The guns' crews only left their guns when ordered by the commanding officer just before the ship sank. The guns in the bow kept up firing until after the water was entirely over the main deck of the after half of the ship.

The state of discipline which existed and the coolness of the men is well illustrated by what occurred when the boats were being lowered and were about half way from their davits to the water. At this particular time there appeared some possibility of the ship not sinking immediately, and the commanding officer gave the order to stop lowering the boats. This order could not be understood, however, owing to the noise caused by escaping steam from the safety valves of the boilers which had been lifted to prevent explosion, but by motion of the hand from the commanding officer the crews stopped lowering the boats and held them in mid-air for a few minutes until at a further motion of the hand the boats were dropped into the water.

Immediately after the ship sank the boats pulled among the rafts and were loaded with men to their full capacity and the work of collecting the rafts and tying them together to prevent drifting apart and being lost was begun.

While this work was under way and about half an hour after the ship sank, a large German submarine emerged and came among the boats and rafts, searching for the commanding officer and some of the senior officers whom they desired to take prisoners. The submarine commander was able to identify only one officer, Lieut. E. V. M. Isaacs, whom he took on board and carried away. The submarine remained in the vicinity of the boats for about two hours and returned again in the afternoon, hoping apparently for an opportunity of attacking some of the other ships which had been in company with the President Lincoln, but which had, in accordance with standard instructions, steamed as rapidly as possible from the scene of attack.

By dark the boats and rafts had been collected and secured together, there being about 500 men in the boats and about 200 on the rafts. Lighted lanterns were hoisted in the boats and flare-up lights and Coston signal lights were burned every few minutes, the necessary detail of men being made to carry out this work during the night.

The boats had been provided with water and food, but none was used during the day, as the quantity was necessarily limited and it might be a period of several days before a rescue could be effected.

The ship's wireless plant had been put out of commission by the force of the explosion, and although the ship's operator had sent the radio distress signals, yet it was known that the nearest destroyers were 250 miles away, protecting another convoy, and it was possible that military necessity might prevent their being detached to come to our rescue.

At about 11 p. m. a white light flashing in the blackness of the night—it was very dark—was sighted, and very shortly it was found that the destroyer Warrington had arrived for our rescue, and about an hour afterwards the destroyer Smith also arrived. The transfer of the men from the boats and rafts to the destroyers was effected as quickly as possible, and the destroyers remained in the vicinity until after daylight the following morning, when a further search was made for survivors who might have drifted in a boat or on a raft, but none were found, and at about 6 a. m. the return trip to France was begun.

GOOD SEAMANSHIP—RESCUE OF "PRESIDENT LINCOLN" SURVIVORS.

No incident of service serves to dampen the ardor or spirit of the men. When the call from the sinking President Lincoln was received the destroyers Warrington and Smith, 275 miles away, responded at a speed of 25 knots. In telling the story of the rescue an officer said:

The moon would not rise until early morning, and we figured we must reach the survivors, if possible, before dark. We could only estimate how far they would pull in the boats or drift. About 11 o'clock we sighted a small red light and stood over toward it. We blinked our yardarm lights and heard a faint cheer in the darkness. We had the boats.

Fortunately they had been lashed together, for if they had been straggling we should have had a hopeless task in the dark. One after another of them came alongside. Boatload after boatload climbed on board, and we had taken them all in half an hour.

The discipline maintained among the survivors had been excellent. In many boats the water breakers had not been broached, although the men had been in the boats over 12 hours. The last boat we took in tow with bow and stern line and stood over in the supposed direction of the life rafts which held the rest of the survivors. The moon had risen by this time, so that the work of finding the rafts was greatly facilitated. We now had on board 443 survivors and could have taken more, but fortunately for the comfort of those already on board another destroyer had now joined us.

You can imagine the wardroom of a destroyer, normally arranged to take care of 6 officers, with 49 in it, and the decks loaded down with a living cargo. They made no noise; all were cheerful and all hands ready to get back to another ship to carry on as soon as possible.

In connection with the loss of the Lincoln is the very remarkable capture and final escape of Lieut. E. V. M. Isaacs, one of the ship's officers. (Condensed from his own report.)

The President Lincoln went down about 9.30 in the morning, 30 minutes after being struck by three torpedoes. In obedience to orders I abandoned ship after seeing all hands aft safely off the vessel. The boats had pulled away, but I stepped on a raft floating alongside, the quarter deck being then awash. A few minutes later one of the boats picked me up. The submarine, the U-90, then returned, and the commanding officer, while searching for Capt. Foote, of the President Lincoln, took me out of the boat. I told him my captain had gone down with the ship, whereupon he steamed away, taking me prisoner to Germany. We passed to the north of the Shetlands into the North Sea, the Skaggerak, the Cattegat, and the Sound into the Baltic. Proceeding to Kiel, we passed down the canal through Heligoland Bight to Wilhelmshaven.

On the way to Shetlands we fell in with two American destroyers, the Smith and the Warrington, who dropped 22 depth bombs on us. We were submerged to a depth of 60 meters and weathered the storm, although five bombs were very close and shook us up considerably. The information I had been able to collect was, I considered, of enough importance to warrant my trying to escape. Accordingly in Danish waters I attempted to jump from the deck of the submarine but was caught and ordered below.

The German Navy authorities took me from Wilhelmshaven to Karlsruhe, where I was turned over to the army. Here I met officers of all the allied armies, and with them I attempted several escapes, all of which were unsuccessful. After three weeks at Karlsruhe I was sent to the American and Russian officers' camp at Villingen. On the way I attempted to escape from the train by jumping out of the window. With the train making about 40 miles an hour, I landed on the opposite railroad track and was so severely wounded by the fall that I could not get away from my guard. They followed me, firing continuously. When they recaptured me they struck me on the head and body with their guns until one broke his rifle. It snapped in two at the small of the stock as he struck me with the butt on the back of the head.

I was given two weeks solitary confinement for this attempt to escape, but continued trying, for I was determined to get my information back to the Navy. Finally, on the night of October 6, assisted by several American Army officers, I was able to effect an escape by short-circuiting all lighting circuits in the prison camp and cutting through barbed-wire fences surrounding the camp. This had to be done in the face of a heavy rifle fire from the guards. But it was difficult for them to see in the darkness, so I escaped unscathed.

In company with an American officer in the French Army, I made my way for seven days and nights over mountains to the Rhine, which to the south of Baden forms the boundary between Germany and Switzerland. After a four-hour crawl on hands and knees I was able to elude the sentries along the Rhine. Plunging in, I made for the Swiss shore. After being carried several miles down the stream, being frequently submerged by the rapid current, I finally reached the opposite shore and gave myself up to the Swiss gendarmes, who turned me over to the American Legation at Berne. From there I made my way to Paris and then London and finally Washington, where I arrived four weeks after my escape from Germany.

SINKING OF U. S. S. "COVINGTON."

[Extracts from the report of the commanding officer, Capt. R. D. Hasbrouck, United States Navy.]

The Covington sailed from Brest in convoy with several other large transports and escorted by destroyers.

Night was approaching. The lookouts, always vigilant, became more watchful as the sun approached the horizon, as this is the time of greatest danger. At exactly 9.15 p. m., on July 1, the lookout saw a white streak in the water, scarcely 300 yards from the port quarter. The ship was making nearly 15 knots speed and had only a moment before steadied on the new course. Almost before the "alarm of torpedo" could be given, the torpedo struck with a terrific detonation, throwing in the air a column of water reaching to a height above the smokestacks.

At the instant of the explosion, each man of the crew of the Covington at once appreciated that his vessel had been hit and knew from long training what the next step was to be. The alarm bells rung in every compartment and officers and men, quietly, as if at drill, quickly took their stations. Full gun crews were ready in case any submarines appeared, boats were gotten ready for lowering, life rafts made ready for launching, and every detail which had been so carefully worked out during the six months of war cruising was painstakingly attended to without hurry or confusion. In an incredibly short time the entire crew were at their station awaiting the next order from the bridge.

The engine and fire rooms of the Covington quickly filled. The ship lost headway rapidly and in 15 minutes lay dead in the water. As the water rushed into the large engine and fire room compartments the Covington listed, giving the impression of instability.

The order to get the boats ready for instant lowering was given from the bridge. At this time a report came to the captain that all firerooms and engine rooms were full of water; the firerooms to the top of the boilers and the engine rooms to the top of the cylinders. The most momentous thing to know at this time was how much stability remained, for upon this knowledge depended whether the ship should be abandoned in haste. At this time, probably 15 minutes after the explosion, the Covington was gradually listing to port.

In such a catastrophe there are two things uppermost in the captain's mind. Steps which he must take without sufficient knowledge, and those facts obtained from others at a moment of great tension. He must decide first for the safety of his crew and second for the safety of the ship. The ship was dead in the water, reeling to port and giving one the feeling that any moment she would take a heavy lurch and sink. Nearly 1,000 men's lives now hung upon the promptness with which the captain made these decisions.

Once the captain's mind was made up, the bugle sounded the call to abandon ship and the word was passed not to hurry. Silence was also sounded on the bugle, giving this evolution a strong resemblance to a daily drill.

The behavior of the officers and men was wonderful. Twenty-one of the ship's 27 boats were lowered into the water without lights anywhere, with the ship heavily listed to port, and without the aid of a single winch, for steam had failed. The storage battery used for emergency lighting was not turned on, as it would disclose the position of the ship and thus risk a second torpedo from the submarine, which might still have been in the vicinity. Of the six boats not lowered, 2 were on the forecastle, from which it was impossible to launch them, and 3 boats were destroyed by the explosion. One boat was stove in while lowering.

Boats and rafts were lowered in the water with just sufficient men to handle them, and after all the boats and rafts were afloat the order was given "abandon ship."

It was a stirring sight to see the men go down the Jacob ladders in as orderly procession as if they were at drill.

The destroyer Smith stood close in alongside the Covington and took the men from the boats as fast as they were filled, the boats returning to the ship for more men.

A working party of 30 officers, petty officers, and men remained with the captain in the vicinity of the bridge. This working party collected the crew's enlistment records, working charts, night order book, sextants, and everything of confidential nature or valuable from the standpoint of record. This party searched the ship throughout for stragglers. The boatswain's mates went through every compartment possible, piping "All hands on deck," and finally reported to the captain that there was nobody on board save the working party.

Night had now fallen. The ship was in complete darkness, badly listed to port, and, as far as could be told, slowly bleeding to death internally with no chance to prevent the seepage of water which would eventually destroy the stability.

At 2.30 p. m. on July 2 the Covington began to sink rapidly by the stern. It was an awe-inspiring sight as the ship rose rapidly to a vertical position in the water, the after smoke pipe being clear when the ship was in a vertical position. This gave a spectacle of about 450 feet of this magnificent 17,000-ton liner standing as a shaft on the surface of the sea. The ship remained in this vertical position for perhaps a period of 10 to 15 seconds, then sank rapidly farther in the vertical position, the bow disappearing at 2.32 p. m. It was providential that all men had been removed from the ship before she rose vertically in the water. Had any men been aboard they would undoubtedly have been lost. Had the ship sunk immediately or shortly after the ship was torpedoed she would have sunk in the same manner as described above and the loss of life would have been appalling.

The discipline of the crew and the perfection of the drills brought about perfect order and insured safety. There were no accidents. The final muster of the crew showed that out of the entire complement of 730 men and 46 officers only 6 were lost; 3 fell overboard and were drowned while rigging out a boat; 2 were in a fireroom and were never seen afterwards, probably killed by the explosion; 1 other man was missing and was probably drowned.

A few minutes after the ship was torpedoed one gun's crew fired three shots at what was thought to be a periscope wake.

The ship went down with her colors flying.

SINKING OF U. S. S. "SAN DIEGO."

[Extracts from report of the court of inquiry.]

The court in its report reviews the main points in the testimony, as follows:

The U. S. S. San Diego, under the command of Capt. H. H. Christy, United States Navy, was making passage from Portsmouth, N. H., to New York, N. Y., and at or about 11.05 a. m. July 19, 1918, she was in approximate latitude 40° 30′ north, longitude 73° west, on base course 304 true, and zigzagging by an approved plan; speed, 15 knots.

The captain was steering a safe and proper course at the time to minimize the submarine and mine dangers in those waters. A careful inspection watch had been maintained while last coaling ship to prevent the introduction of any foreign matter in the coal bunkers. All lookouts, gun watches, fire-control parties, etc., as prescribed by the "Orders for ships in convoy" of the commander cruiser and transport force were at their stations and on the alert. All reasonable and necessary orders to safeguard the water-tight integrity of the ship in dangerous waters had been given and were being carried out.

At or about 11.05 a. m., July 19, 1918, an explosion took place in proximity of the skin of the ship, at about frame No. 78, on the port side and well below the water line. As a result of this explosion the ship began to list to port and she finally rolled over and sank bottom up at about 11.25 a. m., July 19, 1918. The explosion was an exterior one and as the result of this explosion the skin of the ship was ruptured in the vicinity of bulkhead No. 78, at the level of the port engine room; and bulkhead No. 78 was so deformed that water-tight door No. 142, between the port engine room and No. 8 fireroom, was opened to the ingress of water to No. 8 fireroom. The effect of this rupture was to immediately fill the port engine room and adjacent compartments, and No. 8 fireroom was soon filled also. The effect of this water would give the ship a list of 17½ degrees to port. With the increased displacement water entered through 6-inch gun port No. 10, which was justifiably open to permit using that gun, when the ship had listed 9½ degrees. This resulted in flooding the gun deck and accelerated the heeling of the ship and her final capsizing. Relatively small quantities of water entered the upper dynamo room through nonwater-tight voice tubes, but this had no appreciable effect on the sinking of the ship.

The captain properly withheld the order to abandon ship until he was certain that the ship would capsize and sink. The ship was abandoned in good order, and excellent discipline prevailed. Gun crews remained at their guns and continued firing at all suspicious objects until they were forced to jump into the water. The captain was the last to leave the ship.

ATTACK ON THE U. S. S. "MOUNT VERNON."

[Extracts from report of the commanding officer, Capt. D. E. Dismukes, United States Navy.]

About 250 miles from the coast of France, on the morning of September 5, 1918, the Mount Vernon and Agamemnon in convoy, escorted by six destroyers, were proceeding homeward bound from Brest, speed 18 knots (21 statute miles) per hour. The weather was fine and the sea smooth, making it possible to sight a submarine periscope a long distance. Everything was favorable, and it looked as though we were about to add one more trip across the war zone to our credit.

Suddenly a periscope popped above the surface of the water about 500 yards distant. Our starboard gun opened fire at once, but the periscope remained on the surface only a few seconds. Just as it disappeared, the wake of a torpedo coming straight for the ship was seen, and immediately afterwards the torpedo struck us, throwing up a hugh column of water on our starboard side amidships.

The explosion was so terrific that for an instant it seemed that the ship was lifted clear out of the water and torn to pieces. Men at the after guns and depth-charge stations were thrown to the deck and one of the 5-inch guns thrown partly out of its mount. Men below in the vicinity of the explosion were stunned into temporary unconsciousness.

It was soon ascertained that the torpedo had struck the ship fairly amidships, destroying four of the eight boiler rooms and flooding the middle portion of the ship from side to side for a length of 150 feet. The ship instantly settled 10 feet increase in draft, but stopped there. This indicated that the water-tight bulkheads were holding, and we could still afford to go down 2½ feet more before she would lose her floating buoyancy.

The immediate problem was to escape a second torpedo. To do this, two things were necessary—to attack the enemy and to make more speed than he could make submerged. The depth charge crews jumped to their stations and immediately started dropping depth bombs. A barrage of depth charges was dropped, exploding at regular intervals far below the surface of the water. This work was beautifully done. The explosions must have shaken the enemy up; at any rate, he never came to the surface again to get a look at us.

The other factor in the problem was to make as much speed as possible, not only in order to escape an immediate attack, but also to prevent the submarine from tracking us and attacking after nightfall.

The men in the firerooms knew that the safety of the ship depended on their bravery and steadfastness to duty. It is difficult to conceive of a more trying ordeal to one's courage than was presented to every man in the firerooms that escaped destruction. The profound shock of the explosion, followed by instant darkness, falling soot and particles, the knowledge that they were far below the water level inclosed practically in a trap, the imminent danger of the ship sinking, the added threat of exploding boilers—all these dangers and more must have been apparent to every man below, and yet not one man wavered in standing by his post of duty.

No better example can possibly be given of the wonderful fact that with a brave and disciplined body of American men all things are possible. However strong may be their momentary impulse for self-preservation in extreme danger, their controlling impulses are to stand by their stations and duty at all hazards.

The torpedo exploded on a bulkhead separating two firerooms, the explosive effect being apparently about equal in both firerooms, yet in one fireroom not a man was saved, while in the other fireroom two of the men escaped. The explosion blasted through the outer and inner skin of the ship and through an intervening coal bunker and bulkhead, hurling overboard 750 tons of coal. The two men saved were working the fires within 30 feet of the explosion and just below the level where the torpedo struck.

This account would not be complete without the mention of the part played by the ship's hospital corps and the 150 helpless, wounded, and crippled soldiers who had done their part so nobly on the battle fields of France and were on their way home and deserved to get there. Within a very few minutes after the explosion all of these poor fellows were safely stowed in their boats, wrapped in warm blankets, and served with hot soup and other refreshments. They were made so comfortable in the boats that they preferred to remain in them all the way back to Brest for a period of about 18 hours.

Thirty-five men were killed by the explosion and 13 injured, one of them later dying from his injuries, the large number of casualties being due to the fact that the torpedo struck just at the time the watch was being relieved.

The saving of the ship is attributed to the following circumstances: The fact that the water-tight doors were closed, that the bulkheads were tight and held, that additional strength was gained by blanking off all air-port lenses with steel plate, and that there was an organization well conceived and well carried out to meet the emergency.

SINKING OF THE U. S. S. "CHAUNCEY" IN COLLISION.

[Extract from report of the only surviving officer, Lieut (J. G.) F. K. O'Brien, United States Navy, executive officer.]

The U. S. destroyer Chauncey was rammed by the steamship Rose and sunk at 1.46 a. m. on November 19, 1917, shortly after the Chauncey had cleared the port of Gibraltar. Of a crew of 91 officers and men, 1 officer and 69 men were saved, while 3 officers and 18 men were lost.

SINKING OF THE U. S. COAST GUARD SHIP "TAMPA."

The greatest disaster suffered by the Coast Guard, and the largest individual loss of life sustained by our naval forces during the war, occurred on September 26, 1918, when the cutter Tampa was sunk with all hands on board in Bristol Channel, presumably by a torpedo from an enemy submarine. The cutter had gone ahead of her convoy, and although a distant explosion was heard by the vessels in the convoy, no positive evidence has ever been received as to the exact cause of the disaster. Diligent search by several destroyers in the vicinity of the disaster revealed only two unrecognizable bodies in sailors' uniforms and some small pieces of wreckage. Thus perished 111 brave officers and men.

WORK OF THE ARMED GUARD.

[From reports of officer in command of guard.]

STEAMSHIP "OWASCO"—LOST DECEMBER, 1917.

We left Norfolk about November 23, and arrived in Gibraltar on the 6th of December, and we left Gibraltar on the 8th of December in company with two British, one Norwegian, and ourselves, at 8 a. m. We stood up the Spanish coast within about 3 miles of shore until dark. Then it started to blow up and rain, and it was lightning, and we lost sight of the British ship ahead of the Norwegian. The Norwegian was burning her stern lights pretty bright. I went down to my room and straightened up and looked around, and sat there until about 10 o'clock, I guess it was, and turned in. I had just about dozed off when I heard a report, or rather felt it. I dressed, got on the bridge, and asked what was the trouble. I was standing on the starboard side of the bridge when I saw something in the water, and I said, "What." This was about 11.30 p. m. on the 10th of December. That is all I got out when she struck. The ship was swinging to port slowly at the time, and a torpedo hit forward of the bridge in No. 3 hold, blew off hatches of same, and went into No. 2. The flames shot in the air as high as the mainmast. I looked up to see if mast was coming down, but she stayed there. The wireless aerial, however, came down. The wireless house lifted off the deck about four feet and shoved aft. The wireless operator and instruments were all on the deck. The captain said, "All hands abandon ship." I said, "That is all we can do," for the whole forward part of the deck was in flames. The four men on watch on the forward gun came over the platform on the port side and ran aft, as the wind was from the port and shot the flames to starboard and made it possible for them to come aft. At that time I got to the boat which was on the starboard side aft. The after gun's crew was standing by with the gun trained to port. I said, "You can't see anything, the ship is in flames, so let's lower the boats." We lowered the boats and all hands got in. There were some firemen came along and asked to get in, and I said, "Jump in." I stood on the deck and waited and hollered if there was any more on board. I got no reply; the men in the boat said, "Come along; she is going now." I looked over at the after hatches, and they were under water. I then jumped in the boat, cut the sea painter, and got away from the ship's side. The poop was pretty near submerged at that time. I saw a boat. I hailed it and asked if there was room for some men, as I had over my capacity. It was the captain's boat, and he said "Yes." I went alongside, and he took about eight men out of my boat. He then shoved off, and I could not see the boat any more. I heard some one holler, "Pull for the light." We made for the light, and it took us from 11.30 to 1.55, which is about 2 hours and 25 minutes, to get to the shore, which was Villajoyosa, Spain.

STEAMSHIP NAVAJO—LOST AUGUST, 1917.

On August 1, 1917, at 3.30 p. m., in latitude 48° 30′ N., longitude 25° W., the Navajo caught fire. I was sleeping at this time, as it was my watch below. I was awakened by the cry of fire. Upon arriving on outer well deck I saw that the entire after part of the vessel was in flames. I asked the captain if anything could be done. He said "No; the oil tanks were burning."

The fire spread so rapidly that it was necessary to take to the lifeboats within five minutes of the alarm. The boats were lowered; the ship still under full speed, as it was impossible to stop the engines. After leaving the ship it was discovered that some of the crew of the steamer were still on board, being unable to get to the boats owing to the intensity of the fire. Word was passed to all boats to keep together and as near the ship as possible so as to pick up the crew if necessary. As soon as possible the captain, chief engineer, and myself again boarded the Navajo and discovered that nothing could be done to save the ship. Shortly after our boats were lowered a sailing vessel, the Norwegian bark Concordia, hove in sight. The Norwegian bark picked up our lifeboats and stood by us. We then took our crew from the bark and returned to the Navajo to make another attempt to put out the fire. This was found impossible.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to tow the Navajo. The steering gear aft was destroyed, the quadrant being warped by fire, so that it was impossible to steer her. The Navajo was abandoned. In the morning we again boarded the Navajo and found that she was filling rapidly. An attempt was made again to tow her, but this failed.

STEAMSHIP JOHN D. ARCHIBALD—LOST JUNE, 1917.

About 3 p. m., June 16, 1917, four and one-half hours out of Brest, sighted what we supposed to be a submarine, 2½ points on starboard bow and at a distance of 6 to 7 miles on the rim of the horizon. Looked like a large fishing boat or cargo steamer of 1,000 or 1,500 tons, appeared to have a mast and a sail which could not be made out on account of the distance and haze. Nothing was clearly distinguishable. On sighting the submarine, the John D. Archibald shifted her course so as to bring the submarine about 3 or 4 points broad on the port bow. The vessel began zigzagging as soon as the submarine was sighted, zigzagged 6 to 8 points to the west and north starboard; speed about 10 knots, visibility improving. The submarine submerged. The John D. Archibald immediately broadcasted general warning on her main radio which has a radius of about 1,000 miles, so I was informed by the operator. The gun crews had been at their stations since leaving the harbor of Brest and were at their station when submarine was sighted.

About 4 p. m., C. E. Marson, seaman, at forward gun sighted a torpedo on starboard bow at about 600 yards, which he immediately reported to the captain, who was on the bridge with most of the ship's officers and myself, the captain had the helm put hard starboard. The torpedo was coming toward the starboard beam and appeared to be going about 32 knots and about 6 or 9 feet below the surface. The torpedo left a wave similar to that made by torpedoes of the United States Navy. It ran straight. I saw the torpedo when it was about 150 yards from the ship. The ship did not answer her helm in time to save her. She was not fairly started on her swing at the time she was struck. The torpedo struck the starboard side of the ship in line with No. 3 boat and about the center of the engine room. There was a terrific explosion, the boat gear was blown away, and a large volume of water was thrown upward. This occurred on the starboard side. The port side of the ship was not affected. The engine was stopped instantly by the impact of the explosion. The explosion probably wrecked the engines and boilers. The after end of the ship immediately sank as far as the main deck.

None of the gun crew were injured. Three men in the engine room were killed instantly and one of the engine-room crew severely injured. His injury was due to inhaling gas and steam after the explosion. He was found outside the engine room by the gun crew amidst wreckage. The captain gave orders to abandon ship, and ship's company left in five minutes in two boats.

While in the lifeboats and astern of the ship and about 150 yards from her, we saw a periscope about 100 yards away between the boats and the ship and on the ship's starboard quarter. This periscope was smaller than those used in the United States Navy. It was about 2 inches in diameter and showed a couple of feet. It was painted a dull greenish paint. There seemed to be something inside of the periscope on the order of a glass tube about 1 inch in diameter, which showed before the periscope came to the surface. The tube seemed to telescope in the periscope. There was no housing or hood on the periscope to be seen. We saw the periscope follow a course around the port side of the ship. The submarine then came to the surface on the starboard side of the ship. The boats were then about a mile away from the ship making to the eastward under oars. The submarine then fired about 10 shots into the ship. The ship listed to starboard and sank astern first. Immediately after the John D. Archibald sank the submarine submerged, or perhaps a little before. A short while afterwards a passing French steamer fired on No. 1 boat, mistaking her for a submarine. She afterwards discovered her mistake and ceased firing. The steamer came alongside of No. 2 and offered to rescue. The mate in charge thought it unwise to imperil the ship and expose her to submarine attack, so declined help and requested the steamer to proceed, which she did, and escaped. This French steamer said she would notify the patrols. The steamer passed on to the east. The boats in the meantime had gotten together.

At about 9 p. m. dusk, sighted a submarine on the surface bearing to the east of the boats and at about a distance of 2,000 yards. At the same time three French patrol boats were seen coming from the west at about 12 knots. It soon became hazy and dark. We were provided with a flash light and a lantern. We desired to signal to the patrols, but screen the lights from the submarine. We placed our bodies between the lights and the submarine, turning our backs on the submarine and holding the light in front of us. The patrols used their searchlights on the submarine, fired upon her, and sent our warnings. So far as I know, the submarine was not damaged. The patrols came to the boats and we hurried on board in order not to delay them in attacking the submarine. The gun crew and myself lost all our belongings on board. We were but lightly clad, as the weather was warm.

STEAMSHIP ROCHESTER—LOST NOVEMBER, 1917.

While traveling with the convoy the Rochester did not zigzag, as her speed on a straight course would just enable her to keep up with the other ships, which were zigzagging. On November 2 one of the men at the after gun sighted a periscope on the starboard quarter about 500 yards distant. It appeared to be about the size of a broom handle. It submerged before any shots could be fired. The same afternoon, at 4.45 p. m., the lookout in the after crow's nest reported a torpedo wake on the starboard beam less than 100 yards distant. The wake became plainer as if the torpedo had approached nearer the surface, and struck almost instantly on the starboard side abreast the after end of the engine room. The weather at the time was clear, the sea smooth, and the visibility good.

The force of the explosion caused the whole ship to lurch to port. She righted herself immediately. The explosion wrecked the engine room, put the dynamo out of commission, smashed the transmitting gear of the wireless, and knocked down two wires from the aerial. The headway of the ship was stopped immediately, and the ship filled with steam and smoke following the explosion.

The gun's crew off watch manned their station at once, but as there was nothing seen of a periscope or submarine the after gun crew were ordered to clear away the raft and launch it. The commander of the guard and master got in a boat, and all boats cast off and met 500 yards astern of the Rochester, according to an agreement previously made. The armed guard totaled 13, with the commander. The merchant crew complete when on board, including the master and officers, totaled 36. The entire personnel of the vessel therefore numbered 49. The three boats then separated, each steering a different direction. Just after they separated, at 5.15 p. m., a submarine opened fire at the ship. Owing to the lifeboat being so low in the water, the submarine could not be seen, but the flash of the gun was discovered. The gun flashes appeared to be about 6,000 yards off the starboard bow of the Rochester. The first shots fired at the vessel were high and to the left. The last shot (there were 10 in all) hit the vessel well above the water line on the starboard side. It was then rapidly getting dark. As soon as the captain thought the lifeboat was out of sight, he had the mast stepped and made sail. In the mind of the armed-guard commander there is no doubt but what the ship was not long in sinking. At daylight of the next morning neither of the other two boats were in sight. On the afternoon of November 3 the wind blew to a gale, which lasted all the time the men were in the boat and which, together with a steady rain, caused the men to suffer from exposure.

The lifeboat was equipped as follows: One 25-gallon breaker of water; two tanks, each about 3 feet square and 10 inches deep, filled with hard bread. Some of the crew had been eating ham, which was rather salty, and drank a great deal of the water. The captain asked one of them how much water there was, and he said, "Plenty." The captain grew suspicious, however, and examined the breaker himself. He found but 5 gallons left. Some of the rain was utilized for drinking, but owing to the spray that constantly washed over the boat not much could be obtained. Regarding an article in a New York paper that the captain held the men from the water with a revolver, this story is wholly false. One man, an oiler, who was thirsty, said if he did not get water he would jump overboard. As he was making himself disagreeable, he was told to "jump ahead." He did not attempt it, however. One of the men had a bad wound in his thigh, caused by the explosion of the torpedo. This wound was attended to as well as could be done under the circumstances, with the aid of a first-aid packet. When this man was examined on arrival in port by a physician, he stated that it was the cleanest wound he had ever seen, probably due to the cold and salt water. At 2 a. m. on November 7 Tory Island light was sighted. The captain ordered the sail lowered and an improvised sea anchor put out, as the coast was strange and there was a heavy sea. At daybreak, while looking for a place to land, a British patrol boat was observed. This patrol boat picked up the members of the lifeboat and took them to Lough Swilly, where dry clothes were given to them.

STEAMSHIP "LUCIA"—LOST OCTOBER, 1918.

At 5.30 o'clock p. m. on October 17, 1918, the U. S. A. C. T. Lucia, bound for a European port (in convoy without escort), was torpedoed amidships on the port side, the torpedo entering the engine room and immediately killing four men. I had been on watch on the upper deck of chart house about 10 minutes, and after surveying both sides with with the naked eye, I started to use my glasses. I finished looking to starboard and had just started on the port side looking aft, and as my range of vision was coming abeam I saw a white wake about 100 yards off our port beam, which was about 5 yards in length. On or about the time I saw this wake the explosion occurred. A shower of dust and débris caused by the explosion interfered with men on after gun platform and lookout in the after crow's nest, and the explosion caused such a vibration that it knocked the men stationed on after gun platform off their feet. Immediately upon recovering themselves they manned gun and trained to port at my orders. At the time of explosion I immediately ordered both guns trained to port, but could find no trace of submarine; and I then sent semaphore signal to the U. S. S. Hawaiian to broadcast our S O S, as the explosion had put all dynamos in engine room out of order and we had only our auxiliary set left for use. The armed guard remained at their stations from time of torpedoing until the last gun's crew had left ship, at 2.20 o'clock p. m. on the following day, a total of 20 hours and 50 minutes after being torpedoed. During the night I had a very sharp lookout kept for submarine to appear, but without result. On or about 4 o'clock a. m. on October 18 I decided that submarine might try to shell ship at daylight, and I broke out 40 rounds of ammunition for each gun, but nothing occurred. During the night the ship was in sinking condition and aft gun platform was just clear of water, as the explosion of torpedo had carried away the bulkhead between the engine room and No. 4 hatch, and slowly the heavy sea had caused water to enter No. 5 and No. 6 hatches, respectively. On or about 12 o'clock noon on the 18th the water started forcing its way forward, getting as far as No. 3 hatch.

At 2.30 p. m., after being repeatedly warned by the master that ship was in hopeless condition, the last radio operator and myself took to our boat. The boat, of which I had charge, carried, besides armed guard, the master and three members of civilian crew, and we, with the other four boats and raft, hauled well to leeward clear of wreckage and rode to sea anchors, the sea at that time being very rough. At 3.15 p. m. the stern slowly started to disappear and her bow was lifted to a vertical position, and in doing so carried away her mainmast. When she attained a vertical position she slowly disappeared from view, carrying away her stack and foremast, and finally disappeared at 3.20 p. m.

The wind was rising and the sea was beginning to run so high that it took the utmost precautions to prevent the boats from capsizing, and we managed to keep all boats afloat by continuously bailing water. At 9.26 p. m. the U. S. S. Fairfax sighted the boat of which I had charge, and after exchanging signals we brought boat alongside and with greatest difficulty managed to get entire crew aboard.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY].

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I shall not employ any part of the time allotted me to praise or condemn the American Navy. I want to take advantage of this opportunity to have a resolution introduced and make a few remarks upon it. I ask the clerk to read it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas artificially controlled markets are harmful, and gambling in the price of the product of the farm, commonly called dealing in futures, is hurtful to the farmer and likewise levies tribute on the consumer; and

Whereas the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges, organizations whose members deal in or are interested in deals in futures of cotton; and the representatives of foreign countries, and representatives of foreign firms engaged in the manufacture of cotton have entered into contracts affecting future deliveries of large amounts of cotton through the said exchanges, and that these Governments and firms have, it is alleged, sold short in the market, through the New York Cotton Exchange; and

Whereas it is now alleged that these Governments and firms are having carried in the New York Cotton Exchange from month to month these contracts; and

Whereas said speculations are alleged to be the cause of the violent fluctuation in the cotton market, as recorded in said exchanges, and for the low price of cotton now prevailing: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five members be appointed by the Speaker from the membership of the House of Representatives to inquire:

First, as to the cause or causes of the present fluctuation in the price of cotton;

Second, whether the present low price of cotton is due to any conspiracy, combination, contract, or practice or restrain on the part of any persons, groups, or corporations engaged in the buying or selling of contracts for future delivery of cotton;

Third, to ascertain the extent, manner, and method of any manipulation or control of the visable supply of cotton by any individuals, groups, associations, or corporations and especially those operating through the New York Cotton Exchange;

Fourth, what legislation is needed to insure reasonable and fair market conditions for cotton and a free and open channel and distribution of same;

Fifth, that the said committee shall have the power to send for witnesses, administer oaths, examine books and papers of the said cotton exchange or any member thereof, or any person dealing in or having connection with said exchange;

Sixth, that the said committee shall have power to sit during the session of the House and shall report its findings and recommendations to the House.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, as I said, I shall not use the time allotted me to discuss this naval appropriation bill. I shall rather use it to call to the attention of the Members of this House and ask of them relief from a situation that threatens with ruin the cotton growers of this country. They are being crushed by the manipulation of the cotton market. The gamblers in futures within and without the cotton exchanges are robbing the people of the South of all the fruits of their toil. Twenty million of people, directly or indirectly, are dependent for prosperity upon cotton. They have toiled early and toiled late to produce this present cotton crop, only to see the profits of their toil destroyed by gambling in futures. They now ask us, as they have asked often before, to make this thing impossible. Unless the American Congress shall aid them they perish.

Last summer the Government estimate of the cotton crop was about 14,000,000 bales. The price then was around 30 cents per pound. As the season progressed the estimate fell, and as the estimate of the crop fell the price of cotton likewise fell. In other words, this unprecedented thing happened: The less the supply and the greater the demand the lower the price. That could not happen and did not happen by any law of supply and demand. When this last season's cotton was first on the market—I am speaking now of spot cotton—it sold at from 32 to 38 cents per pound.

The Government estimate then was that the crop would be about 12,000,000 to 13,000,000 bales. With each succeeding report the estimate was reduced, until finally it was around 11,500,000 bales, and the ginning report indicates that that was about the correct estimate. We have a crop of about 11,500,000 bales. We had no visible supply of cotton when this crop was put on the market. The estimated consumption of cotton was around 18,000,000 bales, and yet since the cotton has been ready to market the price has constantly dropped, until now there is no market at all for cotton. When you read the reports from the exchanges that cotton futures are 22 or 23 cents, it does not mean that if you have spot cotton you can sell it even for 22 cents. In fact, there is cotton now in the market that has been there for months unsold, though there is a reported market every day. But with our crop the shortest we have ever produced, with the largest acreage the South ever had planted, and the most expensive we ever grew, cotton is now selling, if selling at all, around 20 or 22 cents, although it sold as high as 38 cents when it was thought we were going to have 1,000,000 or 1,500,000 bales more. I charge that there is manipulation of the cotton market. I am informed that there is an agreement entered into by certain people in this country through the cotton exchanges to furnish certain foreign countries and firms manufacturing cotton in those countries a large amount of cotton. This cotton was contracted at a price such that they could not go into the open market and buy the spot cotton at that price. So, therefore, we have seen this remarkable thing, that the price of future cotton has fluctuated as much as 200 points in a day, or $10 a bale. How much more the fluctuation would have been no one knows, except the exchange adopted a regulation limiting it to this amount. There can not under the rule of the exchanges now be a greater fluctuation than $10 a bale in any one day.

Everyone knows that cotton is worth no more this morning than it will be this afternoon, and that this difference of $10 a bale is purely speculative, although in the morning on the exchanges it appears to be worth $10 a bale more than it is in the afternoon. If the cotton was worth what it sold for on the 1st of October—around 35 cents per pound—this fluctuation caused by gambling in exchanges represents a loss to the people who grew the cotton of more than $800,000,000. This year's cotton crop of 11,500,000 bales is now worth less by $867,000,000 than it was last October.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Is not practically all the cotton in the hands of the speculators, and has it not been since October?

Mr. CARAWAY. Oh, no.

Mr. PLATT. They bought it from the farmers early, did they not?

Mr. CARAWAY. The cotton speculator never bought a bale of cotton from the farmer in his life.

Mr. BAER. Do they not deal in fictitious and imaginary cotton, just as they do in wheat?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I am thoroughly in sympathy with the gentleman's resolution, and I hope he will include all of the other farm products. I am willing to vote for that.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am sure that if you should bring a bale of cotton on the floor of the Cotton Exchange in New York there is not a man there who would know what it was. Yet they deal in more imaginary bales of cotton every month than is represented by any crop that has ever been grown by the people in this country. Now, I know, and everyone knows, that it is a manipulated market which, as the supply diminishes and the demand increases, causes a fall of the price. That can not happen by any law of supply and demand.

Answering the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] that the cotton is in the hands of speculators, I want to say that the speculator never has spot cotton. Cotton is in the hands of one of two parties—the farmer who has grown it or the small merchant who has bought it or has taken it in payment of debt.

Mr. PLATT. Isn't he a speculator?

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman has such a peculiar idea of speculators that I will not argue with him. If a man who buys a bale of cotton for $50 and hopes to sell it for $51 is a speculator, then the small merchant is a speculator. I never understood that the man who bought a bale of spot cotton and bought it at a fair price and sold it at a fair profit was a speculator.

Mr. PLATT. If I buy 100 shares of the New York Central stock with the expectation of selling it at a higher price, am I not a speculator?

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman imagine that the man who buys a horse for $100 and hopes to sell it for $110 is as much a gambler as the man who bets that he will hold three aces? If so, then I concede he is correct. The man who buys future cotton does not have cotton to sell. He would not know cotton if he saw it. He is the man who is now destroying, in the hands of the producer and the small merchant, the price of cotton. He has already this year destroyed more than $860,000,000 worth of property produced by the people in 11 of these States. That is the work of these cotton exchanges and those who deal in them.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Wool is somewhat similar to cotton. I got a letter yesterday from a woolgrower who says that at the beginning of the war wool was 60 cents a pound and his wife bought yarn for $2.50 a pound. Then wool went down to 50 cents a pound, and now his wife is paying $4 a pound for yarn.

Mr. CARAWAY. Some dishonest speculators have been manipulating the wool price. I realize that unless you gentlemen who are not directly interested in the prosperity of the people who grow cotton will help us in this situation we can not be saved. You have the votes. If our need appeals to gentlemen on that side of the House and from that section of the country where cotton is not grown, we can destroy this vampire that robs us. But if you are willing to let the people who grow cotton be stripped of every cent of profit by these cotton exchanges in New York and New Orleans, we must suffer. But you can not destroy our section of the country without reacting hurtfully on yours. Your prosperity and our prosperity are intertwined. If we are destroyed, you are to be destroyed also. Unless there is some means devised by which people shall profit by the wealth they produce the production of wealth will cease altogether.

This is not an ordinary situation that confronts this country. It is destructive to the financial interests of a majority of the people who live in 11 States of this Union. I know whereof I speak and I know their condition. I know that if the producer of wealth must sit helpless and see some agency beyond his power individually to control rob him of the profits of his toil he is going to cease to toil. And it is a self-evident fact that such a manipulation of the cotton market is now going on. No market regulated by supply and demand can vary $860,000,000 within two and a half months.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Does not the gentleman think that the repeal of the embargo restriction would be of more real benefit to the cotton market than an investigation of the cotton exchange?

Mr. CARAWAY. I think the embargo affects the price of cotton some, but it has been practically lifted. There are markets open now for cotton that would consume several million bales more than the cotton now in sight, and yet this condition exists.

Mr. BLACK. My understanding is that there are certain restrictions upon neutral countries now—Norway, Sweden, Holland, and Denmark—and I think they ought to be absolutely removed.

Mr. CARAWAY. I think that is true.

Mr. LAZARO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes.

Mr. LAZARO. The gentleman, in speaking of the abuses on the floor of the cotton exchanges, does not mean to convey the impression that he would have an act abolishing legitimate speculation on the floor of the cotton exchanges in cotton, does he?

Mr. CARAWAY. There never was a legitimate speculation in futures. [Applause.] I would abolish that. It is wrong to gamble anywhere in anything, and I would abolish the cotton exchanges as I would any other gambling den. [Applause.]

Mr. LAZARO. Is the gentleman opposed to cotton exchanges?

Mr. CARAWAY. To anything you call an exchange if it deals with fictitious production and fictitious prices. I would oppose any place where they sell cotton or any other crop of the soil that has not been planted. The gentleman from Louisiana knows that right now he can go to a cotton exchange and buy every bale of cotton that is to be grown in 1919, although there is not now an acre of cotton planted and nobody knows how many will be planted.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentleman, and I am willing to go as far as he to abolish abuses, but I am opposed to destroying the legitimate cotton exchanges in a cotton-growing community.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, there may be a legitimate cotton exchange. I never saw one.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas has expired.

Mr. CARAWAY. May I have just one or two more minutes?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two more minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CARAWAY. I wanted to say this, that I see some gentlemen are very much opposed to abolishing cotton exchanges. I remember when there used to be an exchange in New Orleans called the Louisiana State Lottery. The exchange was that people all over the land would buy tickets entitling them to draw something that they never got, and this Congress abolished that because it was simply a gambling device. I have heard no one in recent years defend it, although at the time it had many advocates. It was just as legitimate a business and it appealed just as much to legitimate business as do cotton exchanges as they are now manipulated. It was simply a means of dealing in people's credulity, and that is all that the cotton exchanges do. You can go into a cotton exchange and buy millions and millions of bales of cotton to be grown in 1919 when there is not an acre of cotton planted and nobody knows that there will be an acre planted. We presume there will be, but how many million bales will be grown no one knows, and yet that cotton crop is being sold over and over every day, and some people say that it is legitimate business. As I tried to point out once before, this condition now exists.

The interest of the spinner and the dealer in futures is identical. Under present rules of the exchanges they operate together. The spinner can say, "I want a million bales of cotton," and the dealer in futures, the legitimate speculator, as some of you gentlemen call him, says, "If you will keep out of the cotton market and not buy a bale, I will break the market until you can have that cotton at whatever price you agree to pay me," and there is no power short of this Government that can prevent their carrying that agreement out. To-day, if it were not for the fear that this Congress will abolish cotton exchanges, the cotton exchanges in New York and New Orleans could make cotton sell at $5 a bale.

Mr. LAZARO. Has the gentleman given any thought to the Liverpool Exchange and how we could remedy the situation over there?

Mr. CARAWAY. The Liverpool Exchange can not affect the value of a single bale of cotton in the United States unless it has an exchange in the United States with which it can cooperate. Gentlemen, it is the old, old question of right and wrong. It is the question presented ever since governments began—Shall the strong plunder the weak? Shall those who toil not be rich, while those who labor from sun to sun are poor? Our actions here will give the answer.

For myself I have already decided. I shall do all that lies within me to destroy those vicious interests that gamble away the wealth of our farmers, that reward honest toil with poverty, and laugh when grim want sits at the fireside of those who have created the wealth of our land—the farmers of this country. Let us pass this resolution and destroy these plunderers of our land. [Applause.]

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the naval bill carries appropriations amounting, I believe, to about three-quarters of a billion dollars. I do not remember for certain the amount carried by the naval bill when I came into Congress, but I am quite confident that it was far less than $100,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. When the gentleman and I came here to Congress 22 years ago, I voted in the committee room for the first naval bill that I had anything to do with, and it carried less than $23,000,000, and the gentleman voted for it on the floor.

Mr. MANN. From $23,000,000 to three-quarters of a billion dollars is something of a jump. However, we have now gotten so in the habit of referring to billions of dollars that I have noticed lately that Members introducing bills requiring appropriations seem to be rather ashamed of naming any sum less than $10,000,000 on up to $100,000,000.

I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the naval appropriation bill itself. I introduced in the House to-day a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the subject of making estimates and appropriations. I never have been on one of the appropriation committees of this House, although I have given a good deal of attention to appropriation bills, as various chairmen know. There has been a great deal of agitation in the country in favor of adopting what is called the budget system. I have some doubt as to whether many of the people who advocate the adoption of the budget system know what it means; but they do know this, and the rest of us know the same thing, that as the Government has grown up our method of getting requests from the executive, which we call estimates of appropriations, and our method of following those requests by appropriations has "just growed up," and while there is a very good reason for nearly everything that is done, still it is more or less haphazard. The original estimates of appropriations made by the executives are not examined very carefully by the heads of departments, and they can not be. There is no correlation whatsoever between the heads of departments as to the estimates which they make, and the effort which we made at one time by legislation requiring the President to exercise his power amounts to nothing, because it is physically impossible for the President himself to give much attention to the matter of appropriations, except that he follows the requests of some of his subordinate officials. I do not know how far we can go in the way of correcting.

I have proposed the appointment of a commission to be composed of six Members of this House, to be nonpartisan or bipartisan, and six Members of the Senate, with authority and direction to investigate the whole subject and to report to Congress. I have heard a great many different Members of the House suggest at different times remedies for the existing evil, but none of the remedies which I have ever heard suggested appealed very strongly to me, and I think those suggesting the different remedies seldom agreed. Now that we have got to passing appropriation bills in time of peace amounting to three-quarters of a billion dollars, an increase from $23,000,000 in 22 or 23 years, now that we have come to the point where we must do without many things which we would like to have and where we must appropriate much money for many things which we would like to have, and where we must appropriate much money for many things which some of us would like to do without, we have simply got to reorganize our system of making appropriations. We have got to reorganize the system which is in effect in regard to the requests which come from the departments and from the executive branches of the Government asking for appropriations. I do not myself think that it is possible or that it would remedy the difficulty to concentrate the whole power of appropriations in the hands of one committee, to be then redistributed to a lot of subcommittees, for that is what we do now. The Committee of the Whole House makes the appropriations and they are distributed among a lot of subcommittees of the House, called committees of the House; but there ought to be by scientific and expert search—and that is the real way to get at anything—suggestions made which would aid the Executive and Congress to save what otherwise would be expended, to the amount probably of hundreds of millions of dollars a year, without the loss of a single thing necessary to be done by the Government.

I want to say this resolution that I introduced I drafted in pencil while I was over in the hospital last November, and, as is my habit in such matters, I laid it away to cool off, wondering whether it was the fantasy of a moment or whether it would appeal to my judgment when I was cool. The able gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], the great chairman of a great committee, the other day in discussing the deficiency bill said that he had an idea of this sort in his mind. I concluded I would introduce my resolution, hoping that between us and with the aid of the other Members of Congress, or aiding them, we might put into law a provision, in the form of a joint resolution or as an item on one of the deficiency appropriation bills, authorizing a commission, the expense of which may be $100,000, as suggested here, or it may be less, or it may be a little more, but it ought to save the Government more millions of dollars a year than there are Members of this House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield before he takes his seat?

Mr. MANN. Yes, if I have the time.

Mr. GARNER. I fully agree with the gentleman's suggestion that we ought to have a commission to investigate this matter, and I want to suggest to the gentleman if we could not adopt the resolution, send it to the Senate, and put a similar provision in one of the appropriation bills, so if that became the law it will be sure to pass the other body?

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. GARNER. The parliamentary situation might be such that the sundry civil bill might not become a law, and therefore we want to take both opportunities to get the other body to consider this.

Mr. MANN. Now, this plan that is in my mind practically—and I always try to be practical—is, suppose this resolution is referred to the Committee on Rules. I hope the Committee on Rules will report it, but, of course, that does not give it a privileged status, and I hope it may pass by unanimous consent; but if the Committee on Rules will report it I think the Committee on Appropriations will probably be warranted in including some item like this covering the substance—and I care nothing about the form—as an item in the general deficiency appropriation bill, which bill is almost certain to become a law. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE].

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I want to make a few observations concerning the resolution introduced by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] and submit for the serious consideration of you gentlemen who come not from the southern cotton-growing States but from the other States of the Union certain observations in order to induce, if I may, your sympathetic consideration, based partly upon your own self-interests, of that resolution. In the State of Texas the cotton crop begins to come in about the 1st of July. From the 1st of July of last year, therefore, up until about the month of October of last year, when Mr. Baruch and the President had something to say about the appointment of the commission to stabilize the price of cotton, there moved in the State of Texas about 660,000 bales of cotton of 500 pounds each at a price ranging around 30 cents per pound. That money enabled the people of the State of Texas to take more than their quota of war-savings stamps and of liberty bonds, predicated upon the supposition that there would be a legitimate market for their chief product, one-half of which is raised and owned by Republicans—our negro farmers. Therefore, if for no other reason, you should consider those, whether you do the white folks or not. [Laughter.] From then up to the present time in the State of Texas about 500,000 bales have moved at a lower price, until now it is about 22 cents per pound. In answer to the specific point raised by my friend Mr. PLATT, of New York, as to whether it were not legitimate speculation in reference to the things that have been done and are currently being done, I have this to say: There remain about 1,900,000 bales of cotton in Texas of the crop grown in the year 1918, which began to go on the market last July, and which up until now has not been sold because it will bankrupt the producer to part with it at present ruinous prices.

It will not only take from him any reward for his year's labor, but it will render him unable, as a tenant farmer or a negro cotton farmer, or a white man who has one plow or five plows, if they sell at the current price, which is manipulated and forced by English cotton spinners and the New York and New Orleans cotton spinners and the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchange gamblers and their agents—unable to pay for the liberty bonds they have bought, predicated on that asset of cotton for which they have legitimately worked and own. Not only that, but it will render my State of Texas, which has gone "over the top" in every one of these campaigns for liberty bonds and other patriotic things, unable to subscribe its allotted part, as it wants to do, to the forthcoming liberty bond issue, and then you gentlemen, if you fail to listen to us when we tell you the truth and the reasons for it, please do not say then that the people of Texas are not patriotic because they do not subscribe the full quota; but the fact is that they will have been prevented from doing that on account of the value of their cotton crop having been beaten down several hundred million dollars by these cotton-exchange gamblers.

We buy every pair of shoes in Texas, where there are 5,000,000 human beings, from you people in Philadelphia and Boston and Lynn and other sections of the manufacturing North. We can not do business with you on the high plane we have been doing it and pay our debts and buy those stocks and make your factories prosperous so you can hire your labor if you sit silently by and permit the gamblers to wreck us. We buy our wheat from the Dakotas and from Kansas. We buy our corn, millions of bushels of corn, from the mighty States of the North and West. We buy your leather goods and machinery, and we buy the products of your factories and your looms, and we have our raw cotton to pay for them as our money crop.

This would not be such a tragedy, my friends, if your constituents got the benefit of the sacrifice to which our southern farmers are now being subjected. But will you get this into your minds and not forget it? The very price of cotton goods in the United States right now that every one of your consuming constituents is using is fixed by the cotton manufacturers having come here to the board a year ago and agreeing to pay 37¼ cents a pound for the present cotton crop. They said that would be the market, and the board said all right. Manufacturers of cotton in America fixed the prices at which they are now selling their goods, wares, and merchandise predicated on 37¼ cents a pound for raw cotton.

Considering that fact, every cent below 37¼ cents a pound which these cotton-exchange gamblers have beaten the price down to—and they have already beaten it from 37 or 38 cents down to 22 cents, and there is no market for it at that—is so much put into the pockets of speculators, and your constituents get no benefit from it. And thereby you help unconsciously, you men from Pennsylvania and all these other splendid Commonwealths, by your silence to pauperize the masses of the people in my State.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGLE. I will.

Mr. FOCHT. It has been long known and commented on that Liverpool controlled the price of grain throughout the world. You say the price of cotton is controlled by Great Britain just as on leather. Now, how can Pennsylvania help you break that up?

Mr. EAGLE. My friend has referred to something I did not say. I said the English cotton spinner is operating through the New York Cotton Exchange and the New Orleans Stock Exchange by furnishing money to these gamblers in selling future deliveries, but it is impossible to deliver at continually lowering prices and at the same time declining to purchase even at the market. They are unitedly so doing it, and just how you can help it I wish was clear. But I say that the unlimited and indiscriminate selling of cotton futures which they can not meet with the cotton itself is having the effect of pauperizing my people.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EAGLE. I will.

Mr. BAER. The gentleman spoke about the North and that they are buying your cotton. I wish to say that a suit of overalls up in my State costs $5 a pair, and I looked it up the other day and weighed a suit of overalls and I find that at the present price your cotton producer gets 47½ cents for the cotton in that suit.

Mr. EAGLE. I have finished the observation I wanted to make, gentlemen. [Applause.]

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of permitting the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT] to submit a conference report, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

VALIDATION OF CERTAIN WAR CONTRACTS.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a conference report on the bill H. R. 13274, on which the conferees have come to no agreement, for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Conference report on the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law.

The SPEAKER. The report is ordered printed under the rules.

The following is the conference report:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 1032).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

On the amendment of the Senate to the bill and to the title of the bill the conferees have been unable to agree.

S. H. DENT, JR.,
W. J. FIELDS,
JULIUS KAHN,
Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE E. CHAMBERLAIN,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
C. S. THOMAS,
F. E. WARREN,
P. C. KNOX,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

THE NAVY.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15539, with Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15539) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in hearty sympathy with the resolution offered by my friend, Judge CARAWAY, of Arkansas. It represents the general desire of the people of the cotton-growing States. It is plain to us who live in the cotton belt that there is a conspiracy on between certain foreign spinners and certain American spinners, and they are using the speculators upon the cotton exchanges of the United States to beat down the price far below that warranted by the law of supply and demand. To make it plain to you that there is a conspiracy, let me say that when the exchanges are honestly conducted the price of cotton futures is always above the price of cotton in the local market. Now, the situation is reversed. The future price is $35 a bale below the spot price. This is inexcusable and indefensible and is proof positive to any man who understands the cotton business that there is a gambling deal on and operating right here in the United States to the detriment and great injury of the cotton producers of our country.

Gentlemen, here are the cotton producers of the United States, whose boys with your boys fought and fell upon the fields of France, and they are holding their cotton for a price that will yield a profit. And here are these men on the exchange, with no cotton to sell and with no intention of ever delivering a bale of real cotton on a contract, by putting up a margin of $15 a bale are able to beat down the value of a bale of cotton that the farmer is holding, worth $150 a bale under the law of supply and demand. Is it right? Is that fair? Is it fair to permit these men, with $15 a bale, to go upon an exchange and, regardless of the law of supply and demand, beat down the price of a product worth $150 that you are holding in order to obtain a legitimate profit? That is what is going on in the United States to-day. I charge that there is a conspiracy and that its agents are operating on the New York Cotton Exchange, and I think that the evil effects of this conspiracy, if not the conspiracy itself, are seen in the operations of the New Orleans exchange.

Even at that the New Orleans exchange is nearly always 100 points above the New York exchange. If the New Orleans exchange will not put its house in order, then it must not expect to survive. It is whispered around that certain foreign powers are trying to beat down the price so that they can buy this cotton at a low price and then bull the exchange market and run it up to 40 cents a pound, at which time they intend to supply the demands in Europe after they have robbed, through an American exchange, the cotton producers of the United States. [Applause.] Will we Members of the American Congress permit this to be done?

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to, but I have only four or five minutes, and in that time I want to touch on a few other points that I had in mind. Gentlemen, at the beginning of this war the farmers in the cotton belt of the United States lost $600,000,000 on the cotton crop of 1914. It was an awful blow to our people and caused great financial distress, and in order to help us in that financial embarrassment and hour of distress you heard—and many of you responded—the cry of "buy a bale of cotton." Now, when the war is over, are we going to permit the same cotton producers, merchants, and bankers of the United States who suffered such heavy losses in 1914, the first year of the war, to be driven into bankruptcy now, when the war has ended in victory and the world is demanding 6,000,000 bales of cotton more than America can supply? [Applause.]

It is unfair, gentlemen, and the Congress of the United States owes it to those men who supported the Government in every way possible with their money, buying war-saving stamps and liberty bonds, who aided the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. during all the stress and strain of war, and, better still, who gave their brave boys to fight and die on the fields of France—I say we owe it to them to prevent the existence of an institution that denies to them a fair deal in the markets of the world. [Applause.] All that we ask is the price warranted by the law of supply and demand, and unless the exchange reflects that price there is no just excuse for its existence. [Applause.] I am willing to include an investigation of the grain dealers' exchange. I want to say here that I do not believe that there is any such supply of wheat in the world as has been floating around in newspaper reports. [Applause.] I think that is a part of the bear propaganda.

Let us join hands and go together and investigate all exchanges that speculate in farm products. You will find conditions, gentlemen, that will shock the sensibilities of an honest, justice-loving people. I for one do not believe that it is necessary to have an exchange selling in unlimited quantities mere names of "wheat" and "corn" and "cotton" in order for the farmer to have a market for his product.

The American crop of cotton, wheat, and corn is consumed every year, and yet these crooks and gamblers tell us that it is necessary for them to sit in the exchanges and bet each day that the price of the farmer's produce will go up or down in order that the producer may have a market. If Congress is to permit the existence of an exchange that deals in farm products, Congress must compel that exchange to reflect prices justified by the supply and demand. Do you know what the situation is? This year the American cotton crop is about 7,000,000 bales of cotton short of the world's demand for American cotton. Now, what would the price be under the law of supply and demand? It would be around 35 or 40 cents, and in spite of the gambling exchanges we are going to hold cotton until the price goes above the cost of production and yields a fair profit to the American producer. The cotton gamblers are selling the market short. I understand that one foreign power has sold 800,000 bales short. This is not cotton except in name. Please bear that in mind. I am told that they are passing this gambler's bogus check down the line, continuing it from month to month. My God, will the American Congress, composed of men who come from districts where the boys have died for the Republic that claims to be just to its own people—will we, I ask you, permit an institution to remain in existence here when it is being used by rival commercial interests of a foreign country to the ruin of a great industry of the United States? [Applause.] Let us pass this resolution at the earliest day possible and go to New York and New Orleans and make a thorough investigation into the conduct of these exchanges and find out the exact situation, and while we are in the reconstruction period following the war let us determine whether or not we are going to permit gambling in farm products. The Louisiana State lottery is dead. The whisky traffic is doomed. Now let us say to the gamblers in farm products, "Your days are numbered." [Applause.]

This Congress owes it to itself, to its own sense of justice, it owes it to the cotton producers of the United States, to see to it that those who produce this great staple that brings to America the balance of trade shall at least have a fair deal in the markets of America. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, it costs $30 a bale now to gather from the field a bale of cotton and gin it and put bagging and ties on it and put it on the market, and this does not touch the cost of production. It cost 25 cents a pound to produce the crop of 1918. Think of it. A bale of cotton sold for $30 in 1914, and it now costs $30 after it is produced to pick it out, gin it, and put bagging and ties on it and get it ready for market, and yet regardless of the cost of production, and regardless of the great demand for American cotton, the gamblers with no cotton to sell still sell a paper contract with the name of cotton in it, and by so doing run counter to the law of supply and demand and try to deprive the producer of a fair price for his cotton.

Shall we permit these exchanges to defy the law and defeat the operation of the law of supply and demand?

Can you tell me why it was that cotton sold for 37 cents a pound when the sea was full of submarines and it was a hard matter and an uncertain undertaking to get cotton to a foreign port at all, and then when the war had ended and submarines had gone from the sea and foreign countries were calling for American cotton, and the President declared that all cotton needed could now go freely to allied and neutral countries, and the demand had been increased about 4,000,000 bales over the time when cotton sold for 37 cents—can you tell me, I say, why it is that a cotton exchange can be manipulated so as to insult and outrage and interfere with and defeat the law of supply and demand in such a fashion? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WINGO). The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama if he means to revise and extend the remarks he has just been making?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. IGOE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13274) to provide relief where formal contracts have not been made in the manner required by law, had further insisted upon its amendments to the said bill, and had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. KNOX as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. WEEKS and Mr. HOLLIS members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Interior Department.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in favor of this bill, the naval appropriation bill. In the absence of any expressions from the peace commission overseas as to an international agreement for a reduction in armament, there is, in my judgment, just one policy ahead of this Nation in respect to its naval program.

I want to address myself for a few minutes to the higher aspect of the case. This war has brought many changes in this world. The world turns around every 24 hours, and it has turned around a good many times since $23,000,000 was the basis of a naval appropriation bill. One of the results of this war is the transfer of the financial center of the earth from the Old World to the New. New York City to-day, by reason of being the chief financial city of America, is the center of distribution and the center of deposit of the world's supply of gold, monetary and commercial. It is the financial center of the earth. America is to-day the banker nation of the world. We hold to-day approximately $10,000,000,000 of the bonds, securities, and notes of Great Britain, France, Italy, Russia, Belgium, and Roumania. These are deposited with us as collateral for loans advanced. They unitedly pay us approximately a million dollars a day as interest. No nation in history ever had due it such a stupendous sum of money. It is simply a prudential act to do something tending to protect and guard it.

By the very geography and topography of the surrounding country, this can be done only by the presence of a great Navy. New York should be the great naval base of America.

It is the first time in 300 years of history that the financial center of the earth is in a city capable of being reached directly from the high and open sea. Before this war there were four great financial centers—London, New York, Paris, and Berlin. The three great European cities were none of them on the seaboard, but far in the interior, where no naval fleet could reach them. Between those cities and the coast would be the battle fields. But here we have the spectacle of the financial center of the earth in a city directly upon the open sea.

There are a few places in this world where great cities are builded where God Almighty intended that they should be builded. New York is not one of them. There is one city on earth located exactly where all geographers, scientists, and strategists say that a great city should be builded, and that is the city of Constantinople, the ancient city Byzantium, the early capital of the Byzantine Empire. Mankind early discovered the strategic value of the location of that city and made it the capital of the great Byzantine nation, where now is located the modern city of Constantinople. All the armies and navies of the earth could not take Constantinople if it is properly defended. It demonstrated its natural strength of position in this very war. The great English Army and Navy failed to take it. But New York is not one of these cities. New York is a difficult city to protect. It has no natural features of strength. It can not be made impregnable. The great guns of to-day range up to 30 miles. It is no longer necessary to get within 5 miles of a city in order to destroy it. We are building some ourselves to range of 45 miles. We are all familiar with the superguns of the Germans that ranged to 75 miles' range. Witness the spectacle of a great hostile naval fleet approaching the city of New York, the financial center of the earth, with guns having a range of 50 or 60 miles, from the open sea. The great city of New York would be absolutely helpless and hopeless. Now, it is paradoxical that a nation that has a second-class navy in a war with a nation having a first-class navy is no better off than if it did not have a single naval vessel and never had constructed one.

That was the situation of Germany in this war. Along the coast of Scotland lay the great grand fleet of Britain, stretching for 85 miles in an unbroken line of dreadnaughts and superdreadnaughts; and within the Kiel Canal and behind Wilhelmshaven and the defenses of Helgoland lay the second navy of the earth, that did not dare to come out. The grand fleet of Britain lay like a deadfall at the mouth of a cave, so to speak. Behind that grand fleet we beheld the open seas of all the world.

Now, there is another aspect of this case. Any naval program that we undertake we must conceive it upon the basis that our Navy is to be continually and perpetually divided into two or more units. We have two coasts. The peculiarity of the late war, so far as naval activities were concerned, was that the British Navy could be held together as a unit. The war was fought upon a peculiar geography. Two wars never come just alike. We have two coasts approximately the same in mileage.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I will as soon as I conclude my remarks. If you place the coast line of California upon the Atlantic it will reach from Maine to Carolina. Now, we have these two coasts. It seems that our Navy inherently and continually will be divided into at least two units, one in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific. Now, we learned a lesson in the Spanish War from the trip of the heroic Oregon, that left Puget Sound Navy Yard and went on its long trip around the Horn. That little ship was lying over at the navy yard in my district, floating in the roadstead, when she received orders to leave for Atlantic waters.

Mr. McCORMICK. Was that prior to the building of the Panama Canal?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes. A great naval fleet was supposed to have left the coast of Spain. We did not know but what it was leaving to bombard our coast cities. And by the way, I may say this in passing, that the great commercial cities of America are built on or near the seacoast, in a particularly hazardous position, either on the Great Lakes or on the ocean. Our Nation is different from most of the nations of the world. It calls inherently for a great navy. The old Oregon went clear around the Horn, and was 61 days in making the trip. We learned a lesson from that, to construct the Panama Canal by which we could throw together in the least possible time the fleets of the two seas. I remember when the little Oregon left Seattle. We were in hopes that she would stay there and guard us in that war for we had not at that time a fort on all Puget Sound or a battery. It was sent to the Atlantic waters. I remember seeing her go out sailing along the offing. We saw the waves part at her bow, the long line of smoke, and realized that the great city of Seattle on Puget Sound was without one ship to defend it.

For 61 days, day and night, that little ship held her course. Presently we were informed that she had rounded the Horn, was coming up right through the sea where the Spanish fleet was supposed to be—one ship out on the sea to meet an entire fleet. Often they would see a smoke, and that little ship would make for that smoke, plunging where the fleet was supposed to be. Nine times her decks were cleared for action. She came into the West Indies and hoisted her signal, "All well on board and ready for action." We learned a lesson and we constructed the Panama Canal.

There is another lesson in this war which we learned greater than the one we learned in the Spanish War, and that is if we had a war with any nation that had a superior navy we would be no better off than if we had not built a single war vessel.

So I am in favor of a great construction program. The changed conditions demand it. We, for the first time in all history, are the bond-holding Nation of the earth, and this world is filled with selfish men and selfish nations the same as it has always been. There is but one thing ahead of us that I can see, and that is the construction of a great and powerful Navy, together with coast defenses. I am in favor of the bill; I am in favor of the recommendations of the committee as to its building program commencing in 1922. [Applause.]

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Would the gentleman contemplate an Army on the same scale?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I do not know about an Army. We are dealing now with the Navy. Let us not confuse the two. Let every tub stand on its own bottom. We are talking Navy now and not Army.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman tell us as to the time it takes to go from Seattle to New York?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. It is 631 miles farther to Liverpool than it is to New York City, going round the Horn.

Mr. BAER. I mean taking the course through the canal; how much has it shortened it?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. It depends on the speed of the vessel. The Oregon was not a fast vessel; about 19 knots. She was a capital ship in her day. It took her 61 days. I think one of our capital ships now could make it through the canal in less than 20 days.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes.

Mr. FARR. Are we not as powerless on the Pacific coast to-day as when you had the Oregon there?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Approximately. We have forts now on Puget Sound, but by no means enough, either in number or strength. In my own city there are five transcontinental lines coming into it. It is quite a city, upward of 400,000 people. The Puget Sound district is the second district in America in exports and imports. I want my friend from Philadelphia and my friend from Boston to make note of that. It is the second district in America. Great and substantial interests are out there on the Pacific, on Puget Sound and elsewhere, and they must be protected and guarded.

Mr. KETTNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KETTNER. In answer to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR], I will state that the Oregon at the present time is the only ship we have on the Pacific coast, and it is the flagship of Admiral Fuller.

Mr. FARR. Then I was right in the question I put to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Yes, sir.

We have a navy yard 11 miles from our city where they were working 7,000 men night and day during the war. We are building two 10,000-ton ammunition ships in the shoal construction dock in that yard, a fleet of seagoing tugs for the Navy, and other great construction work. Immense Government interests are centered in that locality aside from the navy yard and its activities. All along the Pacific coast are great interests, great cities increasing by leaps and bounds in importance and wealth.

I spoke a few moments ago about the peculiar conditions of this war by which the grand fleet of Great Britain could be held together as a unit. There was a time at one period of the war when it looked like that great fleet would be divided. Only a change of campaign on the part of the Germans saved such a calamity. It was in 1917, when the Germans were assaulting the front to the west of St. Quentin. You will all remember that series of great drives or lunges was toward Montdidier and Amiens. It was evidently the plan of the German campaign at that time to break the line at the point where the English front joined that of the French. It was the natural point of attack. And they did attack in all their strength and fury, drove the front westward to the very outskirts of Amiens, with the hope of separating the two armies and crumpling the British back upon the channel. And they came frightfully near being successful. If they had succeeded, the British would have been forced to fall back toward the channel. As the British would be falling back toward a coast line, it would have forced at least a part of the grand fleet to come to the defense of the army as it approached the channel. When this had been done, it undoubtedly was the plan of the Germans to then bring out its navy and catch this British fleet in the channel waters, where there was little opportunity to maneuver, and by superiority annihilate it.

Coincident with this and as a part of the plan, some of the fast cruisers could escape out of the North Sea, as the greater British unit would in all likelihood come to the rescue or attempt to rescue the fleet engaged. The military campaign I have suggested was the natural campaign or plan to adopt. It had the threefold advantage of defeating the British Army, of capturing the channel ports, and of dividing the British fleet and reducing the units to a degree where the German Navy stood a fair chance of victory. But at the very time when there was a possibility of success, when the British Army was driven back on Amiens and the front was all but broken, the whole German campaign was changed. Thereafter the great offensives and plunges were made to the southwest in the direction of Paris.

It was evident that a strict strategic campaign of undoubted wisdom and soundness had been subordinated to a campaign the consequences of which were purely political. Paris henceforth became the objective, and the whole plan to gain the channel, and thus divide the grand fleet, was abandoned. It was, in my judgment, the second turning point in the war, the first having been the first Battle of the Marne. It was Germany's second great tactical and strategic blunder. Had she held to her first campaign, driven the wedge into Amiens and to the westward, instead of going southward to Chateau-Thierry, there might have been far different results. It follows as a corollary from the evident original campaign that the grand fleet of Great Britain would have been divided—something England always dreaded. Let us all thank God that the blunder was made.

So we can all see the danger of dividing a great fleet in time of war. England came very near being a victim in this war.

With us, in any war except where one coast, or rather one ocean, is absolutely safe, our fleet would of necessity be divided. The only result from such a situation—the only solution—is a strong Navy, so when the war hazard is greater on one coast than on the other a portion of the fleet of the lesser exposed coast can be transferred to augment the forces of the other.

Every British statesman announces England will never abandon her time-honored policy of the supremacy of the seas. That policy is of no consequence so far as it shall tend to shape our national policy. Let us build as best meets our requirements, and trust England and every other nation to do the same. We must, as I see it, shape our policy, our plans, to meet the requirements of America; for if we do not, it is safe to say no other nation will.

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill, and I am in favor of the recommendation of the committee on the three-year construction program. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to differ with my very good friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE], and with my also good friend, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY], and perhaps it is a little invidious to undertake to answer arguments evidently made for the purpose of circulation in their districts. But it seems to me perhaps just as well to say a few things that everybody must know are true, even if they seem to be in answer to these arguments. We have had a great war and everything has been high in price and nearly everything is still high in price, and everybody knows that those prices have got to come down. If you sell any kind of a future, anything for future delivery months ahead, you have to take a lower price, or if you were buying anything for the future, for delivery, say, next summer, you certainly would not pay as high a price as you are paying now. This is true with respect to metals, steel, iron, copper, and other staple commodities. So far as cotton is concerned, I am informed by gentlemen who come from New England and who are interested in cotton mills that cotton goods are already piling up in the markets and that prices have already gone down, and the people are not buying things as they did, because they expect the prices to go still lower. If they knew that the prices were at the bottom, they would buy; that is the psychology of buying. If you were going to buy a house and lot and the price now were $10,000 and you knew the agent would let you have it for $8,000 in six months, you would not buy it now, if you had any sense. That is what is happening with cotton and everything else. Cotton futures sell lower, of course, than spot cotton, and so would wheat futures, if the Government was not holding up the price.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. BAER. The price has been fixed on wheat, but here is a case where bran and middlings sold for $27 a ton, and after the restriction was taken off by the Government the price went to $48 a ton, and to-day it is over $50 a ton, and the price still remains on wheat at the same.

Mr. PLATT. It looks to me as though there were a pool controlling the price of middlings, or else there is an abnormal demand and a short supply.

Mr. BAER. That raises the price of your fodder, and that raises the price of your milk, and the people in the city holler because the farmers are charging so much.

Mr. PLATT. Exactly, but one curious thing I have noticed. The people of the Dakotas and other farmers do not complain of the grain exchanges when the prices are going up. Neither do the cotton farmers complain of gambling in futures in cotton when the price is going up. It is only when it is going down that they complain.

Mr. BAER. They complain up in my district the year around, because the price always goes up when they have nothing to sell, and when they have something to sell the price always goes down. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. They all complain that it is the short selling that makes the things go down in price. That is obviously untrue. Every time a man sells something for future delivery he has to buy it back again. It has been proven over and over again that the short selling of products steadies the market instead of putting the price down. It used to be said of pig iron that it was either a prince or a pauper. You could not deal in futures in pig iron. You always had to buy and sell at spot, and when there was very little of it on hand it sold high and when there was much of it on hand it sold low. I believe that has been changed somewhat, so that iron is now sold to some extent for future delivery and is steadier in price.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not know that I am right about this, but it seems to me that in the debate on the Food Administration bill a proposition was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] that the price of cotton be fixed, and it was resisted by those in this House who were interested in the cotton-raising districts. Am I right about that?

Mr. PLATT. I think the gentleman is right about that. I will say this, that I think there was talk of fixing the cotton price in October, and I had the idea then that that talk was put out for the purpose of getting the cotton away from the small cotton farmers at lower prices into the hands of the speculators. And let me say that the southern storekeeper who buys the cotton from the small farmer is the worst bloodsucker in the United States. He is a speculator pure and simple, and is as much worse than any purchaser and seller of futures in Wall Street as the devil is——

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is the gentleman making that statement on information of his own?

Mr. PLATT. I am making that statement on the testimony we took before the Banking and Currency Committee when the farm-loan bill was before Congress. We had the testimony over and over again from southern farmers and from agents of the Department of Agriculture, and we passed the Federal farm-loan act largely for the purpose of getting the small cotton farmer of the South out of the hands of these bloodsuckers, who get the cotton away from the small grower and hold it for speculation.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CARAWAY. You know I am not surprised at the gentleman thinking it was right, that it was perfectly legitimate, to buy and speculate in futures, but the thing we complain of is as to the money which we had to borrow from Wall Street to finance our cotton crop. A bale of cotton, if the gentleman knows about it at all, which I am sure he will admit he does not——

Mr. PLATT. I never bought any.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is handled by the merchant, who furnishes the grower of the cotton with his supplies.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; furnishes him with all his groceries and his clothing and everything else and gets the cotton grower in debt every single year for every bale of cotton he can grow, and the grower has to give up his few bales of cotton for anything the storekeeper will offer for it. And these storekeepers have the cotton now, and they are the fellows who are yelling because the price is going down. That is the whole story.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is exactly what it is. It is astounding how much misinformation a gentleman can accumulate in three or four years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. I desire to yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, the naval appropriation bill which we now have under consideration commits the United States to a new policy—a policy of expansion until we shall have in 1925 the greatest fleet in all the world; as Great Britain increases her navy we are to add to ours; we are to aim at having a Navy second to none. Of course, in 15 minutes I can not anything like cover my objections to the policy expressed in the bill. To cover the subject fully would require that I present all the objections which might be made to militarism and to imperialism, to world exploitation, and to the suppression of democracy in general. This bill means in the ultimate conscription of men for service in the Navy just as we had them conscripted for service in the Army, for sufficient forces to man the immense fleets proposed can never be had under the volunteer system. It means conscription in time of peace instead, as we have had it in time of war. We must contemplate that as the final result. While I can not in the short time allotted me anything like express all the objections which I have to this bill, there are a few things I want to say in my plain way and with all modesty.

I want to express one or two superficial objections which I have to this bill. Analyze this measure and you get out of it the belief upon the part of those who bring the bill forward that we have lost the war. I had thought that we had won the war, but it seems that I was mistaken. The American people thought that they had won the war. They entered into it with all their souls to abolish armaments—to do away with war; it was said to them from rostrum after rostrum, "Win the war; drive Prussian militarism out of the world. Usher in a period when there will be no war, and the men of the earth may dwell together in brotherly unity." But it seems that instead of ridding the earth of the burdens of armament we have but begun to arm. The argument was made on the floor of this House, when we were asked to vote for war against Germany, that if Germany is not defeated we would have to arm against her; we would have to make ourselves one of the great military and naval powers of the world and stagger on under the burdens of militarism—that was the reasoning that got my vote for the war; that argument got the support of the American people for the war.

AMERICA FOUGHT TO ABOLISH WAR.

I think I know something of the great heart of the common American man. I know that in that heart there was a resolve that we must do away with war and with all the hell that war means, so as to bring about a better time, one more befitting the professions of Christianity and the civilization of this age.

But in vain. We won the battles, but we have lost the war; that is the meaning of what they say who bring forward this bill. In vain the sacrifices of mothers and fathers and wives; in vain the pouring out of the blood of our soldiers upon foreign battle fields; in vain the brilliant achievements of the Argonne and Chateau-Thierry, the sufferings of Belleau Woods—all in vain; they mean nothing. The hobnails of the American doughboy are clattering upon the stones of Coblentz. They marched across the lordly Rhine over the floating bridge. They climbed the steeps and planted Old Glory upon the heights of the ancient fortress of Ehrenbreitstein. But all that means nothing; all has no significance! If we are to labor and stagger on under heavy armaments throughout the years to come, we might as well never have entered into a war; or, having entered into it, we might as well have lost.

I am not going to agree to this policy. I want to be respectful to the committee; I want to be respectful to every Member of the House who may favor this bill and may support it. I want to be respectful, if I can; but I am afraid that my views upon this bill may be construed as somewhat lacking in respect. I do not so intend it. But they are my views. I submit them in all humility and in all modesty. I submit them regretfully and only as a matter of stern duty. But I hold to it with all the strength of my reason and my soul that this bill represents a policy of the most stupendous folly that was ever advocated upon this floor. I would say that it represents a wicked policy if I only might say that and still be respectful, as I would like to be.

What is the meaning of this bill? What is the reasoning back of it? Whom are we arming against? Whom do we fear? The "Hun," as the superpatriot so loved to call him, has gone. Prussian militarism lies a smoldering ruin. It is merely a corpse that the nations of the world sit upon in Paris. They are merely a coroner's jury. The strength of the German armies is gone, not only for this generation but for a hundred years to come. It is a most stupid man who does not comprehend this fact.

There are two important naval powers of the world today besides ourselves. One is Japan, which has a navy much inferior to our own, even as it is to-day. And Japan is a poor nation and her fleet must continue to be inferior, it will be vastly inferior when we complete the program already adopted without taking the present bill into mind.

This added program and the policy it speaks for has no occasion in Japan, and no intelligent man will say so. The other great naval power is a power that has ruled the sea for ages. Britannia rules the waves to-day, and that Britannia might rule the waves has been the corner stone of British policy for over 300 years. That policy is founded on logic and has good reason to support it. With a people situated on a small island, a numerous people, depending almost wholly upon commerce and industry as a means of support, relying upon other nations for food and raw materials that enable them to live, we can well understand how the British may insist upon ruling the waves so long as Great Britain lies open to her enemies and to all the world in such fashion. We can understand how the British are not willing that their people shall be subject to be strangled to death by any power that may happen to get supremacy on the sea.

NAVAL SUPREMACY NOT ESSENTIAL TO OUR SAFETY.

But our situation is entirely different. We are self-sustaining. We have our own raw materials. We can feed ourselves. You may cut off our commerce to-morrow for a whole year long and the American people will live at the end of it, and there will be no suffering for lack of proper food, and we will be clothed. Our situation is altogether different from that of Great Britain. We have no far-flung colonies. We have embarked upon no policy of imperialism which makes it necessary that we retain control of the seas in order to get into communication with colonies that may lie in the remote corners of the world. God grant that we may never enter upon such a policy. But we will enter upon it if we carry out the policy that this bill speaks for.

But gentlemen say that these ships will never be built. Perhaps the remark has not been made upon this floor, but it has been made privately, made in the cloakrooms, and is generally current, that these ships will not be built. Some gentlemen think the world will agree upon disarmament before the ships are built, and, therefore, the next Congress will repeal the act. Then there are others that say that in order to procure disarmament by agreement of nations we must "bluff" Great Britain into agreeing to dismantle her fleet, and that the proposition merely involves a bluff upon our part.

A CHALLENGE TO GREAT BRITAIN.

Now, I want to say this: I have too high a conception of the honor of my country to take part in putting up a bluff. I will not humiliate my country. I will not descend to a contemptible plane of bluffing in order to bring about a policy of disarmament. I decline to descend to the ethics of the card table in fixing a policy for my country to pursue. Then what do we mean? We mean to build the ships. We mean to challenge British supremacy upon the seas. That is what we mean if we mean anything.

Now, I want to ask: Do you think, gentlemen, we are going to get away with it? Do you believe that Great Britain will permit the United States to challenge her naval supremacy? Do you think she will sit with folded hands while we build a fleet which shall master hers? Will she tolerate a competition in naval armament, the creation of a navy that may drive hers off the seas and starve her people into submission?

I am here to tell you that your policy means war with Great Britain. Great Britain has never stood for a challenge of her naval supremacy. For 300 years she has ruled the seas, and she will not give up that control to any other power, whether it be America, Germany, or Japan. "Go where you will, you shall not control the sea." So the British will say. "You shall not control the sea until Britain lies prostrate and bleeding and her fleet is driven by force from off the main."

Spain, in the old days, challenged British naval supremacy, and the answer was a scattered and destroyed Armada. The Dutch thought to challenge British supremacy, and the end was the wrecked and defeated fleets of Tromp and De Ruyter. France challenged it under Napoleon, and the answer was Abukir Bay and Trafalgar. Germany challenged British supremacy, and the answer was that great spectacle, the greatest the human eye ever took in, when the entire German fleet, dreadnaughts, superdreadnaughts, battle cruisers, submarines, transports, and all sailed across the North Sea and surrendered to British supremacy.

What Great Britain would not submit to from other nations she will not tolerate from us. Let not this Nation puff itself up with foolish egotism. Let not this Nation talk the foolish patter of "blood is thicker than water." It is not a matter of blood that counts. We ourselves have already had two wars with Great Britain. I tell you, gentlemen, those of you who are favoring this program, you are bidding for a third war with Great Britain, the bloodiest and most disastrous of them all.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. GORDON. Suppose that England should notify the United States that she will not permit us to trade with any one but herself and her allies. What would you say about that? Would you sit down and calmly acquiesce in it, or say we ought to fight?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Whenever the dignity and honor of our country are at stake I would say we ought to fight. Even the peaceable gentleman from Ohio would fight under such circumstances, I think.

Mr. GORDON. Yes; but understand I am not a pacifist. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Then I will withdraw that. I said it of the gentleman as a compliment. I am a pacifist if by that is meant one who loves peace. I think there is a saner and more rational way for the nations of the world to make up their differences than by plunging against each other like bulldogs. I think there is a better way than that. And if we have not learned that lesson out of this war, if that lesson has not come to humanity out of all the sorrow and suffering of this conflict, then the war was indeed in vain, we have lost the war, and the world is much further back than I thought it was.

Of all the acts of folly that any Congress, it seems to me, has ever committed, now they come forward with the supreme and crowning folly of them all. If we mean to fight Great Britain, then, gentlemen, choose intelligently and knowingly. If we mean war, then let us understand it at the beginning, for that is what it means in the end, and let us prepare, let us get ready. Let us get ready upon the land as well as upon the sea. Let us put aside this talk about universal disarmament. Let us admit that we have lost the war; that we have come out of it worse off than we went into it; and that the sole result of it is a monstrous burden of debt that shall rest upon the shoulders of generations yet unborn. Let us not go blunderingly and unwittingly unto a policy which will inevitably lead us into another awful conflict. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 12 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. QUIN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this bill, but when the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] makes the statement on this floor that he does, and in view of the fact that the papers report a Bolsheviki meeting down here at Poli's Theater on Sunday afternoon, where an honorable Member of this House made an address which might be construed as encouragement to that movement in this Republic, as a Representative of a great, bold, and honorable, patriotic constituency, I come before this House to resent such imputations upon the people of America.

In time of peace this naval program would indeed seem to be large; but the President of this Nation, in whom the American people have placed their faith, is across the briny deep, sitting at the peace table at Versailles, endeavoring to bring about a treaty that will make war improbable in the future. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] challenges in a veiled way the purposes of the President of our splendid Republic.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. I have not the time. Excuse me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. BAER. He is defending the policy of the President.

Mr. QUIN. The gentleman from Alabama said he thought that the war was won, but from the outline of this program it appeared to be lost. Why, the gentleman from Alabama can not have a true conception of what has happened. More than 2,000,000 of the brave boys of this Republic went across the sea through the submarine zone to beard the Hun in his den. Seven hundred thousand of those lads wearing the uniform of this Government went upon the high seas as a part of the Navy of our country. Nearly 2,000,000 more were training in the camps over here ready to go when the armistice was signed November 11. After they had bearded the Hun in his den and forced a well-organized army to go down to ignominious surrender, the great German fleet surrendered, not as the gentleman from Alabama says, to the British Navy, but it surrendered to the joint navies of America, Great Britain, and France. This Government, sir, had as much to do, through its splendid Navy on the high seas, in forcing the Hun fleet to surrender as England had. [Applause.]

Do not you ever believe that the American people would submit to a policy which would force them to sit supinely with fetters on their hands, and, as the gentleman suggests, permit Great Britain to be the bully of the world and tell us where we should trade. The American people would have more contempt for this Congress than they could express in a thousand years if we were guilty of such an ignominious, contemptible policy as that indicated by the gentleman from Alabama. [Applause and laughter.] I am no war man. I always believe in peace; but the President of this Nation, through his Secretary of the Navy, an honored gentleman from a Southern State, recommended this program, and when some of the committee did not believe in it, the President of this Republic, sitting at the peace table in France, cabled back here stating the necessity and the urgency of passing this program. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] think that the President of the United States would fool the American people or bunco anyone? The gentleman suggested that.

Mr. BAER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUIN. Excuse me.

The gentleman from Alabama ought to be ashamed to admit that the President of the United States would fool the American people, even if he believed it. My friends, the gentleman from Alabama says that the program suggested by the President has a provision in it that is a bunco game. He means that if a part of this program that is postponed for a year is not built, the American people will be fooled. Why, the gentleman has a misconception of what this committee has done. Would he want this $510,000,000 spent if the President of the United States is able to bring into effect and operation a peace treaty that would not warrant it? Would he object to the American Congress repealing that proposition and saving to the American people the $510,000,000? If the gentleman would read that bill he would see the effect and the wisdom of it. I want the gentleman from Alabama to understand that according to my conception there are many changes brought by this war. Here in this Republic in the last six years Congress has passed more beneficial legislation for the masses of the people, for the farmers, and especially the industrial laboring classes of this country, than all the Congresses in 50 years. Never in the history of our Government in any 50-year period was so much legislation passed for the laboring classes as was passed within the last six years, voted for by Republicans and Democrats alike. Not only that, but the wages of the industrial laboring classes of people in this country are higher than they ever were in any country in the world, higher than we ever dreamed they would be in our Nation.

Yet two people who have been associating in Russia with the red-handed Bolsheviki got up in a meeting at Poli's Theater within the shadow of the Capitol and brought here their nasty, contemptible, dirty doctrine of bolshevism—one female and one male. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] speaks of them as clean and honorable representatives of newspapers. These two people intend to dissatisfy our laboring people and turn them against the Government. My God, I hope that species, that pair, will be exterminated, not only in the United States but throughout the world. In that one utterance down there on that afternoon, when a Member of this Congress rose up in his box in that meeting and suggested that he was not afraid to go to jail——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. QUIN. That one suggestion, with the speeches that this man Williams made, and that female, will do more harm, will do more to spread the seeds of discontent and discord throughout this country than all other things combined, not even excepting the speech of the gentleman from Alabama. I want to get into this RECORD what people indorsed down there on Sunday afternoon. Do you know that the paper records that these "clean and honorable people" that the gentleman from Illinois spoke about said down there that afternoon that the ideals of these dirty, slimy bolsheviki in Russia were higher than the ideals of America. And when the gentleman from Illinois was making his remarks, the Washington Post states that the audience cried, "Hurrah for the Bolsheviki." The idea of such a thing as that happening in the Capital of the United States of America! It is an astounding thing. And some of the female contingent that picketed the White House took up a collection from the audience to pay for the rent of the theater that afternoon.

My God, where are we drifting to these days? The conduct and utterances and the real intent of these two propagandists that have been spending many months in Russia aiding the

Bolsheviki, speaking in a building that belongs to the people of the United States, which belongs to your constituents and mine, in that very building uttering this contemptible, slimy, red-handed doctrine on the holy Sabbath day! It is reported that the Russian Soviet, this Bolshevik movement that these people approve of by their conduct and by their utterances, have said that every woman who reaches the age of 18 years must register, and that any man, it makes no difference how many other women he may have, can take her for a wife. He has the first choice, and if the man does not take her she can choose him. And then the children of that union are to become the property of the State. And yet this creature in the address at Poli's Theater tells the American people that the Bolsheviki in Russia are superior to the people of America. You need not think that this sentiment is not growing in America. I have not heard a word of protest on this floor. I could not remain silent any longer when such a bold performance had been pulled off in a Government building on the holy Sabbath day. It is their purpose to waive the red flag. I can not believe that the gentleman from Illinois would indorse such principles or such language as those two speakers advocated, and I can not believe that he would indorse the sentiments uttered there by this female and this male speaker, who, it is said, are honorable people. I reckon they are, but this damnable, slimy, dirty doctrine that they are scattering about is what I object to. There is an organization going into every precinct in the Nation, with the intent and purpose of scattering that kind of doctrine to overthrow the Government. I believe in organized society. I believe in the institutions of our Republic. I love my country. Whenever any man throws down the American flag and picks up a red flag and talks against my Government, damn him; he is my enemy, and I am against him. [Laughter and applause.] I do not care who he is. [Applause.]

According to my conception, every public man in this country should put his shoulder to the wheel, stand by the organized Government, protect our Constitution, although the president of the Labor Federation of this Republic has given out in pamphlet form that we shall be no longer ruled by courts.

Where are we drifting to if we are going to permit organizations that we have protected by legislation to overthrow the courts? And I want you to understand that I voted to exempt them from coming under the antitrust legislation; we have given them every possible liberty by legislation that could possibly be granted, and yet they come along, through their leaders and such meetings as at Poli's Theater, and propose to tear down the Government. The stability of this great Republic rests on the integrity and patriotism of the people, it rests on the Constitution of this Government and organized society. The Constitution and the courts stand as the bulwark to protect the rights, the property, and the liberties of the people. The boys who bared their breasts to the bullets of the enemy in France, Belgium, and Italy, as well as those on the seas and in the camps, will stand up against this slimy crowd of Bolsheviki who would tear down our Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I did not ask for time to discuss this bill that is now before the House. I want to make a short statement about another matter which came to my attention. Within the last two or three weeks quite a number of gentlemen in the House have brought to the attention of Members of this body the fact that great numbers of soldiers' letters written by their parents and friends have been returned undelivered. I think quite probably the experience of the gentlemen who have taken the floor is the same experience of every other Member of Congress. Scarcely a day passes that I do not receive from one to half a dozen letters from fathers and mothers in my district stating that their sons are not receiving the letters written them and mailed to the address across the sea.

So far I have refrained from saying anything about that situation, but a few days ago I received a letter from an old mother in my district, telling me a story that I feel it is my duty to state to this House. This mother wrote me imploring my help, making the statement that she had written two letters to her son in France, both of which were returned having written across the envelope in black letters the words "Deserter. Return to sender." I do not know what could happen to any mother that would be more cruel than to have a letter returned to her through the mail, having written on the back of the envelope by somebody, presumably some officer in the Army, the fact that her son was a deserter. Happily this mother had received a letter from her son about the time that this letter was returned to her to the effect that he was ill in a hospital. I wanted to make absolutely sure of the matter before I made any statement on the floor of the House, so I cabled to the commanding officer of this boy's regiment, addressing my cablegram just as this mother had addressed her letter to her son. I want to read to the committee this letter that I received from the mother, and then I want to read the cablegram that I sent the commanding officer and his reply. The letter that I received from the mother is as follows:

ANDERSON, IND., January 7, 1919.

HON. A. H. VESTAL,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed you will find a letter of mine written to my son in overseas service, which was returned to me with the following inscribed on the envelope: "Deserter. Return to sender." This being the second time my letters were returned to me with the same inscription on the envelope, I decided to appeal to you for an investigation of the case if within your power. While these letters were being returned to me my son has been in active service and is now in the army of occupation, the last letter received from him under date of December 10, 1918, stating that he was in a hospital at Treves, Germany. Although I am aware that this assertion is not true, according to his letters, out of justice to me, his mother, I feel as though an explanation is due, and an effort made to stop mail returning to me with such an inscription on the envelope.

You will find inclosed an addressed envelope, and, thanking you beforehand for any information you can forward me in regard to this, I am,

Respectfully, MRS. JACKSON STINSON.

P. S.—My son's present address is, Pvt. Ralph J. Stinson, Company M, Ninth Infantry, American Expeditionary Forces.

She sent to me the letter as it was, with the inscription on the back of the envelope. I immediately sent a cablegram to his commanding officer, as follows:

[Cablegram.]

JANUARY 11, 1919.

COMMANDER COMPANY M, NINTH INFANTRY,
American Expeditionary Forces:

Wire conditions Pvt. Ralph J. Stinson.

ALBERT H. VESTAL,
Member of Congress.

Within about 10 days I received the following cablegram:

[Cablegram.]

HEADQUARTERS SECOND DIVISION,
January 20, 1919.

ALBERT H. VESTAL,
Member of Congress, Washington:

Pvt. Ralph J. Stinson evacuated hospital December 5. Sickness. Not serious.

A. P. TURKMAN,
Captain, Ninth Infantry.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the date of that cablegram?

Mr. VESTAL. His cablegram to me was dated January 20, and mine to him was dated January 11.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Was the date of the inscription of the letter prior to that?

Mr. VESTAL. Oh, yes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What is the date?

Mr. VESTAL. There is no date on the letter showing when the inscription was placed on the envelope, but this letter was sent to the young man in September, 1918. I can not understand why it is that a letter addressed as this letter is addressed to this soldier should not be delivered to the soldier but should be returned to the mother, when a cablegram sent by me to the commanding officer of the same regiment finds the boy sick in a hospital.

It at least shows incompetency. I do not know what the remedy may be, but I feel in justice to this soldier who has gone across the seas to fight for the honor of the flag and in justice to this old gray-haired mother, whom I know very well, sitting back at home anxiously waiting for the return of her boy, that some attention should be given to it. It seems to me that if any officer addressed the envelope as this envelope has been addressed and returned, that officer ought to be court-martialed. I care not whether he be an officer or a mail orderly. Something should be done. I called this to the attention of the House and the country because I feel I ought to do it in justice to the soldier himself and in justice to his mother.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman from Tennessee about continuing this session any longer. Several Members on this side have handed me in their names and indicated that they would like to say something before we go into the discussion of the bill under the five-minute rule, and yet many of them have said they have been here since 11 o'clock, and they feel pretty tired. The gentleman knows that Members of the House are not errand boys; they are real, live Members of Congress, and they have said they do not want to talk to-night, being tired, having been here since 11 o'clock this morning. We met at 11 o'clock and I think we have gotten along pretty well, and it is now 6. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's program and would like to get through as fast as we can.

Mr. PADGETT. I will say to the gentleman I was in hopes we might run a little later to-night, because I had agreed with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], on account of arrangements that he had made for a Republican conference to-morrow afternoon at 5, that I would move to rise at 5 to-morrow afternoon and adjourn so as to give way to the conference. For that reason I was hoping we could run a little longer to-night so as to even up.

Mr. BUTLER. Well, this is a very ungracious job and I do not want any more of it. Members of Congress are not only human beings but they are individuals who amount to something. If they were but hired boys and they had time we could say, "Very well now, make your speech or you will not make it at all." But here gentlemen say that they do not want to speak until to-morrow, and I am not saying this for the purpose, my friend, of continuing unduly the discussion of this bill, but I desire to facilitate its passage as much as I can, yet I have put upon me the responsibility of allotting this time, and these gentlemen do not seem inclined to make their speeches to-night. Of course, if the committee proposes to sit they will have to speak or lose out. Now, I do not feel that way, and if gentlemen do not want to make——

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think we ought to delay this bill at this stage very long to let somebody get ready to speak?

Mr. BUTLER. Why, I do not think we ought to have an extraordinary session.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you think we ought to wait until somebody gets ready to speak?

Mr. LITTLE. There seems to be a good deal of objection about gentlemen having time to-morrow. I have been here all day listening to people talk who have been talking ever since I have been here, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania can eliminate me. As far as I am concerned I will take my medicine and they can take theirs.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how the time stands, respectively, between the two sides?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has used 3 hours and the gentleman from Tennessee 2 hours and 45 minutes.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is only 15 minutes difference.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee or the gentleman from Pennsylvania have a suggestion to make?

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I want to be as agreeable as I can in respect to time——

Mr. BUTLER. I want to say the gentleman is always not only agreeable but in every way he is accommodating, but I am not willing with this list before me to close general debate.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not understand that the gentleman from Tennessee asks to close general debate.

Mr. PADGETT. I was wondering if we can not reach an agreement to allow them a little time under the five-minute rule and begin the reading.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I think the gentleman has my name upon his list for some time in general debate?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman very frankly I would be perfectly willing if he would eliminate my name from his list.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. We are trying to reach an understanding, if the Chair will indulge us for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well.

Mr. PADGETT. It was suggested, I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that we might begin reading and give those gentlemen some time under the five-minute rule. How would that do?

Mr. BUTLER. It will take just as much time. They want to make their speeches, of course. You can shut them off under the five-minute rule. The committee can not close the general debate if there is anybody who wishes to talk. But if the House sees fit to shut these gentlemen off, all right. I do not want to do it, and I will not do that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is to continue the debate.

Mr. BUTLER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that there is no quorum present.

Mr. PADGETT. Instead of doing that I move that the committee do now rise. There are other matters we want to dispose of.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WINGO, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15539, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SLAYDEN, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for two days on account of business.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 289. Joint resolution for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HOLLINGSWORTH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies, papers in the case of Winfield H. Handley (H. R. 19260, 64th Cong., and H. R. 4808, 65th Cong.), no adverse report having been made thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with, and that we may proceed with this bill to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday to-morrow, so that the House may proceed with this naval bill.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I think the Republican floor leader had some conversation with the gentleman about it. Was it agreeable to him?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday. We have an important measure on the Wednesday calendar from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It will be the only opportunity to pass it during the session of Congress without a special rule.

Mr. STAFFORD. The call does not rest with that committee.

Mr. AUSTIN. The call is with the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. It has but one bill, the Committee on Printing has not any, and then the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will come in.

Mr. PADGETT. I can move that in the morning. I do not have to do that now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. I object.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock a. m. to-morrow. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, February 5, 1919, at 11 o'clock a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the president of the Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., transmitting report of the Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co. for the year ended December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1758); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the president of the Washington Interurban Railroad Co., transmitting report of the Washington Interurban Railroad Co. for the year ended December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1759); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the president of the City & Suburban Railway of Washington, transmitting report of the City & Suburban Railway of Washington for the year ended December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1760); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., transmitting report of the Potomac Electric Power Co. for the year ended December 31, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1761); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Assistant Secretary of Labor, submitting a deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Bureau of Immigration for refund of lead tax, and a clause of legislation authorizing the payment of a bill for advertising (H. Doc. No. 1762); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Chairman of the United States Shipping Board, submitting a substitute estimate of appropriation required by the United States Shipping Board for the fiscal year 1920, in lieu of estimate heretofore submitted (H. Doc. No. 1763); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

7. A letter from the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting fifth annual report of the Federal Reserve Board covering operations for the year 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1764); to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SLAYDEN, from the Committee on the Library, to which was referred the resolution (S. J. Res. 202) requesting the Commission of Fine Arts to submit to the Congress certain suggestions, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1030), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 5, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek from Thee that conscious power that comes with a clear vision, with a clean conscience, with a devoted and consecrated spirit to the ideal born out of Thy word. Grant to lead us to-day in the discharge of our duties. May we ever keep in mind the justice and righteousness and peace that Thou hast made known and which is Thy will concerning man. We ask it, for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Monday, February 3, 1919, when, on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

STATIONERY FOR DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR (S. DOC. NO. 379).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $41,000 for stationery, Department of the Interior, for the fiscal year 1919, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS (S. DOC. NO. 377).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Librarian of Congress submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $1,371.37 required to meet the increased cost of envelopes furnished the Library of Congress, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

BUREAU OF WAR RISK INSURANCE (S. DOC. NO. 378).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriation in the sum of $9,220,000 required by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for the fiscal year 1919, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the Acting Secretary of State (S. Doc. No. 375), the Secretary of the Interior (S. Doc. No. 374), and the Secretary of Commerce (S. Doc. No. 376), transmitting in response to a resolution of December 23, 1918, a list showing the number of civil employees in their respective departments on January 29 and the number discharged during the previous two weeks, which were ordered to lie on the table.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Michigan ratifying the proposed prohibition amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which was ordered to be placed on the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15462) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 289) for the appointment of four members of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PROPOSED WATER-POWER LEGISLATION.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of New York, petitioning Congress for the enactment of the water-power bill now in conference between the two Houses.

This measure is of vital importance to the State of New York. It will afford an opportunity for a more effectual utilization of the water power at Niagara Falls, where already vast sums of money have been invested in anticipation of this legislation, and where additional power can be created, thereby saving a vast quantity of coal, cheapening production, and tending materially to the employment of labor.

The development of the upper Hudson River is also a subject of great concern to the people of New York.

It is proposed by one of the Nation's largest industries, when this bill becomes a law, to establish a great manufacturing plant at Green Island, above the city of Troy, where 25,000 men will be employed.

It is expected that the electricity generated at this point, through the damming of the river, and the tremendous power through the large volume of water coming from the upper reaches of the Hudson and the Mohawk will forever assure an uninterrupted power at a reasonable cost, not only for manufacturing plants in the immediate neighborhood but for the railroads and illuminating systems in that entire section of the State.

Let me assure the Senate conferees that there is no measure pending in this Congress of more immediate necessity.

We are constantly being asked to appropriate money to relieve possible business depression and assure the employment of labor. This bill will not only make possible the use of an almost unlimited natural resource and assure thereby an income to the country, but in addition, and what for the moment is more important, it will move the wheels of industry and employ thousands of men who are to-day walking the streets searching employment.

Let me urge again an early agreement on this very important question.

Mr. President, I send the petition to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
IN SENATE,
Albany, January 27, 1919.

Whereas a bill entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of the dams across navigable waters,'" approved June 21, 1906, as amended by the act approved June 23, 1910, and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the uses of the interstate and foreign commerce, passed the Senate December 14, 1917, and the House of Representatives September 5, 1918; and

Whereas Hon. JOHN K. SHIELDS, and Hon. JOHN H. BANKHEAD, Hon. HENRY L. MYERS, Hon. KEY PITTMAN, Hon. KNUTE NELSON, and Hon. REED SMOOT, from the Senate, and Hon. THETUS W. SIMS, Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Hon. ASBURY F. LEVER, Hon. JOHN J. ESCH, Hon. WILLIAM L. LA FOLLETTE, and Hon. GILBERT N. HAUGEN, from the House of Representatives, have been appointed to confer and agree upon the terms of said bill; and

Whereas the water powers of the State are urgently needed for the promotion of industry:

Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Legislature of the State of New York earnestly request our Representatives in Congress and the conferees named to do all in their power to stimulate action on said bill, to the end that it may be acted upon favorably, providing, however, that the same does not in any way diminish or impair the rights of the State of New York in the ownership and control of such navigable waters.

Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be forthwith transmitted to the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, our Representatives in Senate and in the House, as well as the conferees named above.

By order of the senate:

ERNEST A. FAY, Clerk.

In assembly, January 30, 1919. Concurred in without amendment.

By order of the assembly:

FRED W. HAMMOND, Clerk.

Indorsed: Filed January 30, 1919.

FRANCIS M. HUGO,
Secretary of State.

STATE OF NEW YORK,
Office of the secretary of state, ss:

I have compared the preceding copy of resolution relative to regulating the construction of the dams across navigable waters and to provide for the improvement and development of waterways for the use of the interstate and foreign commerce with the original resolution on file in this office, and do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole thereof.

Given under my hand and the seal of office of the secretary of state, at the city of Albany, this 30th day of January, in the year one thousand nine hundred and nineteen.

[SEAL.]

C. W. TAFT,
Second Deputy Secretary of State.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON. I present a resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and properly referred.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution of the senate in relation to the Chippewa Indian tribal funds in hands of Federal Government.

Whereas the great majority of the people of Chippewa Indian blood residing in the State of Minnesota are citizens of said State and perform all the obligations imposed by the State upon all other citizens; and

Whereas the great majority of the Chippewa people in the State of Minnesota are, in the opinion of the Senate of Minnesota, capable of managing and controlling their property interests; and

Whereas the Government of the United States, through its Bureau of Indian Affairs, has maintained for a number of years, and is now maintaining, a large force of agents and employees in connection with the administration of said trust at a very considerable expense, which expense is being paid out of the trust funds of said Indians; and

Whereas we are of the opinion that the further maintenance of this force of agents and employees at the expense of said trust fund has become unnecessary: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Minnesota, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to discontinue the use of said trust fund for the purposes hereinbefore mentioned, and that it be further requested to enact such legislation as will enable said Chippewa people to secure a final settlement of their tribal affairs with the United States Government, due regard being had for the well-being of said Indians; be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States from the State of Minnesota be requested to assist in carrying out the purposes for which this resolution was designed; be it further

Resolved, That a duly authenticated copy of this resolution be transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, that another be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, and that copies be sent to each Member of the Senate and House of Representatives from the State of Minnesota, and that as so amended the same do pass.

Mr. KIRBY. I present a memorial protesting against the passage of House bill 13400, giving certain riparian claimants the right to purchase certain public lands in Arkansas. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relating to a Federal constitutional amendment for woman suffrage, adopted on the 16th day of January, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Joint resolution (J. Res. No. 4, A) relating to a Federal constitutional amendment for woman's suffrage.
